The above is the name given to the 'teen-age boys who are "doing their bit" on the farms of Ontario. The Ontario Government has arranged for bronze badges to be given to all boys who are engaged in farm work. Five Y. M. C. A. men have been appointed to keep in touch with the boys throughout Ontario. Mr. H. W. Kingsley who is responsible for Eastern Ontario, reports that the farmers who have High School boys working for them are well satisfied and that the boys on the whole are enjoying their work.

A plan has been worked out to interest the christian forces of Ontario in the "Boy Conservation Movement" as well as stimulating activity for increased production.

On Wednesday, June 20th, at 8 p.m., a meeting will be held in the Town Hall Stirling, when the "Farm Service Corps" badges will be presented. All farm boys are invited to attend as well as their employers and those interested in the boy life of the community. Another meeting will be held in the Fall when certificates signed by the Premier will be presented to those boys whose services during the summer have been satisfactory.

The ministers of the local churches are closely in touch with the efforts now

Endurance.

The pilgrim fathers were undoubtedly heroic men, facing, as they did, with dauntless courage, fire, frost, famine and the red menace of Indian ruthlessness. But the pilgrim mothers were more heroic still, for they endured also all these things and had in addition to stand the pilgrim fathers as well—Life.

Fire Destroys Box Factory About 9 o'clock last night the citizens of the village were alarmed by the ringing of the fire bell. It was soon discovered the Box Factory was on fire. One of Mr. Marshall's daughters saw the blaze and at once rang in an alarm. The firemen were quickly on the scene, but unfortunately one of the fires in the big engine gave way, however the small hand engine did heroic work and during the use of it McKee's coal sheds were saved, which were filled with boxes of all descriptions, and located only about 15 feet from the box factory at east end. The fire is supposed to have started in the boiler room at west end of the building and was soon a mass of flames and nothing could be saved.

Great praise is due the workers at the fire especially "our village girls" who worked like heroes carrying water from the tank to the engine. We understand the factory will be rebuilt at once.

The proclamation required by the several statutes passed at the last session of the Provincial Legislature, has just been published in the Ontario Gazette bringing into force and effect the act to amend The Ontario Voters' Lists Act, The Ontario Franchise Act, 1917, and the Election Law Amendment Act, 1917. This is very important and all clerks of municipalities will be required to prepare their voters' lists under these acts.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

"I am sorry," she says, resignedly. "But come into breakfast. In all our wanderings there has never been a ham and butter breakfast, and—ah, I am so hungry!"

He puts his arm round her waist, and kisses her. "Is this the same pale-faced young lady who used to turn with indifference from all the delicacies of a Parisian chef, and who caused a great doctor to look grave?" he says, with a gentle banter.

"Sometimes I think it is not," she says. "No, it is the same Signa who munched biscuits and drank coffee without milk out of a tin cup in the island of St. Clare."

"Would to heaven we were there now!" he says, unwittingly. "Without seeing Florence," she exclaims, innocently. "But do you really? Why not go back, Hector? Do you think I should mind? It is all one to me so that you are by my side. Dear old Northwell! Yes, I could give up Florence without a sigh."

"Could you?" he says, almost eagerly; then he shakes his head and smiles. "No, we must take the cure. Let me see, which is our route?"

"Here is the map," she says, jumping up and unfolding it, and leaning over his shoulder. "It is always a mystery to me how you find our way by it. It all looks one mass of lines and caterpillars. I suppose there are not really so many mountains as they put in!"

"You think they are thrown in for effect," he says, laughing. "Hem!" and his face grows grave. "What's the matter?" she asks. "Point out the road for me."

He takes up a fork and traces the thin, dark line on the map. "It's our friend the torrent, again," he says, knitting his brows. "It stopped us yesterday, and will hinder us again to-day. We must go round there, instead of straight forward, and—I'm afraid we shall find no inn that we could stop at under thirty miles."

"Oh, the poor horses!"

At this moment Saunders' heavy British knock is heard at the door. He comes in quietly and respectfully, but looking rather grave.

"Well," asks Lord Delamere. "I beg your pardon, my lord, but it is a very long journey."

A quick look of apprehension comes into Lord Delamere's eyes. "Yes, why?"

"Then I am afraid the chestnut won't be able to do it, my lord."

With an exclamation that sounds strangely in the ears of Signa and the man, with whom Lord Delamere's marked self-possession is a matter of course, Hector strikes the table.

"We must leave here to-day; it—it is imperative."

"Yes, my lord," assents Saunders, quietly; "that I must make some arrangements. Can we break the journey, my lord, a matter of twelve or fifteen miles?"

"The journey is twenty-five, and must be done in the day," replies Hector, sternly. "If our horses cannot do it, we must get others."

Saunders looked rather doubtful. "There is only one horse in the place; not a bad animal, take him all round, but he won't run in double harness. I've tried him already, my lord."

Lord Delamere gets up, crushing the map together with his hand, and stands with thoughtful brow. "Surely there are horses to be had; borrow or buy them anything; but get them."

"No, my lord," says Saunders, respectfully, but firmly. "Knowing that your lordship wanted to get on, I made inquiries; there is only one horse, and we must have two for the carriage."

"Yes, yes," assents Lord Delamere, impatiently. "Is there nothing you can suggest? Call the landlord."

The landlord comes in with an elaborate bow to milord and miladi, but he does not help the situation much. The one horse is at milord's service; if there were a dozen horses they should be considered milord's, but there is but one; and he stretches out his hand.

"How soon can you get a couple?" demands Lord Delamere, irritably. "The landlord ponders. The nearest village lies ten miles back. A man could obtain a pair from there—the expense would be great."

Lord Delamere makes an impatient gesture, and paces the room for a moment. To her this eagerness to leave this pretty little Tuscan village is inexplicable. Not for a moment does her memory connect its beautiful name with the story in Laura Derwent's letter; the only reason that occurs to her is that her restless desire to push on is that he may spare her some trifling inconvenience, and she is about to speak and implore him to remain, when he looks up with an air of relief.

"The chestnut?" he says to Saunders. "It is nothing serious. You must take the day half-way. It is twelve miles only, they will have nothing to drag, and rest her for an hour or two. We could follow with the hired pair and the carriage, and so make Florence to-night."

Saunders' face clears and he nods. "I never thought of that, my lord," he says, with admiration in his tone. "Certainly, Oh, yes, that's all she wants—to go the twelve miles easy, and rest a bit. I'd take her forty miles that way."

Hector turns to the landlord promptly. "Dispatch a man for the pair you speak of without loss of time. Do not let him come away without them—you understand?" and he puts a ten-pound Bank of England note on the table. "You start at once, Saunders, with our own horses, you can not mistake the road, it is as straight as a die, and for Florence if you are in doubt. You will arrive at a large inn, a small place, not so large as this. You know the kind. It is called the Eagle, eh, landlord?"

"Milord is right."

"You will know it by the painted sign in case there should be no inn there; it is a poor little place—taken some bag with you. Wait there till we come. I calculate for two hours rest for the chestnut."

"Plenty, my lord, plenty," said Saunders, cheerfully.

The landlord, taking up the note with a reverent air, you want to travel on the Continent to understand the value of a Bank of England note or an English sovereign—how and follows him out.

"What a mind!" he exclaims, elevating his eyebrows, and jerking his hand backward.

Saunders says: "What, my governor? Rather! You can put him in a hole that he can't find his way out of, if there is a way. I say, landlord, if you were to get a few more like him to push his way, and stop, the Mountain Goat would make a fine thing of it!"

"Truly, yes!" assents the landlord, with a sigh, as he hurries on.

With the same suppressed eagerness Lord Delamere comes out and watches Saunders harness the horses, and even assists with his own hands; and it is not until they have disappeared from view that he turns and re-enters the inn.

"Well, we shall have time to do the lions, at any rate," says Signa. "Let us go at once, Hector."

And she takes up her hat—a deer-stalker that has proved eminently serviceable during the trip. Reluctantly, with a forced smile, he puts her light cloak round her, and they go out.

The little village street, with its half dozen houses scattered irregularly on either side, is bathed in sunlight; a few peasant women, standing gossiping at their doors, cease their musical chatter to stare after the two strangers, and then utter swift words of admiration of the young English miladi.

A venerable priest, with white hair and that profound expression of serenity and peacefulness peculiar to his class, comes slowly down the street from the chapel on the hill, and with a smile raises his clerical hat in paternal greeting. Signa flushes with innocent pleasure and bows, and Hector lifts his hat in acknowledgment.

"What a beautiful place," she exclaims, almost beneath her breath. "I cannot fancy anyone being unhappy here, and yet I suppose they hear the fluttering of the wings of the angel of grief sometimes."

He does not reply; with every step they take he grows more silent and moody; and once he stops and takes off his hat, as if to cool his brow.

"The place is stifling," he says, with a sigh. Signa looks up at him quickly. "Let us go back," she says at once. "No, no," he says, with an effort. "There is the chapel—you must see that. It will be cooler there," and he quickens his pace.

They ascend the green slope and reach the chapel door; it is wide open for in Tuscany, as in Italy throughout, religion is something more than a one-day-in-the-week affair, and the weary peasant or troubled housewife can enter the doors at any hour and find peace and consolation.

With the reverend spirit which always falls upon Signa when she enters a house of prayer, she goes in softly, and stands for a moment looking into the interior, made peacefully shady by the old painted windows. Coming out of the sun-glare into the dim, religious light, Signa can scarcely discern anything but the dark outlines of the carved pulpit and the great window over the altar. She pauses with

FLEET FOOT for Summer Wear at Work and Play

Don't work in heavy, leather boots this summer. Wear "Fleet Foot" Shoes. They are honest and sturdy enough to stand the farm work.

Easy and comfortable—light—sensible—and so much cheaper than leather.

When you go out in the evening, wear "Fleet Foot" White Shoes. There are plenty of different styles and shapes, for every occasion, day as well as evening—and they are far less expensive than leather boots.

Next time you go to town, be sure to see the "Fleet Foot" Shoes for summer wear.

lent head—never in her life has she been guilty of regarding the cathedrals and chapels of the continent as show places to be entered noisily and stared at through an opera glass; and with the feeling of awe which always possesses her on the threshold of a sacred edifice, she stands silent and motionless.

Hector looks in thoughtfully, hesitates a moment, then sinks on the stone seat in the porch. So they remain until suddenly, yet not abruptly, the solemn tones of the organ break the intense silence. It is the organist practising for the coming harvest festival. With bowed head and hushed footsteps, Signa goes further into the chapel, and stands listening reverently. There is something in fitfully sad and mournful in the strains of music, and as she listens a strange feeling comes over her, that makes the tears well into her eyes.

She waits until the music has ceased, and then turns to go out, feeling awed and soul-stirred. As she does so a young girl who, unseen by her, has been close beside her, crosses her path and goes slowly out by a door at the other end of the chapel. As she passes she looks up, without the slightest trace of curiosity, with the deepest abstraction, at the bright, lovely face, and Signa and she exchange glances. The girl's face is a beautiful one; but it is not the beauty which strikes Signa. It is the sad and what would express which shines in the dark eyes. For a moment only she looks at her, then, as reverently and softly as she had entered, she goes out and rejoins Hector.

He looks up and starts as he sees the tears in her eyes. "Well," he says. "She sinks down beside him. "Why did you not come in, dear?" she says, and her voice is like the sweet tones of the organ. "It is a beautiful little chapel! Oh! I cannot understand how some of the tourists can stroll around such a place in the cold-hearted, irrelevant way they do. Often and often it has made me unhappy to see them."

"They are not angels of goodness like my darling," he says, gently. "Shall we go now? Do you know that you have been in there over half an hour?"

"Have I! I should have stayed until the organ ceased, though it had been an hour. Are you so hot still?"

"No," he says. "Let us go back." They go back to the inn; the women are still gossiping at their doors, a group of girls are chattering and laughing at the fountain in the middle of the street. It is for all the world like a scene from an opera, and Signa takes it all in with keen enjoyment; but Hector just glances around him and then lapses into mood; self-communion only half concealed.

"I have some letters to write," says Signa, as she throws her hat down. "I want to tell Lady Rookwell about this place, and Laura—I wonder where she is, by the way? In London, perhaps. If I could paint, I should like to paint that chapel and the village street, women and all. But I must give them a word picture."

He stands at the table and looks down at the bright face with a thoughtful eye. "Why choose this village out of all we have seen?" he says. "Wait till you get to Florence; you will have something to write about then. Would to heaven that we were there!"

She looks up from her writing case. "Why are you in such a hurry, Hector? Is it on my account? If so, you need not be; I am perfectly happy."

He kisses her, stands for a moment watching her arrange her writing materials, then takes out his cigar case and goes to the door.

Signa writes a long letter to Lady Rookwell, and a shorter one to Aunt Podewell, enclosing an affectionate note for Archie, and so the morning glides away.

Suddenly she hears an exclamation, and looking up, sees the landlord, all effusive and apologetic bows. "Milord, I am sorry itself! But I am powerless! The horses have been sent two leagues distant and cannot be obtained until to-morrow!"

There is a hasty, impatient retort from Lord Delamere, a further apologetic explanation from the landlord, and Signa, throwing down her pen, goes out to find Hector leaning against the door with his extinguished cigar in his hand, and his brows knitted in a dark frown.

He turns with a forced laugh as she appears, and flings the dead cigar into the road. "Fate is against us!" he says, with affected resignation. "The only horse in all Tuscany, as it appears, cannot be got, and we are doomed to remain here another night."

"It is rather a pleasant doom," says Signa, cheerfully. "He looks at her, then glances at his watch.

"Pleasant," he echoes, with a laugh that has a hidden bitterness. "Yes," she says. "I must add a postscript, telling Lady Rookwell how the omnipotent Earl of Delamere, who carried all before him in Northwell, was brought to bay at Casalina."

He stares at her, then forces a smile. "Yes do so," he says, grimly; "tell them that not even I can fight against Fate."

"Fate in the shape of a scarcity of horses," she says, with a happy laugh. Her heart-heartheness awakens a faint response from him. "It is evident," he says, "that it is easier to get into Casalina than out of it."

It is the first time he has spoken the name of the village since last night, and he hesitates slightly, as if the name were distasteful to him.

The landlord glances from one to the other, then disappears, and presently a maid enters to lay the cloth. Signa looks herself up in a window seat, and watches her with serene contentment, and the luncheon having made its appearance, is about to call Hector, when the clatter of horses' hoofs breaks the stillness. A moment after she hears the voice of the landlord in deep dialogue with another voice; Lord Delamere chimes in, and suddenly he enters with a piece of paper in his hand.

His face is pale and troubled, and utterly unlike its usual grave self-possession. "By heavens!" he exclaims, "this is too much!"

"What is, Hector?" she asks, springing up and coming to his side. "Don't be alarmed, my darling," he says, controlling himself. "There has been an accident. It is nothing serious, but Saunders has been thrown—at least, I imagine so—and lies at the little inn I spoke of, the Eagle, with a broken, or sprained, or strained leg, he does not say which; but he cannot move."

"Poor Saunders!" exclaims Signa. "Let me see his note. Poor fellow! And yet he thinks only of our convenience and the horses, is there any one there to look after him, Hector?"

He has put the question to himself already, and is afraid of the answer. "I do not know. Most probably not. What is to be done?"

"You must go to him," says Signa, quietly. "You will, won't you, Hector?"

He pauses in his pacing to and fro, and looks at her. "And leave you here alone?" he says, troubled. "Oh, me? Do not think of me," she says, instantly. "We must think of him only now. Poor Saunders; so faithful and devoted as he has been. You must go, Hector!"

He stands pale and hesitating—quite unlike his usual self. "I cannot leave you here alone!" he says. "It will be only for a few hours. You will come back, or I will follow. Hector, I am not afraid."

"Why should I be afraid? Of a certainty, no!" puts in the landlord. "Every care shall be taken of miladi."

"Of course!" says Signa, cheerfully. "I shall be quite safe—safe! What is there to harm me? Don't think of me, dear. That poor fellow may be lying there quite helpless, with no one to understand him. Oh, you must go, Hector!"

He stands motionless another moment, then muttering, "Fate is against us!" he goes out. He and the one horse in between them saddle the one horse in Casalina, then he comes back to Signa. "I shall ride back on one of our own horses, darling," he says, holding her in his arms, "and shall not be long—at least, I hope not! Some will genius has taken possession of us! By heaven, for half a word I would not leave you even now."

"I shall not speak that half word, dear," she whispers. "I am not afraid to be left alone a little while. Why should I be? We should never forgive ourselves if we left poor Saunders for a moment longer than we could help! It would be desertion. Think, if we were in his plight, how he would fly to us!"

"Saunders! Saunders! It is of you I am thinking!" he says, with wild bitterness. "And I have no thought but for you and him," she says, gently. "Do I not know how you would feel if you did not go? Good bye, Hector, my own darling!"

He strains her to him, almost wildly, then, with a suppressed groan, flings himself into the saddle and gallops up the street.

Power of a River.

There are more spindles turned in the mills of Lawrence by the power of the Merrimack river than are turned by any other river in the world. Four hundred acres of mills, employing 40,000 hands, put out 2,000,000 tons of woven fabric each year—Exchange.

THIN-BLOODED
MEN AND WOMEN

Need the Rich, Red Blood Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Actually Make.

Thin-blooded people do not remain so from choice but from indifference, in some cases from despair. People who are pale, languid, with palpitation of the heart, some difficulty in breathing and a tendency to be easily tired are suffering from thin blood. They need only the resolution to take the right treatment and stick to it until cured, the remedy that can be relied upon is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. With every dose they make new blood, and new blood means health and strength. The red cheeks, good appetite, increased weight and strength that follow the use of these pills prove their great value to thin-blooded people. Here is an example: Mrs. J. McDonald, Jun., Hay, Ont., says: "I honestly believe Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved my life. Some years ago I had anæmia, and I did not realize the seriousness of the trouble I soon became a complete wreck. I got so weak I could hardly walk. I neither ate nor slept well, and could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. At times I had almost an unbearable pain in my back and could not get up in bed. I suffered almost constantly from a dull headache and when awaking I would stop to pick up anything I would get so dizzy that I would have to catch hold of something to keep from falling. I would heart would beat so fast that I would have a smothering sensation. My eyes were sunken and my hands and limbs would be swollen in the mornings. I tried several kinds of medicine with no benefit and my friends thought I would never recover. Then I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and before long could see and feel that they were helping me. I gladly continued the use of the pills until I was completely cured and I cannot say enough in their praise, and I strongly recommend them to all run down girls and women."

You can get these pills through any dealer in medicine, or by mail for $3.00 a box or six boxes for $25.00 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Making Amends.

A poor Turkish slater of Constant-nople, being at work upon the roof of a house, lost his footing and fell into the narrow street where a maid was making a wash. He killed by the concussion, while the slater escaped without material injury. A son of the deceased, named the slater to be arrested. The cad listened attentively and in the time he asked the slater what he had to say in his defense.

"Dispenser of justice," answered the accused, "it is even so, but heaven forbid that there should be evil in my heart. I am a poor man and know not how to make amends."

The son of the man who had been killed thereupon demanded the slater to be imprisoned until he had satisfied the accused.

The cad meditated a few moments and finally said, "It shall be so." Then to the slater he said, "The father of this young man stood when thou didst fall on him. And to the son he said, 'Go up on the roof and fall upon the culprit, and see how he will feel when he is struck by the father. Allah be praised!'"

FIGHTING GARDEN FOES

Destroy Them or They May Destroy Your Crop.

SPRAYING A READY REMEDY

In This Column the Amateur is introduced to insects and fungi so that he may know them by their first names.

(By S. C. JOHNSTON, Vegetable Specialist, Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Garden Foes.
Unfortunately the backyard vegetable grower has some difficulties to overcome. It will not be all pleasure and profit which he must look forward to because there are innumerable insects and fungus diseases which cause much worry and trouble and necessitate the use of extraordinary methods to prevent or control. Most of these troubles may be overcome by spraying the plants with remedies which can be secured from seed stores and other firms handling them.

The following is a list of the more common vegetables and the insects and fungi which attack them and the remedies or preventives.

ASPARAGUS. Beetles. Blue, black or yellowish colored, about one-half inch long, which appear early in May and feed on the young shoots. Keep the bed closely cut in the spring or allow poultry to run through it. After cutting season is over, spray with arsenate of lead. Encourage the lady bird beetle which destroys many of these insects.

ANTRACNOSIS or Pod Spots. Brown or reddish spots on the foliage and pods. Found on low damp ground. Plant only seeds which have no signs of the disease. Pull up and burn diseased plants as they appear.

CABBAGE, CAULIFLOWER, AND BRUSSELS SPROUTS. Root Maggot.

A small whitish colored maggot one-quarter of an inch long. Looks something like a grain of wheat, found just below the surface of the ground either close to or on the roots. They eat the roots, causing the plant to drop over. Apply a solution of corrosive sublimate one-half ounce dissolved in five gallons of water, at the rate of half a teaspoonful over each plant once a week for five weeks after they are set out, commencing three or four days after planting.

Cut Worms and White Grubs. Greyish white grubs which work at the surface of the soil cutting off the plants. They may be trapped by spreading a mixture of poison bran over the surface of the soil close to the plants. A pail of bran with sufficient paris green to highly color it should be moistened with molasses until it crumbles readily in the hand. This moisture should be kept on the ground during the early part of the season.

Worm. A small greenish worm three-quarters of an inch long, which appears quite early in the season. Dust with pyrethrum or heliothrine powder when the plants have headed, or dust with a teaspoonful of paris green mixed with three tablespoonful of flour when young. A piece of burflap may be used for this purpose or an empty can with holes punched in the bottom.

Aphis. Also called louse. Small greyish insects which multiply rapidly. They may appear at any time in the season. Spray forcibly with a solution made from steeping one pound of tobacco refuse in one gallon of water. This solution may be used on all plants on which Aphis are found.

CHEELEY. Blight. Black spots appear on the foliage followed by wilting of the plant and a soft rot on the stock. Spray each week with a mixture of Bordeaux mixture covering the entire plant.

CUCUMBER. Striped Beetle. Black and yellow striped beetle which feeds ravenously on the tender leaves of the plant in the very early stage of growth. Dust heavily with white wash of lime-sulphur.

Squash Bug. Dark brown beetle which sucks the juice from the plant. Hand pick and destroy. Found on the leaves.

MELANS. Cucumber insects usually attack and may be destroyed as given above.

ONION. Onion Maggot. A white maggot similar to the cabbage root maggot. No effective means of control. Spread charcoal over the ground or try the corrosive sublimate solution as recommended above.

Blight. A violet color, patches appearing on the leaf of the onion. Some advise spraying with Bordeaux mixture from the time the onion plant is three inches high.

POTATO. Colorado Beetle or Potato Bug. Dust with paris green when the dew is still on the plant, or place a teaspoonful in a watering can of water and pour over the plant. If possible have the plant dusted with paris green before the buds appear.

Scab. Easily recognized by characteristic roughness of the skin. Immerse the uncut tuber just before planting in a solution of two fluid ounces of formalin with two gallons of water. Dry out, and plant.

Blight. Brown spots distributed over the leafy surface, usually found in July. If they are not prevented from growing, the whole plant will be destroyed. Spray once a week for four or five weeks with Bordeaux mixture from July 1st.

RADISH. Root Maggot. Use the same remedies as given for cabbage and onion maggot.

TOMATO. Tomato Worm or Horn Blower. A large worm which rapidly defoliate the plant. Hand pick and destroy.

Blight. Black spots appearing on the leaves which spread rapidly and cause the whole plant to die. Keep the plants growing vigorously.

Scandinavians May Enter War

THE Scandinavian situation is fast approaching a tragedy. Anyone who knows Scandinavia and its people must realize that the three little nations of Northern Europe may be dragged into the whirlpool of war at almost any moment.

But, after all, such a calamity would only be the second worst thing that could happen. The trouble is that war might avert the worst possible fate, famine, which now seems to stare the Scandinavian people in the face.

Famine is a strong word, but the whole economic structure of Scandinavia is so interwoven with the commerce of other countries, already in the war, that a general starvation seems more than likely unless the U-boat puzzle is solved. Sweden is now almost without bread, and Norway and Denmark are little better off. Practically no grain has been imported into Sweden since the Russian revolution. Throughout the war Russia has had plenty of grain, and under the old regime Sweden was able to purchase large quantities of breadstuffs at Riga. The Swedes returned this favor by reselling grain to Germany, or its equivalent in wheat, barley, and rye to keep Sweden supplied and help materially in provisioning Germany, although Russian peasants did not have enough to eat, and the Russian soldiers were starving in their trenches.

Since the revolution, brought about not by mismanagement of the war, of which the people know little or nothing, but by hunger among the civilian population, Russia's crippled and inadequate transportation system has been devoted principally to the distribution of foodstuffs among the half-starved population of the country. But no grain has been shipped to the port of Riga or other Baltic ports for export.

With the granaries of Russia closed and Germany's U-boat campaign guided by a wily intelligence which the world outside the Central Powers will not understand, Sweden is reduced to desperate straits, for Sweden does not raise anywhere nearly enough varied foodstuffs to feed itself. It is well enough to look at Sweden's annual trade tables, and point to the enormous food materials exported from that country in normal times. If such figures meant anything at all now, Sweden could reserve stock, Sweden could not be starved. The country could live on meat and fish varied with the very limited amounts of grain raised in the southern part of the country. But Sweden is sold out. The Germans have taken over her livestock. The country has nothing much to submit to be bloated with security unless the country can import grain in large quantities. Denmark is in exactly the same position, depending on the Western World for provisions, which may be cut off whenever it pleases the peevish war lords in Berlin to do so.

Norway may scrape through on half rations, for that country can communicate with America by a northerly route between Iceland and the Faroes. German U-boats have circled the Faroes, sinking trawlers and threatening merchantmen and laying mines between Iceland and the Faroes. But it would hardly be practicable for Germany to patrol the enormous stretches of the North Sea except perhaps during the season when the route north of the Baltic Peninsula to Archangel is open to navigation.

The food situation in Scandinavia has forced the Swedish Government to send to America Mr. Lagercrantz, former Minister to Washington, and one of Sweden's ablest diplomats. It is not unlikely that Mr. Lagercrantz comes as a representative of all the Scandinavian countries, inasmuch as they have pooled their interests in the handling of international questions during the war. He goes to Washington to plead with President Wilson to save Scandinavia from starvation. President Wilson has asked Congress for power to declare an embargo on the shipment of foodstuffs to neutral countries adjoining Germany in order to prevent trade with the enemy. Mr. Lagercrantz will ask the President to use this power leniently, if it is granted.

But the fate of Scandinavia hangs not on generous diplomatic agreement. It depends on Anglo-American success in drowning the U-boat pest in its own element. The best traditions of German marksmanship and German diplomacy as practiced since the war began were maintained when the three Swedish vessels, loaded with grain and bound from an English port to Sweden, were sunk with loss of life.

An embargo will not be enforced, it can be predicted, and Germany will continue to sink Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish ships, killing innocent sailors, and the inevitable result will be that Scandinavian patience will be exhausted. Norway's patience is already at an end, and the temper of the Swedes is not nearly so sunny as that of their cousins across the mountain range. Even if they are numerically weak, the Scandinavians can muster a fine stock of night men, and there is a limit to their good nature. When the Scandinavians have been goaded long enough by murder of their brothers on the high seas and by hunger at home, they will fight back. They will enter the war without illusion. If they do enter, knowing that they have nothing to gain, knowing that their only reward will be the maintaining of their self-respect. It is not in the nature of a proud, physically able and independent people to sit still under blows and starve like slaves because it suits the scheme of a tyrant power to make them suffer.

The Art of Boiling Within.

It is a very great thing for us to do the very best we can do just where and as we are.—Balzac.

Why Sash Windows?

Our mode of life is based upon our theories. Our sash windows are probably the most irrational things in creation. They appear to have been first invented in Holland and brought over to England toward the close of the seventeenth century in place of the rational French windows. It must have been a curious person who invented the former, which are often dangerous owing to the loosening of the cords, while a sash is always pairing in between the two sashes. What their advantage is no one can understand. On the other hand, French windows, as well as being seen anywhere on the continent or in Egypt or elsewhere, may be closed to exclude either draft or noise. More over, seldom if ever do we have double windows such as are used throughout northern Europe.—London Science Progress.

Rapid Education.

In "John Barleycorn" Jack London tells how quickly he achieved his reputation as a writer. "Critics have complained about the swift education one of my characters, Martin Eden, achieved," says London. "In three years, from a sailor with a common school education, I made a successful writer of him. The critics say this is impossible. Yet I was Martin Eden. At the end of three working years, two of which were spent in high school and the university and one spent at writing, and all three in studying immensely and intensely, I was publishing stories in magazines, was correcting proofs of my first book, was selling sociological articles to magazines, had declined an associate editorship proffered me by telegram from New York City and was getting ready to marry."

Eskimo Candy.

Tallow is the Eskimo's candy. It is put up in bright red packages made out of the feet of a waterfowl. The women cut off the red feet of this bird, which is called the dovekie, draw out the bones and blow up the skin so as to make pouches, which they fill with reindeer tallow for their little folk. None of the food that the Eskimos eat seems very inviting to us, but they are extremely fond of it and are very apt to overeat. It is said by explorers who have gone into Greenland that it is no uncommon sight to see an Eskimo man who has eaten an enormous amount of the raw frozen flesh of the reindeer, seal or walrus lying on his back and eating blubber until he cannot move.

When Wild Winds Blow.

Most of us are apt to look on a storm as simply a strong wind blowing straight from one place to another. It is not so at all, for a storm wind always blows in a curve, and a storm is not really a wind, but a whole wheel of winds with curving spokes. These curving spokes represent the various winds, all blowing toward the hub. This hub is called the "eye" of the storm. It is the spot at which the barometer is lowest. On the rim of the wheel the barometer is high, and the nearer the hub the lower is the barometer. This wheel of winds is usually several hundred miles across.

The First Comedy.

The first recorded comedy was played at Athens B. C. 578, when Susarion and Dolon, the earliest traveling actors, performed a comedy of Susarion's composition on a movable stage mounted upon four wheels. The new form of play was so successful that the actors were rewarded by the grateful populace with a cask of wine and a basket of figs. Susarion belonged to Megaris, a state of ancient Greece, whose inhabitants were celebrated for their coarse humor and who in their villages during the evenings were wont to hold what they called a comedy, really which, in its impromptu acting, coupled with buffoonery, played a considerable part from this word we have our comedy.

Origin of the French Tricolor.

The origin of the French tricolor is usually explained as it is by Carlyle: "Women, too, are sewing cockades—not used of green, which being d'Artois color the Hotel de Ville has had to interfere in it, but of red and blue, our old Paris colors. These, once based on a ground of constitutional white, are the famed tricolor—which (if prophecy be not will go round the world." An other explanation, however, is that the tricolor combines the blue hood of St. Martin, which was borne on the standard of the ancient kings, the oriflamme (originally the banner of the abbey of St. Denis) and the white flag of the Bourbons. Others make it the shield of the Orleans family.

Havana.

Havana, or San Cristobal de la Habana, as it was originally named, was the last of seven cities founded in Cuba by the island's conqueror, the Adelantado Diego Velasquez, the date being July 25, 1515. Since that was twenty-three years after Columbus' discovery there cannot be many new world cities older than Havana, assuming that most of the other six in Cuba have since disappeared.

Famous Talkers.

The art of conversation was not always possessed by literary men. Coleridge and Macaulay were said to absorb so much time on an interesting subject that they were generally regarded as boro, whereas Robert Browning, with all his cumbersome poetry, was fascinating in his talk.

How He Hustles.

"Bluffem poses as a hustler, doesn't he?" "Well, yes; he's always energetic in reaching a conclusion that something must be done."—Boston Transcript.

Now It's The Brooms

There is a great scarcity of broom corn throughout the country, and its cost has increased tremendously. Formerly it could be bought for $60 per ton; now it is selling at $375, and cheap at that.

A carload used to represent an expense of $500, while at the present moment the cost is $2,500 to $3,000. The cheapest quotation of brooms obtainable is $7 per dozen, and this for the cheapest brooms.

Grocers used to retail them at 25c a piece. Handles, bindings and various other necessities for broom making have advanced on an average of 50 per cent.
It is becoming dearer to keep clean.
Soon we shall not be able to afford a good sweep. The Friday cleaning is doomed.

HYMNEAL

PAYNE-MOORE

A quiet but very impressive wedding was solemnized at St. John the Divine on Tuesday morning, when the Rector of the parish, the Reverend A. Bouchamp Payne, was married to Miss Marion Frances Moore, the second daughter of the Reverend and Mrs. B. F. Byers, of Stirling, Ont. Promptly at eight o'clock the organ commenced the strains of the well known hymn "The Voice That Breathed o'er Eden," which was the signal of the arrival of the bride, after which the hymn was announced by the officiating Priest, the Venerable Archdeacon Johnson, B. D., of Moose Jaw.
During the singing of this hymn the bride entered the church with her brother, Mr. W. A. Moore, of the Bank of Montreal, and immediately joined the bridegroom and his best man, Mr. J. J.
Brewer, who were waiting at the chancel steps. The words of this beautiful hymn form an invocation to the Holy Trinity for the Divine presence and blessing upon the wedding service, and immediately the sacredness and solemnity of the occasion comes home to those who have assembled to witness the happy union. The bride was given away by her brother, Mr. W. A. Moore, and after the first part of the service was concluded at the chancel steps, the newly wedded couple walked to the altar rails during the singing of "Deus Misoratur" (God be merciful) for the final prayers and blessings upon their married life.

A brief, but very beautiful and helpful address was read to the happy couple by the Archdeacon before they left the altar upon the sacredness of marriage, pointing out the truth that holy marriage is the type, or shadow of the spiritual bond and union which is between Christ and His church. He being the Heavenly bridegroom—the church is His bride, and wedded love is declared to be a type and shadow of the pure and infinite love wherein Christ loves His church.

Immediately there followed a celebration of the Holy Eucharist, which made one of the most impressive and sacred services ever held in St. John's perfectly complete, and one instinctively reflected on the words of the opening hymn and their fulfilment "Be present Heavenly Father," "Be present Son of Mary," "Be present Holy Spirit."

During the singing of the last hymn,
"O Father All Creating" the register was signed in the vestry and then, with the bells telling out their joyful message, and the organist (Miss Gordon playing the wedding march) the wedding party came down the aisle and left the church amid showers of rice and confetti, together with the congratulations and good wishes of those who were present at this beautiful and holy service for their Rector and his bride.

The good will and kind wishes of many friends has been expressed by the numerous and useful presents which the bride and groom received. Several telegrams and cables came during the day and linked together those from away who were present, though not in person, yet in spirit.

The members of the W. A. of St. John's church were hostess at a delightful "Miscellaneous shower" on Wednesday evening last at the home of their president, Mrs. Taylor, in honor of Miss M. Moore, whose wedding took place on Tuesday morning of this week. The guests were received by the hostess, in the living room, and the evening was pleasantly passed in music and social intercourse and just before refreshments were served little Billy Taylor came marching into the room drawing a cart laden with numerous parcels which he invited the guest of honor to unload which she did amidst much laughter, after which dainty refreshments were served in small baskets

German Girl Secretes $20,000 Behind Buffet

Paris, June 17.—The equivalent of $20, 000 in securities recently was found hidden behind a buffet by a French official who was rearranging the furniture of his apartment. The little fortune was traced to a German cook who was employed by the official and whose excellent attitude since the war began gained for her the privilege of remaining in France.

The police made enquiries about her movements recently and she disappeared.
The official and his habitual guests were well placed to acquire confirmation regarding the national defence. That fact and the discovery of her unsuspected wealth led to the suspicion that the cook might have been in communication with the enemy. The fortune has been seque-strated.

FATALITY AT FRANKFORD

Foster Latta, Son of Mr. William Latta Struck by Auto—Died Two Hours

Later
Foster Latta, the elder son of Mr.
William Latta, hardware merchant of Frankford, met death as the result of an automobile accident which happened about nine o'clock last Wednesday, on Trent street near Powell's garage. There had been a wedding at the home of Mr.
Pollard, and the party had started for Belleville in three cars. In front of Powell's garage some boys were playing as the automobiles came along.

Two of the cars had passed, when one of the boys seized Foster Latta's cap and threw it on the road. The little fellow without a thought of danger and without seeing the third car driven by Mr. William Pollard, Jr., approaching, dashed into the roadway. Mr. Pollard applied the brakes and stopped the auto in the distance of six feet but it was too late.
Foster Latta had been struck at the side of the head and the shoulder. He was picked up in an unconscious condition and was bleeding from the wound in the head. He was taken to Dr. Simmon's office and later to his parents home.

Death ensued at eleven o'clock, the little victim never recovering consciousness.

The tragedy has cast a spell of gloom over Frankford, where the unfortunate lad was known as a very bright boy and was well liked. Besides the parents, a younger brother Thomas survives. Foster was about eleven years of age.

New Regulations Issued by the License Board

New regulations respecting standard hotels have been prepared by the Ontario Board of License Commissioners.

Inspectors are urged to insist upon a more strict observance of the regulations requiring a secure bolt on the inner side of every guest room door, in addition to lock; also that in each room must be posted prominently a card stating rates to be charged for room and meals.

A circular is being sent out to all inspectors to pay more heed to the safety of guests in case of fire.

OBITUARY

BURT DUNHAM

The sudden death of Mr. Burt Dunham occurred at his residence, Wellman's Corner, on Thursday, June 14th.
Deceased was in his 74th year, and was in his usual health until Tuesday, when he was suddenly taken ill. Dr. Wellman of Spring Brook, was called in and pronounced the case hopeless, he passed away on Thursday of Peritonitis.

Mr. Dunham was a prosperous farmer and well-known throughout the county.
His wife predeceased him about 12 years ago. The deceased was a member of the Methodist church and is survived by one son, Chas. Dunham, at home.

The funeral took place on Saturday, June 16th. Service was conducted in Wellman's Methodist church by the Rev. S. F. Dixon. Interment taking place in Wellman's cemetery.

THOMAS FITZPATRICK

There passed away at the residence of Michael Shea on Sunday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock, Thomas Fitzpatrick one of the oldest residents of Sidney Township.
He was the last surviving member of the family and had resided with his niece, Mrs. Shea for the past five years. Deceased was born in Kilkenny, Ireland, 85 years ago and came to this country with his parents some sixty odd years ago.

He and his brother John had resided all their life on the farm in Turner Settlement now owned by the latter's son James. Deceased was a good neighbour and staunch friend and was held in high esteem by all his acquaintances. He was a Roman Catholic in Religion and in politics a staunch liberal. The funeral took place from his late residence Tuesday at 9.30 o'clock and proceeded to the Church of St. James the Minor where solemn Requiem Mass was celebrated by Rev. Father O'Reilly. The remains were

Address and Presentation

Carnel League held a social evening on Tuesday evening, June 19th and presented their pastor, Mr. Terrill with a gold watch fob and an address as follows:

Dear Mr. Terrill:—

As your connection among us as pastor and people is, through the law of our church about to be separated, we,
of Carnel League feel that we cannot let you go without some tangible proof of our love and esteem. You have indeed endeared yourself to us by your ready sympathy and love for your people through sorrow and trouble and by your kind words and prayers we have been blessed and spiritually uplifted in many ways since your pastorate among us.
We bow reluctantly to our separation, knowing our loss will be others gain.

We assure you dear Mr. Terrill that during your four years of labor among us we have learned to value you deeply.
We trust we may often have the pleasure of meeting you again.

We ask you Mr. Terrill to accept this watch fob, not for its intrinsic value but as a small token of love from your Carnel League friends.

We pray for God's blessing to rest on your labor for God, and souls on other circuits and that you may be spared many years for the Master.

Signed on behalf of Carnel League

HENRY FARRELL
Ed. PYRKE

Mr. Terrill thanked the people in a few well chosen words after which lunch was served and a very sociable time was spent.

The recommendation that a revised book of praise to be published was accepted by the Presbyterian General Assembly.

Killed By Train

Mrs. Jane Livingstone of Rawdon was found dead along the right of way of the C. P. R. at the crossing east of Belleville on Monday night. An inquest will be held in Springbrook on Friday, Crown Attorney Carnew will attend.

Some strange circumstances are featured in the tragedy. The deceased lady was clad only in her night clothes and had apparently risen from sleep in an absent minded condition and started for the track, carrying her boots in her hand. When found, the body showed signs of having been struck by a train, both legs being broken.

GINGER CAKES.

Two Recipes of Cakes Good for Luncheon or Tea.

To make white ginger wafers, rub a half pound of butter into a pound of flour, add half a pound of sugar, one teaspoonful of baking powder, and an ounce of ground ginger. Make into a stiff dough with half a pint of milk, roll out thinly and cut into shapes. This mixture can be flavored in various ways.

Instead of the ginger, use a few drops of essence of pineapple or rose. Use a teaspoonful of mixed spice, or the grated rind of a lemon; or use a quarter-pound less of flour and add that weight of cocoanut ground almonds or chocolate, or a mixture of the three is very good, and this cut into pretty shapes makes delicious "little pastries."

Ginger fingers go well with stewed pears or apple dishes. Beat three ounces of butter to a cream, add a teaspoonful of mixed spice, and the same of ground ginger, thoroughly mix in two ounces of treacle and two ounces of brown sugar, add a quarter pound of fine flour and an ounce of rice flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder and a teaspoonful of baking powder. Bake 25 minutes in a shallow tin, and when cold cut in fingers.

BELGIUM RELIEF

To the Editor:

Dear Sir,—In view of the recent statement issued by Mr. Hoover, chairman of the Commission for Relief in Belgium, which points out the impossibility at present of obtaining the necessary shipping tonnage to forward to Belgium the food supplies in the same quantities as in the past, and also draws attention to the fact that the United States Government has made arrangements to loan to the Belgian Government the sum of $45,000,000—payable to the Commission for Relief in Belgium in six monthly instalments—which sum will cover the cost of such food supplies as can be shipped in that time by the limited number of ships available to the commission—the editorial committee of the committee of the Belgian Relief Fund in Canada finds it unnecessary for the present to make appeal to the generosity of the people of Canada on the plea of the urgency of support in order to stave off starvation.

The needs of Belgium continue, however, as pressing as in the past, and the situation may be considered as being even more pitiable as, through the forced decrease in imports, Belgium will be compelled to fall back on her last native resources, already so denuded. In order to maintain that so limited ration that has been doled out in the past it will be necessary to encroach upon the country's stock of milk cattle, which has been reserved to maintain a supply of fresh milk for the children.

In the hope, however, that the recent swiftly developed shortage in the world's shipping—the cause of this new departure of the relief work—may not permanently endure; in the hope that the necessary funds may be available should any emergency or special occasion arise, and in view of the fact that in any event relief in many forms will be required after the war, the committee hope that all generous supporters of the fund in the past and all those who have pledged themselves for future payments will continue to support the fund, and thus continue to show their sympathy with the people who gave their all for the cause of humanity.

All such donations received after the 15th of June will be disposed of to the best advantage of this stricken people, according to the wish that may be expressed by any donor or according to the actual or more pressing needs of any of the already organized channels of relief work, such as:

"Help to the children removed from Belgium front."

"Queen's fund for the wounded soldiers."

"Home for the Belgian soldiers."

"Relief for Belgian prisoners in Germany."

A Floral Peaage.

In a railway carriage in England two men were talking rather loudly: "Lord French is rather sick," one of them observed.

"Yes," said the other, "so is the Marchioness of Powys, but the Duchess of Cleveland is getting on famously. The Earl of Rosebery seems to be dwindling away. I can't make it out."

"When they left the carriage a passenger remarked to a friend that these two fellows seemed anxious to impress the company with the fact that they were acquainted with every one in Burke's Peaage."

"Peaage be blowed," he said, rudely, "they were talking about dahlias."

GET RID OF RATS.

Costly and Dangerous, They May Be Driven Out.

Many a seemingly unexplainable illness in our homes may oftentimes be traced to the presence of rats. These little animals travel everywhere, and in their journeys go in and out among filth and where disease prevails. They thus become carriers and disseminators of disease and pestilence.

The only wild animal that lives under the same roof with man is the rat, says Literary Digest. We pay for his keep, although we are not on friendly terms with him. In return, he plagues us in many ways; he steals our food, and, above all, is active in the spread of disease. The annual rat bill of the United States for food alone is estimated by Mary Dind, director, writing in the Forecast, at $160,000,000.

The rat not only disseminates bubonic plague, but carries tapeworms, trichinae, typhus, round worms and other parasites, besides being suspected as an active agent in communicating leprosy and infantile paralysis. It can gnaw through any common building material except stone, hard brick, cement, glass and iron. It destroys whole fields of grain, climbs trees to steal fruit, eats both fowls and their eggs and destroys game. It steals costly furs and laces for its nests when it can get them. Much of our annual loss by fire is due to the rat, and he also is a menace by burrowing into dams and levees. It is a great traveler and fond of living on shipboard, though, fortunately, he journeys little by rail. Finally, his fecundity is prodigious, the food mother presenting him with numerous additions to the family circle sometimes as frequently as once a month.

The modern way of attacking the rat, this writer continues, "is to build it out." The rat-proofing of buildings is described as "a cheap form of insurance against fire and pestilence."

When rats get into roof-proof buildings we have to resort to traps and poisons to get them out, the former being the least objectionable. In the use of traps it must be borne in mind that the rat is cautious and will not enter strange-looking contrivances in search of food, unless plenty of other nourishment is available. The trap should be strong enough so that the rat cannot force its head between the wires and escape, and should be dipped in boiling water or smoked before being set, to kill the human smell, or that of rats, previously caught. It should not be placed in an open space, but along the wall or in a narrow runway, for the rat's vision is somewhat defective in the daytime, and depending on its whiskers as a guide it has to keep close to some wall or other boundary. This makes an excellent bait but an odorous edible different from the animal's customary diet is likely to attract it. Poisoning should not be resorted to in dwellings, and some of the most efficient poisons are so dangerous that they should be used only by experts.

"Dogs, cats, weasels and ferrets are all useful, but the ordinary house-cat is too well fed to care for rats, and it is not more so the third thing of the kind it is not worth the trouble of catching a house cat. Some poisonous snakes have been found with considerable success in war zones."

Odd and Interesting Facts.

The cameramen, the German colony in Africa, recently occupied by British forces, regarded as a great potential rubber zone. The first attempts at rubber exploitation were made some years ago in the northern part of the colony, where the land-philin florida, which is regarded as the greatest rubber-producing plant, was found.

Scientists are working upon a method whereby a commercially satisfactory paper pulp can be made from flax straw. Hitherto the straw had to be burnt for want of proper methods of treatment.

Between the steel helmet used by the troops and its lining of felt and wadding, are fixed a number of rubber studs, which take up the shock of a blow. The wadding comes next the head, so that in case of penetration a resulting scalp wound it acts as a dressing.

An electric fare box that has been invented for street cars, automatically registers the correct number of fares paid by each kind of coin dropped into it.

TREATING BURNS.

French Surgeon's Method Has Splendid Results.

The daily press and certain medical reports from the European fighting front have frequently mentioned a new and successful treatment of burns by French surgeons.

Since the special dressing was known by a coined word and since the composition was not definitely stated, the profession has been awaiting an official description. In the first place, it is not very new, says the Medical Report, since its employment goes back to 1904. It has been in use in the present war almost from the outset, but has only recently come into anything like general employment. It consists of a mixture of paraffin and resin, and while no chemical change is set up, it possesses peculiar physical properties which make it advisable for the treatment of burns.

In the Archives de Medicine et de Pharmacie Militaires for August Dr. Barth de Sanfort reported over 300 burns in soldiers treated with the remedy, which is described in detail. The name "ambaine," with which it was christened, came from its amber hue, and seems to be purely descriptive. This surgeon states that he first described the remedy in 1904. He found it in the hands of a French surgeon, who had used it for some time. He found it in the hands of a French surgeon, who had used it for some time.

Line and Staff Officers.

Broadly speaking, the distinction between a line officer and a staff officer is that between the fighter and the non-fighter. The staff officer has non-military duties. He may, for example, be a member of the medical corps, an instructor at a military institute or have charge of some administrative department of the army or navy. The word is also used for those men attached to the staff of the commander-in-chief. A line officer is literally that; he is the man in the line or on a battlefield to do the actual fighting.

Argentina's Preparedness.

Argentina has a population of only 8,000,000. Its area is a little less than one-third that of the United States. The average American would picture it as a country whose inhabitants are occupied mainly with agriculture and raising of cattle.

But Argentina could, in time of necessity mobilize an army of 18,000 soldiers between the ages of 18 and 30.

The first article of the magna charta of Argentina provides that "every Argentine is liable to military service and instruction in accordance with the provisions of this law."

Between 50,000 and 60,000 Argentine youths reach the age of military service each year. Of these, the Government takes about 30,000, drawn by lot, and from these assigns 18,000 to the army for a year's training, and 3,000 to the navy for a two years' term of service. But those not drafted still receive a kind of military training at home, in the rifle clubs that are organized all over the country.

The regular army consists of only 5,000 officers and privates, but with the annually drafted 18,000 conscripts it is always an army of 23,000 in active service. Those who have passed through the year of military service are placed in reserve upon whose services reliance is placed in case of war. They are already so numerous that, as stated above, an efficient force of nearly 200,000 could be called to arms if the services were required.

Being a country that has about one-thirtieth the population of the United States and one-third of its area, Argentina has made better progress toward preparedness than the United States.—Albany "Journal."

Line and Staff Officers.

Broadly speaking, the distinction between a line officer and a staff officer is that between the fighter and the non-fighter. The staff officer has non-military duties. He may, for example, be a member of the medical corps, an instructor at a military institute or have charge of some administrative department of the army or navy. The word is also used for those men attached to the staff of the commander-in-chief. A line officer is literally that; he is the man in the line or on a battlefield to do the actual fighting.

THE PRICE OF CEMENT

On Friday, June 15th, a man who lives west of Frankford in Murray Township, stopped in our store and told us he could buy Cement in another village for $2.00 per barrel. We told him we did not believe it and he offered to bet us $50.00 he could. We told him we could not meet this price. He brought home three loads. We saw him with it. Cement is costing every dealer in Ontario today $2.45 per barrel delivered at nearest R. R. station. It costs 5c per barrel to unload it, making $2.50 per barrel. We sell Pyramid brand the best cement made at $2.70 per barrel making 20c per barrel or 5c per sack, but this is not all profit. We have to prepay freight back to the factory on the empty bags and lose all that are torn so we do not make over 10c per barrel clear and do not think any man would complain at this amount of profit. If any person can sell Cement at $2.00 per barrel we cannot do so. We do not believe in having a different price for every customer to whom we sell goods. We charge everyone the same. That is our way of doing business.

All Goods Listed in Last Week's Leader will be Sold the Same This Week.

Cheese Market Conditions

Mr. G. G. Publow, Chief Dairy Inspector, in a circular in reference to the transportation of cheese says:—You are no doubt aware that, owing to the submarine menace, the British Admiralty has taken control of all shipping, and as a result conditions regarding the transportation of cheese are serious. I feel quite sure that all of the cheese we can manufacture will be required, and that the prices paid will at least equal those of last year, but as it is almost certain that the cheese will not be shipped as regular as in the past I would advise that special care be taken in the manufacture to insure good keeping qualities. It might be well to warn the makers to insist on a sound milk supply, and to see that the curds are properly firmed in the whey and well stirred out at the time the whey is removed, and also to mature and shrink the curd well after milking before applying the salt. So far the quality of the cheese turned out this season has been above the average, but we are almost sure to get warmer weather now and it would be well to be prepared for it as it is usually when we have sudden changes in temperature that some of the makers get confused in their work.

VEGETABLE WAX.

Production of Needed Commodity From Various Plants.

Vegetable wax is already filling an important place in the economic needs of the world, and there are many indications that the production of wax from certain plants will increase as time goes by. It was not long ago that the world supplied certain of its needs with animal oils and development of the vegetable oil industry, as well as the development of the mineral oil industry, has been remarkable. The uses for wax have increased, and a number of wax-producing plants are being employed on a commercial scale. The industry of making high-grade wax from the candleilla plant has made long strides in the last few years, and there are several big factories for the extraction of wax in the candleilla-growing sections of the United States. It has been estimated that there are 1,000,000 acres of land on which candleilla is growing wild and in great profusion in what is known as the upper border region of Texas. It is believed that not only may the candleilla-bearing territory be enlarged, but that the wax-producing qualities of the plant may be improved by cultivation. There are also large areas of the wild candleilla lands in Mexico.

The recovery of wax from the bayberry was for centuries a New England household industry, and it has lately become a factory industry, the wax of the plant being generally used in the making of bayberry candles, held in high esteem for use and ornament by New Englanders. A bushel of the berries yields, as a rule, between four and five pounds of wax. Another plant belonging to the same genus is the "sweetgale," which grows abundantly in the bogs and marshes of Scotland. It is a small shrub with leaves somewhat like those of myrtle or willow, having a fragrant odor and bitter taste, and yielding an essential oil by distillation.

Stirling W. I. Notice

Last year the ladies belonging to the Stirling Branch of the W. I. raised over eighty dollars for Red Cross purposes by selling waste paper.

They are hoping to raise still more in the same way this year, and would, once again call the attention of the citizens to a few suggestions as regards condition of papers saved for the collectors.

For the smaller pieces of paper have a sack and smooth out crumpled pieces. Break up card board boxes to save space.

Journals should be tied together. Fold newspapers neatly and tie in bundles (do not fold up).

It would take the members of the homes but a very few minutes and greatly economize the time and lessen the labor of those kind enough to assist in packing if these suggestions would be followed.

Mr. and Mrs. Butwell of Toronto, who have been spending their honeymoon at the home of Mr. Butwell's uncle Mr. Edwin Naylor Marmora Road, left on Friday of last week and will take up their residence at Hamper Bay—West Toronto.

That there is no cause for a coal panic is the assertion of Frank McVean, who was sent by the city of London, Ont., to Scranton to purchase a supply for a municipal yard. Mr. McVean was the nominee of the Trades and Labor Council, which asked the city to enter the coal business; so far, however, no coal has been secured, the big operators refusing to sell to municipalities.

Many people for a long time have daily been complaining of the Easy dress methods peculiar to the male sex. Why could not we adopt the same custom? is the question frequently asked by some of the ladies. In Europe we understand the ladies are adopting male attire especially in war time when they are following so many dangerous occupations such as farming, munitions work, etc. The custom has come in a somewhat minor manner to Stirling and vicinity as one merchant it is said has imported some of the latest and a goodly number of sales have taken place—many of our girls would find work more cheerful as they are endeavoring to render aid in every direction. One young lady in Rawdon it is said worked faithfully all day on the County or township road drawing gravel showing capable girls. Yes, we have 'em.

SOME INSIDE HISTORY OF THE WAR

John R. Rathom Tells the Press Association Stories Surpassing
The Fiction of Moving Picture Films

Revelations of a most astounding character were made by Mr. John R.
Rathom, editor of The Providence Journal, of Providence, R. I., in his address before the Canadian Press Association at its 59th annual meeting in Toronto.

Mr. Rathom told story after story of how his reporters exposed the plots and crimes of the Germans to embarrass the friends of the allies in the United States and hamper the production of munitions.

The history of the exposure of the German plots in the United States by the Providence Journal goes back to the period shortly after the opening of war.
The Journal established two wireless stations of its own, one at Block Island and one at Point Judith. With the opening of hostilities they conceived the idea of "listening in" on Sayville. Four operators were put to work day and night.

After nearly 100,000 messages had been stored in the vaults, the Journal was fortunate enough to discover the code to read some of these messages.
Armed with facts thus revealed, the Journal's reporters were sent out to take jobs in the German Consulates and other places named in the messages. One of them was placed in the German Embassy itself. Here he worked for seventeen months as one of the private secretaries of Ambassador von Bernsdorff, the accredited diplomatic representative of the German Empire to the United States, and the evidence of the Ambassador's activities thus exposed by the Journal resulted in his departure from American shores in disgrace.

A reporter on the staff of the same paper followed Dr. Heinrich Albert, exchanged suit cases with him and secured the evidence which defeated the plot to involve Ireland in rebellion and ended in the execution of Sir Roger Casement.

A young lady in the employ of the Providence Journal secured a position as stenographer in the office of Dr. Heinrich Albert, the Austrian Consul General. She was only there about a week when she notified Mr. Rathom that a great quantity of propaganda literature was being made ready for shipment to Germany via England on a Swedish ship. These papers told who were the agents of the Teutonic Governments in the United States, what their services had been to date, how much they had been paid, and how much was still to be paid to them. The case was to be shipped with a large number of other cases of similar outside appearance containing harmless freight. The girls task was to identify the particular box in some way so it could be picked out when it got to England.

She saw the box in Albert's office and kept an eye on it. So did Captain F.
von Pappen, the German naval attaché at Washington, who was hanging around Dr. Albert's office for the purpose. The girl in the course of her watch sat down on the precious box and began to eat her lunch. The unsuspecting von Pappen struck up a flirtation with her, and invited himself to share the sandwiches.
Before long he was talking sentimental twaddle, and the girl encouraged him by taking a red lead pencil out of her hair and coyly drawing two big red hearts on the top of the packing case.
Von Pappen himself drew the arrow through them.

The box was shipped and duly arrived at Faulmouth on the Oscar II, where it waited to be examined. Neutral American cargoes were allowed to go through if they did not contain contraband of war. However the authorities had been warned about the box with the two hearts and the arrow, and they had no difficulty in picking it out of hundreds of others.

"And yet there are no brilliant people but the Germans," said Mr. Rathom with a smile.

We might state for the information of our readers that Mr. Rathom is an Australian by birth.

Charging a Coal Combine

Fifty-one coal magnates of the U. S. are facing trial on a charge of plotting to control prices in the 102 corporations which they represent. It is charged that by regulating the price of some 22,000,000 tons of New River and Pocahontas coal of Virginia they were able to extract profits of $34,000,000 more than they could have without the combination. If found guilty each of the men will be liable to a fine of $5,000 or one year's imprisonment, or both.

Speaks Highly of Miss Menges

Mr. S. B. Wright, Manager of Deloro Smelting Co., and himself a Professional violinist, writes as follows to the Editor of the Marmora Herald:

Deloro, June 20th, 1917

To the Editor,
Marmora Herald.

Dear Sir,

As one who appreciates good music, especially when it is rendered by the highest class artists, I would like to draw the attention of your readers to the announcement, in this issue, of the concert to be given by Isolda Menges in Marmora Town Hall on the 28th June.
With several others from Deloro and Marmora I went to Belleville a couple of weeks ago to hear this young violinist and I have no hesitation in saying that everyone who was present at the concert not only received the greatest musical treat of the season, but also heard in Miss Menges one of the very finest violinists in the world. In addition to a marvellously perfect technique, which is a necessity nowadays, this young artist has a temperament which would be the envy of many an older and better known player, and her tone has the volume and solidity of the mature male rather than that of the female artist. It is also interesting to note that the violin used by Miss Menges is a genuine and magnificent specimen of Antonius Stradivarius' work. Although 200 years old this violin is in a practically perfect state of preservation, and those who attend the concert on the 28th inst.
will have the privilege of hearing the greatest artist who has ever appeared in this district play upon a real "Strad" which cost $10,000.00 years ago.

Yours very truly,

SIDNEY B. WRIGHT.

Last evening was offered at the Hall of the Conservatory of Music one of, if not the greatest, the most delightful treatments in violin music ever offered the public in Petersboro. Miss Isolda Menges won instant applause.

Undoubtedly Miss Menges is an exceptional artist. She plays with assurance, her tone is excellent throughout and she fingers and bows with a skill many male violinists might be well forgiven for envying.—Petersboro Review

Address and Presentation

A number of the pupils and ex pupils met at the school and presented their teacher, Miss Williams with a camera.
Miss Williams although taken completely by surprise thanked her pupils feelingly. Following is the address.

S. S. No. 17

Miss Lucy Williams

Dear Teacher:

We the pupils of S. S. No. 17 learn with deep regret of your determination to leave us. For the past two years you have labored diligently for our welfare and by your patient example and loving kindness you have endeared yourself to all of our hearts. We know that at times we have tried your patience sorely yet you chided with love rather than the rod, and with untiring zeal you have discharged your every duty faithfully.

We cannot allow you to leave us without some small token of our love and respect for you.

We ask you to accept this camera and trust that it may serve to keep green in your memory the pupils who will miss you so much and as you go to new fields of labor, we hope that sometimes a picture of your first school will flit across your memory. And may God's richest blessing be yours, not only as pertains to temporal but also to spiritual and eternal things.

Signed on behalf of the school,

GERTRUDE HINDS,
GRACE COTTRELL,

HER HUMBLE LOVER

"I expect I know," he says, with cold, slow emphasis, "that you would fly from him as from some wild beast. Do you think that I do not know you—that I am not as sure as that I am standing here, that your pure nature could not endure contact with his?—that you had learnt his true character?"

She shrinks and hides her face as a shudder sweeps over her, but with an effort she regains her self-possession. After all, it is but the malice of a moment, a disordered brain, a fit of the worst of wild story built upon a slight foundation. What she has to do is to be patient with him and to let him get rid of him at once.

"Sir Frederic," she says, slowly, "if every word cost her an effort, you expect some response, let me be to this—this story of yours, let me be plain with you, I—before heaven I do not wish to wound you—but I can only say one word: I do not believe you."

He opens his lips, but she goes on with a gesture of infinite dignity, dignity and patience:

"I do not say that you have lied wilfully or wittingly—I say that you have been deceived. Some little tale—this is a land of fiction—has misled me, no more, I—(if I have been hasty, and have said in my surprise anything to wound you—I beg you to forget it. If you will also forget that such a person as myself exists it will be better for both of us—all of us. And now—you must go, please."

He stands motionless, and with a stern, determined look on his white face.

"It is what I expected," he says, in a low, set voice. "It is almost word for word what I told myself you would say; it is consistent with your purity, your loyalty, your stanchness. But do you think that I should be so mad as to come to you with such a denunciation without bringing my proofs?"

She falters, and the dread begins to seize her again, but she struggles against it.

"You say that I have been deceived, misled! Good. If it be so, you will have no objection to becoming acquainted with the process by which I was deceived."

"No—not I do not care—I do not wish—"

"Your husband's good name is of so little value in your eyes that you will not investigate the story?" he says, with calm intensity.

She springs to her feet.

"You have stung me at last!" she says, almost wildly. "Bring me your proofs!"

He inclines his head. All throughout the interview he has spoken and moved like a man wound up to maintain his self-command; he moves now to the door with the stiff gait of an automaton.

"Stay—where?" she falters.

"I am going to produce my proof. It is a living witness."

"No, no!" she says; "not here—not in this house! There are people—"

"Who will hear," he says. "Will you come with me, then? It is but a few steps; or are you afraid?"

He looks at her, and with a spasm of humiliation, for a moment she pauses, then she catches up her hat.

"I am not afraid," she says, coldly. "I will go with you. Where is it?"

He points to the old fountain, and standing aside, allows her to pass.

With a swift, firm step, Signa reaches the fountain, and stands with one hand resting upon it, her face set and cold.

He follows her slowly, with a motion of his hand signs to her to wait, and goes into the wood.

A moment afterward he returns with the young girl, whom Signa had been watching, by his side.

Never while life lasts will Signa forget this moment: the white, haggard face of the man, the wild, dark, mournful eyes of the girl, instinctively she draws back a pace, and at the movement Sir Frederic lays his hand upon the girl's arm, and motions her to sit herself on a stone at the foot of the fountain.

She drops mechanically, and sits looking from one to the other.

Signa waits in silence for a moment, then she asks, in a hushed voice, that sounds like a distant echo of her own:

"Who is this?"

"Listen. She herself shall tell," he says. He bends down and lays his hand upon the girl's shoulder. "Lucia," he says. She looks up as if awaking from a reverie, and waits.

"You remember me?" she asks slowly, as if to make his English intelligible to her Italian ears—"you remember my coming here a little while ago, and the story you told me?"

She nods wearily.

"Ah, yes," she says, slowly, her accent blurring the English words in the way peculiar to foreigners, and which Signa never hears hereafter without a pang of misery.

"This lady," he says—the girl turns her head and lifts her eyes to Signa's white face with the dull, apathetic stare of a dumb animal—"this lady wishes to hear it. Will you tell it to her just as you told it to me? You know, perhaps she may help you to find the one you are seeking."

A gentle light comes into the girl's eyes, and her lips twitch.

"Yes, Ah, signora! you are of his country, you are English—surely you must know him! If he would but come back to me! I have been so patient! He said that I was to be good and patient, and have I not been so? Ah, signora, I am so wretched!"

With a shudder and a thrill of coming evil, Signa draws back out of the reach of the dark eyes, and signs to Sir Frederic with a swift, frenzied wave of the hand that he is to make her speak quickly.

"Yes, yes, Lucia!" he says. "But this story! Come."

The girl sighs and is silent for a moment; then she begins.

It is a long, rambling, sometimes incoherent story, but it is all to clear. It is a story of a man's treachery, of a man's crime; sometimes it is broken with sobs, and the tears roll down the girl's cheeks and fall upon her heaving bosom, when she comes to that awful encounter between the bridegroom and the betrayer her face grows white, her hands unclasp suddenly, and fling themselves before her eyes.

"He—he shot him!" she says, in a wild, tremulous whisper. "Ah, yes! he was brave, was the signor! He shot him!"

There is an awful silence; benumbed, frozen, Signa leans against the fountain. Sir Frederic's presence is forgotten; everything in her life goes by her as if in a dream; all that she realizes is the girl's voice telling her a story. She does not doubt it; she cannot, strive to do so though she may. There is truth in the accents of the wild voice—truth that will take no denial.

"Go on," says Sir Frederic, hoarsely, his eyes fixed on the ground as if to avoid the agonized face opposite him.

The girl stares at him, then her head drops, and she sighs wearily.

"There is no more," she says hopelessly. "The signor went—he left me—telling me to be patient and good, and I—I have been so patient—but I waited—ah, yes, I have waited—but I am so lonely! Why does he not come back? Has he forgotten me? You—you are English; tell me, are all your people so?"

Silence; her head droops lower, as if she had not expected an answer; then Sir Frederic raises his head and looks at Signa; her lips have moved, but though she has said no word, he understands her.

"Lucia," he says, bending down, "you have not told us his name, this English signor. Do you not know it?"

She looks up.

"Do you think I forget?" she says, with dull wonder and scorn. "He was an English lord. He was Milford Delamere!"

Signa closed her eyes, and holds on to the fountain with both hands. Sir Frederic makes a slight movement toward her, but it is sufficient to recall her to consciousness and self-command.

Faintly she motions him back, and with a bitter smile she stops. Then he turns to the girl on the shoulder.

"Lucia, did this Lord Delamere give you no name—no place where you could write to him? Do you understand me?"

"Yes, yes," she answers, heavily. "And I did write—ah, yes, so many times."

"And he, did he never reply—never send a letter back for all yours?"

A quick light comes into her eyes, and her hand goes to her bosom.

Sir Frederic glances at Signa, whose eyes are fixed upon the girl with the expression of one who sees some awful apparition.

"Lucia, will you show me the letter? You would not let me see it when I asked you before. Will you show it to the lady?"

The girl turns her eyes to Signa, questioning, then slowly she takes the folded paper from her dress, and unfolds it. For a moment her eyes refuse to do their task, a film seems to cover them, the paper is just a square, misty spot of white. Then with an effort she looks at it.

It is only a few lines in Italian:

"Dear Lucia,—I have received your letters, and they have given me much pain. Be patient and all will be well. You must try and forget all that has happened. Do not write to be again. Lucia, as writing will but help you to remember."

"Always your friend," "Delamere."

"This is it; and in the midst of her anguish, she recognizes Hector's handwriting, she is conscious of a feeling of horror at the unnatural coldness of the letter."

With a shudder she lets it drop from her fingers, and no man might find the empty vial from which he had drunk the fatal draught.

Sir Frederic picks it up and gives it back to the girl, who receives it eagerly, but a moment afterward it returns to its hiding place.

He stands looking at her for a moment, then his grasp and muttering:

"Lucia, you may go now. You know your way? You remember what I told you—that I will be your friend? That is well. Go now."

The girl rises and looks absently, then seeing Signa she makes a rapid movement toward her, and taking her hand it about to lift it to her lips. With a faint cry of horror, Signa snatches it away and flings it above her head, shrinking back against the fountain.

The girl's eyes flash and she stares vacantly at her, but Sir Frederic has her arm's grasp and muttering:

"Come with me," leads her away.

When he returns alone, Signa is still leaning against the cold stone as if her eyes are fixed on the steel-blue sky, her lips tightly shut, her breathing scarcely perceptible.

He waits a moment, with white face and heavy eyes, then he speaks her name.

"Signa," a slight movement of her eyes shows that she hears him. "Signa, I have brought my proofs. Do you still think me a liar? Have I been deceived; are you? This girl you have wronged have made her so. So much the darker is this man's sin. Was I right here when I said you would fly from him as from a monster? Speak to me!—I have borne so much; my heart has been as great as yours, my eyes fixed on your agony has doubled mine. Speak to me! There is no time to lose! He may return at any moment."

She starts and presses her hands to her brow, then lets them fall, and moves slowly away toward the inn like one in a dream. He walks beside her, his eyes fixed on the ground.

"What will you do?" he says hoarsely; "there is but one thing you can do—you must leave him."

She does not speak, but her eyes turn to his face with a look awfully like those of the miserable Lucia's.

"Listen to me," he says, speaking slowly and as clearly as he can. "You must leave this accursed place at once. My carriage is here; you must take it."

She flashes upon him a look of scorn and loathing.

"With you!" he says, in a dry, hard voice. "Only those two words, but they make him writhe and bite his lips till the blood comes."

"No," he says. "No. You shall go alone. I will arrange everything. My man is trustworthy. You will reach the station at Ailetto before he can overtake you. Go—go to England—to Lady Rookwell—"

He stops, for it is evident that she does not follow him. In silence they reach the inn. He waits in the passage for a moment, sees her drag herself up the stairs to her own room, then with bowed head goes to the stables and mechanically helps the men to put the horses to.

Signa goes upstairs, and like one moving in her sleep, takes off her dress. Then she sinks on her knees beside her travelling trunk, and with heavy, faltering hands turns out the contents until she comes to a plain, black dress; it is the one she wore that day—the happiness in her life when she said to St. Clare, mechanically she puts this on; then she stands for a moment as if trying to grasp some idea, some motive. As she does her hand wanders to her pocket, and, still like one in sleep, she takes out the contents—poor trifles that recall the day, the very hour, a thimble, a knife, a comb, a handkerchief, a charge and forgotten, a piece of—

"Ah!" with a sudden cry as of something had struck her to the heart, she stares at a fragment of biscuit wrapped in a fragment of an old letter.

Back it all comes to her. She sees him kneeling over the fire, his hands some face turned to hers as he bids her keep the biscuit in case she should need it! With trembling fingers she unwraps the letter and glances at it; as she does so, the cry goes up again, but this time with an undertone of horror. The letter is in Italian, in a cursive handwriting; it is one of the girl Lucia's!

With a wild, despairing gesture she flings it from her and drops on her knees. It is all true, beyond the shadow of a doubt. All true, and she is the most wretched of all creatures.

For half an hour, perhaps, she kneels, fighting with her agony; then she rises, white as death itself, but calm, too calm, wraps her travelling cloak around her and with steady, leaden feet goes downstairs.

Sir Frederic stands at the bottom, his arms folded, his head bent. He looks up, he does not speak, and with the faintest motion of the hand guides her to the door.

Before they reach it the landlord comes out.

"Milord," he says, "milord here tells me that he brings you bad news. What is it? Is that so? It is so strange—so, by Heaven, yes!"—he searches for a word—"yes, so novel!"

Signa's lips move. Sir Frederic and the landlord wait.

"It is quite true," she says at last, and the voice is like that of an automaton.

"And milord, what shall I tell him when he returns? How explain this surprise?" demands the landlord.

Sir Frederic answers.

"I shall remain and explain," he says, coldly.

The landlord bows and looks somewhat relieved from the dread of having to face Milord Delamere alone.

"Very good, milord," he says. "I have but to express my sorrow at the bad tidings, and to trust that milord will make a safe journey. But it is bad! Haste there, Baptiste, haste!"

And he begins to hurry up the men. Sir Frederic holds the door of the carriage open, and Signa, with heavy, faltering steps, enters. As he closes it, he looks at her and murmurs hoarsely:

"Be brave, Signa! Oh, Heaven!"

He stops, for she does not hear him. With an inarticulate groan, he shuts the door and goes to the coach.

"You know what to do," he says, sternly. "Drive for your life. You must catch that train."

The man touches his hat, and an instant afterward the horses dash down the street, and Sir Frederic is left gazing after them.

CHAPTER XXXI.

Sir Frederic has conquered, he has won all along the line, but his victory does not seem to bring him much satisfaction, and certainly no happiness.

He has convinced Signa at very great cost, and at the cost of much anguish to himself and her, that he is right that night on the tower in warning her against Hector Warren. He has proved to her that she has given her pure heart's love to a cold, heartless wretch, scarcely worthy the name of man; he has convinced her that it would be better to die rather than to live with my Lord of Delamere, and yet Sir Frederic is far from happy; he is put in the broadest sense, he is wretched and miserable. The white face, that he had found so beautiful and left so worn and haggard with agony, haunts him like a specter.

"I only did my duty," he mutters, drawing his cloak round him, for the afternoon draws in and the evening chilliness makes itself felt.

GREAT CITY'S WANE.

Lepahan, Once the Proud Capital of Persian Empire.

A report from Constantinople to the effect that the Persian city of Isfahan had been freed from Russian rule by an uprising of tribesmen who had waged "holy war" against the foreigners, failed to attract more than casual comment in the news despatches from the war front of Europe and Asia. Yet had this city, retained in the twentieth century the power and magnificence which were here in the seventeenth, no news in the world not even that affecting Berlin, London or Paris, would have been of greater interest, for in that era Isfahan, the capital of the country, had a population variously estimated between a million and 400,000, while its palaces, gardens and wonderful bazaars were without rival in any clime.

Today Isfahan is scarcely the provincial "shah" or "shahzadeh" of its former greatness and the prize that was here as the capital of Persia has been transferred to Teheran, 210 miles to the north. Although the population still numbers between 200,000 and 100,000, and the traveler might be deceived by the spectacle of its crowded covered bazaar which runs for three miles through the center of the place, dividing it into a north and south side, yet all beyond this thoroughfare of bazaar is desolate and in ruins. Palaces, once the pride of shahs and the delight of their favorites, are crumbling into decay; of the 200 mosques scattered over the 20 square miles which the city covers only a few have retained an appreciable part of their original richness and impressive grandeur; the 150 public buildings have fallen into disuse; the wonderful gardens and avenues of luxuriant trees, caressed by cascades of purest water, are overgrown with weeds and scraggy shrubs.

With the invasion of the barbarous Afghans under their youthful leader Mahmud, just a hundred years after the brilliant reign of Abbas the Great, the glory of Isfahan faded rapidly. This ruthless scorcher, raised army of less than 25,000 men, met the richly decked Persian army of 50,000 on a plain about nine miles from the walls of the capital. The defeat and with his own hand fixed the royal plume of feathers in the turban of Mahmud. Hosain had the year before appealed to Peter the Great, Czar of Russia, for aid in driving back the Afghans, and the Russian, in answer to this petition, had embarked a force upon the Volga. This army reached the Caspian in July, 1722—the first time in history that the flag of the Muscovites had floated over the great inland sea—but never reached the hapless Hosain.

Mahmud's away of less than three years—happily for the world, he died at the early age of 27—was a period of frightful cruelty and bloodshed in Isfahan. The length of the Afghan reign was a time of horror and in that time the heart of Isfahan had been so bruised that it was never healed.—Buffalo Express.

SATISFIED MOTHERS

No other medicine gives as great satisfaction to mothers as does Baby's Own Tablets. These Tablets are equally good for the newborn babe or the growing child. They are absolutely free from any harmful drugs and cannot possibly do harm—always good. Concerning them Mrs. Jos. Moreau, St. Pamphile, Que., writes: "I have used Baby's own Tablets and am well satisfied with them, and would use no other medicine for my little ones." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

NEW SLEEVES.

All the Way From Wrist Length to Shoulder Straps.

Not that there is any change in sleeve widths—the changes are more subtle, though none the less radical. Lengths, however, are experiencing the change that usually comes with the rising of the thermometer, and in the late spring and summer dresses, particularly in the latter, one finds them varying according to the type of frock to which they are attached and adapted to the age and plumpness of the wearer (to put both kindly) or slenderness to wear them. Consequently, they range and dwindle from demure lengths that modestly cover the wrist to mere armholes and shoulder straps. Some of the sleeves in summer frocks are three inches above the elbows. Yet others, in both summer and autumn frocks, are long, transparent and bishop in line. Lanvin favors a comfortable and conservative seven-eighths length.

Bernard sanctions a plain, half-length bell sleeve, using it for all his blouses and sports dresses. Bernard's full-length sleeve is given a novel aspect by means of a deep cuff in contrasting color. Many of Lanvin's seven-eighths tailored sleeves have a full lingerie undersleeve puffed at the wrist. Evening gowns are in nearly all cases sleeveless. Beer, however, compromises with a mere cap of lace. Both dresses and cap and blouses are fitted with sleeves in full length or half length. The kimono line seems to have come to stay, and it is probable that for many seasons to come we shall have a choice between loose sleeves and that Oriental line.

Bolton has been bold enough suggesting the Empire. It has a bare cuff made to harmonize with a Zouave skirt. Lanvin shows a transparent barrel sleeve reaching to the wrist, but so cut as to show the bare arm half way to the elbow.

IVANHOE

A meeting of the Women's Institute was held at Ivanhoe in the home of Miss J. Tanner on Friday, June 22nd. The meeting was opened by singing the usual ode after which twenty members answered to the roll call. A splendid program then followed, a piano solo by Miss Molly Tanner and Mrs. D. L. Fleming, a recitation entitled "Spring from the hillside" by Miss Jessie Duggan and a duet was sung by Miss Ella Tanner and Miss Bessie Fleming. Miss Conover, of Brampton gave two demonstrations in cooking, also a talk about food values which was helpful and practical. Miss Conover who is a Domestic Science graduate and has taken post-graduate work at Columbia University is a very pleasing speaker and is very successful as a demonstrator. Twenty seven new members were added to the roll and the collection amounted to $3.49. At the close of the meeting a very dainty lunch was served. About sixty were in attendance.
On Sat., June 23rd the Ivanhoe school held a Field Day under the auspices of the Women's Institute. The members made candy and lunch and realized the sum of $41.84 which will be used for Red Cross Work.
Mr. and Mrs. J. McKinnon, Lavant, Ont. were guests of Mr. H. McKinnon last week.
The C.P.R. painters are painting and renewing our station.
Mrs. Conkrite and Mildred are spending a few days in Frankford.
Don't forget White Lake Field Day June 29th. Come and enjoy yourself.
Miss Edith Tammison is sewing in our vicinity.
Miss Hilda Stont, of Tweed was the guest of her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Stont.

MINTO

The last meeting of Minto W. I. held in the club rooms was of special interest. Miss Conover gave an address concerning Red Cross work. A number of other addresses were given and a very interesting evening spent. Nurse Wilson very ably acted as Chairman. The Red Cross quilt was disposed of by drawing a ticket and it was found that Mrs. Clifford Sine was the lucky person. Mrs. Sine then donated the quilt to the W. I. to be sold. A lunch was then served by the ladies and all felt that a very interesting evening had been spent.

A number from here attended the funeral of the late Mrs. Waller, of Sine. We are sorry to hear that Pte. Roy Bedell has been wounded in the hip. He has been removed to the First Canadian Hospital. All hope for a speedy recovery.

S. S. No. 19 expect to hold their picnic near the school on Friday afternoon.

Rev. Mr. Boulteit of Roslin visited at the home of Nicholas Stout on Saturday last en route for Cochrill where he was to take the services for Nicholas who went to Roslin parish.

July 25th is the date

The Ladies of the Rawdon Red Cross Workers intend holding their annual Social on Wednesday evening, July 25th to be held on Thomas Montgomery's lawn. Keep this date in mind.

A recommendation of the Minister of Public Works, announced in the Ontario Gazette recently is that for three years commencing Sept. 14th, 1917, that purchase or sale of snipe, quail, woodcock or partridge be prohibited.

The jury at Springbrook Friday found that Mrs. Jane Livingstone had been struck and killed by a C. P. R. train Monday night. She had apparently wandered to the track from her home in a time of mental weakness.

July the 4th should be observed by everyone this year because our neighbors to the south of us are our allies in this present war—why not rejoice over this fact and on that date attend the Annual Garden Party in Frankford given by Trinity Church Congregation.

The Reeve of Rawdon Mr. Thomas Montgomery has purchased a Ford Car with starter attached. He was in town on Tuesday and from all appearances was showing the people what a capable driver he was when even the Rector of St. John's Church was not afraid to trust himself with him.

FRENCH REGAIN ALMOST ENTIRE LOST POSITIONS

Only a Salient Near Moisy Farm Still Held by the Germans.

WIN IN CHAMPAGNE

Repulse Crown Prince's Assault, Then Go On and Take Ground.

Paris cable says: The big German offensive against the French line east of Vauxraillet Monday, in which trenches were stormed and captured, has gone for naught, for the French forces in a violent counter-offensive had regained nearly all their lost ground Tuesday night.

Although the German Crown Prince had launched his attack with huge effectiveness, composed of picked troops, and covered it by a heavy artillery fire, his and by bomb-dropping positions was a feature of the captured area, 400 meters northeast of the Moisy farm, now remains in his hands. In addition, heavy casualties were inflicted on the Germans, who left many dead on the field of battle.

Likewise, in Champagne, the Crown Prince has been badly battered between Mont Carillet and Mont Blond. In an attempt to recapture positions previously taken from them, the Germans first were repulsed by the French, who then assumed the offensive and advanced their line on a front of more than 600 yards and to a depth in excess of 300 yards. Here also, the Germans lost heavily in men killed or wounded.

QUIET ON BRITISH FRONT.

The British official communication issued Thursday evening says: "Hostile raiding parties were repulsed by our fire last night south of the Bapaume-Cambrai road, east of Laventie, and in the neighborhood of Lambertzyde. Another party of the enemy succeeded in entering one of our front line posts near Lambertzyde, but was at once driven out. A few of our men are missing.

"The enemy's artillery was active during to-day, south and north of the Scarpe River."

FRENCH REPORT.

Paris cable says: The communication issued by the War Office Thursday night reads: "In the course of the day fighting was continued to our advantage east of Vauxraillet. A counter-attack by our troops in a trench section occupied by the enemy in the sector of Moisy farm, gave important results. At this hour we have retaken all of our positions with the exception of a salient situation 400 metres north-east of this farm, where enemy groups are still maintaining themselves.

"The artillery action remains very lively in this region. Between Hurthe and Croonne, our first lines were quiet violently bombarded. In Champagne the advance made this morning by our troops northeast of Mont Carillet was accomplished under particularly brilliant conditions. A German attempt about 8 o'clock in the morning to recapture positions which we had taken from them on the 15th, between Mont Carillet and Mont Blond was repulsed by our Grenadiers, who, taking the offensive in their turn, pursued the enemy detachments into their own trench, which they captured. We made also an advance of 300 metres in depth of an extent of 600 metres. About 100 German dead remained on the ground."

DRIED FRUITS, VEGETABLES

So Preserved, Save Tin Cans and Glass Jars,

And Are Easily Kept Insect-proof.

Drying was a well-recognized and successful way of preserving certain foods before canning came into general use. So say the specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture, and modern methods make it still more practicable than formerly, either in the home or by community groups. The department advises housewives to dry fruits and vegetables for the winter if tin cans and glass jars are scarce or expensive, and gives the following methods, which have been proved to be very satisfactory. There are three methods in use. These are sun drying, drying by artificial heat, and drying with air blasts, as before an electric fan.

Trays for drying by any one of these methods, as well as trays for use over open fires or before fans, can be made satisfactorily at home. Frames and trays for use with artificial heat may be purchased complete if desired.

Home-made trays may be made of edge and board three-fourths of an inch thick and two inches wide, and bottom boards of lath spaced one-fourth of an inch. If desired, one fourth-inch galvanized wire mesh may be tacked to the side and end boards to form the bottom of the trays.

Frames for use before fans may be made of wood of convenient size. Frames for use with artificial heat should be made of non-inflammable material to an extent as possible. As many as six trays may be placed one above the other when artificial heat is used. In drying before a fan the number of trays that may be placed one above the other will depend on a large extent upon the diameter of the fan, and upon the distance between the trays. In drying in the sun, trays as described may be used, or the products to be dried may be spread on sheets of paper or muslin laid to place on a sunny spot.

PRODUCING PRODUCTS FOR DRYING.

Vegetables and fruits will dry better if sliced. They should be cut into slices one-half to one-fourth of an inch thick. If thicker, they may not dry thoroughly. While drying the products should be packed (temporarily) for three or four days and turned each day from one box to another to bring about thorough mixing, and so that the whole mass will have a uniform degree of moisture. If during this "conditioning" process the products are found to be too moist, they should be returned to the trays and dried further. When in condition, the products may be packed permanently in tight paper bags, insect-proof paper boxes or cartons, or in glass or tin containers. The following recipes are reliable:

SPINACH AND PARSLEY.

Spinach that is in prime condition for greens should be prepared by careful washing, and removing the leaves from the roots. Spread the leaves on a tray to dry thoroughly. They will dry much more promptly if sliced or chopped.

GARDEN BEETS, ONIONS, CARROTS.

Beets—Select young, quickly-grown, tender beets, which should be washed, peeled, sliced about an eighth of an inch thick and dried.

Turnips should be treated in the same way as beets.

Carrots should be well grown, but varieties having a large woody core should be avoided. Wash, peel and slice crosswise into pieces about an eighth of an inch thick.

Parsnips should be treated in the same way as carrots.

Onions—Remove outside papery covering. Cut off tops and roots. Slice into one-eighth inch pieces and dry.

Cabbage—Select well-developed heads of cabbage and remove all loose outside leaves. Split the cabbage, remove the hard, woody core and slice the remainder of the head with a kraut cutter or other hand slicing machine.

All the products under this heading should be "conditioned," as described above.

BEET TOPS, SWISS CHARD, CELERY.

Beet Tops—Tops of young beets in suitable condition for greens should be selected and washed carefully. Both the leaf, stock and blade should be cut into sections about one-fourth inch long and spread on screens and dried. Swiss chard and celery should be prepared in the same way as beet tops. Rhubarb—Choose young and succulent growth. Prepare as for stewing by skinning the stalks and cutting into pieces about one-fourth inch to one-half inch in length and dry on trays.

All the products under this heading should be "conditioned," as described.

RASPBERRIES.

Sort out imperfect berries, spread select berries on trays and dry. Do not dry so long that they become hard enough to rattle. The drying should be stopped as soon as the berries fall to stain the hand when pressed. Pack and "condition."

WILSON ASKS FOR RECRUITS

Sets Week of June 23 to Get 70,000 Men

To Fill Regular Army by July 1.

A Washington despatch: President Wilson has put his shoulder behind the wheel of army recruiting in an effort to have the regular army brought to full war strength of 235,000 men by July 1 next. Secretary Baker today announced that the President had by proclamation designated the week of June 23, covering the period from June 23 to June 30, as recruiting week for the regular army, and that Brigadier-General William P. McCain, the Adjutant-General of the army, will use the President's recruiting proclamation in instructing his recruiting officers to emphasize especially their work in the week designated to fill up the regular army with its increased increments and the National Guard to war strength.

The President's proclamation follows:

"I hereby designate the period June 23 to June 30 next, as recruiting week for the regular army, and call upon unmarried men between the ages of 18 and 40 years, who have no dependents and who are not engaged in pursuits vitally necessary to the prosecution of the war, to present themselves for enlistment during this week herein designated to the number of 70,000.

(Signed) Woodrow Wilson

June 19, 1917.

On April 1 the army needed 183,898 men to raise it to war strength. Since April 1 a total of 121,338 men have been recruited, leaving 62,560 to make up the total of 183,898 needed on April 1. Allowing for losses in one sort or another since that date, it is necessary to bring the army about 70,000 men to bring them up to war strength. The net gain in recruiting for the regular army on June 19 was 422 men, bringing the total enlisted strength of the army to 121,350 men. This is being raised to 150,000 men as fast as the army is able to care for men taken into it.

GERMAN RESERVES NOT EQUAL TO THEIR RECENT WASTAGE

French General's Estimate of Foo's Strength and Cause of Changed Tactics.

Paris Cable says: General De La Croix publishes in 'The Temps' the results of his study, supposedly from authoritative sources, of the present number of German reserves. He estimates that the grand total of German troops of all kinds and classes up to June 1, reached 13,130,000, and that this total was depleted by losses of 3,630,000; 2,200,000 rendered unfit through wounds, and 1,430,000 resident in foreign countries.

General De La Croix estimates that of the balance nearly 6,000,000 are employed as first line, rear line and interior troops, leaving a movable balance of reserves of about 7,000,000, of which 220,000 are attached to front depots, 355,000 in interior depots, and 180,000 in process of formation.

This number will be increased in November by 450,000 of the class of 1919. These troops will not, however, be available before that for any service, any more than those in formation.

On this basis De La Croix figures that Germany has 675,000 reserves with which to cover her losses until November, or 155,000 a month, plus 200,000 a month. The general points out that German losses in April and May have been at least 300,000 monthly, making a debit balance which the German front and fewer attacks. The absence of reserves has caused, he claims, an obvious shift from the old tactics of the German general staff.

BRITISH HOLD VANTAGE POINTS

All Along the Franco-Belgian Front.

No Hun Withdrawals From East Front.

London cable: With the recent captures in the Messines region the British now hold all the vantage points along their line on the Franco-Belgian front, as a result of which there has been an enormous decrease in the number of British casualties.

When the Germans were stopped in their drive on Calais early in the war they established themselves on such dominating heights as those of the Somme and of Messines.

All these positions have now been wrested from the Germans," continued Gen. Maurice. "Our western front is approximately 130 kilometers (about 80 miles) long, and we are in the German trenches for this entire length with the exception of a few sections which total about 25 kilometers.

He contradicted reports that have been current that the Germans have drawn large forces from the eastern front to take part in the fighting in France.

"The fact is," he added, "that there has been no considerable movement of German troops from the east to the west. The Germans have sent fresh units to the western front, but these were made up largely of men called to the colors recently. The Germans have been using the people in the occupied territories to replace laborers at home, who are thus released for the army."

Enemy Still Nervous, and Putting Up Barrage.

New Drafts Are Winning High Praise.

(By Stewart Lyon, Canadian Press Correspondent with the Canadian Forces.

Canadian Headquarters in France, says: The enemy is still very nervous along the western front. The slightest sign of an abnormal movement on the part of the British or Canadian troops brings down what the official report characterizes as "a terrific barrage." The enemy depends chiefly on his big guns for holding of the line. To counteract this, our heavy artillery is taking on daily for destruction several of the enemy's offensive batteries. Enemy guns, large and small, are ranged along the Canadian front and in the rear. Some are over six miles behind the enemy trenches and the duty of the aviators: sent out to check up on the condition of the German batteries is no sinecure. Its peril seems to be an added attraction, for there is no lack of candidates for admission to the ranks of cadets.

The drafts from the Canadian depots in England to make good the wastage in the corps are of good quality. I hear nothing but praise for the new men.

32 STEAMERS A WEEK'S TOLL

27 Over 1,600 Tons, and 5
Below That Figure.

Largest List in Last Seven Weeks.

London cable says: Twenty-seven British ships of more than 1,600 tons have been sunk, according to the weekly British summary given out today. Five British vessels under 1,600 tons also were sent to the bottom. No fishing vessels were destroyed.

The summary follows:

Arrivals, 2,897; sailings, 2,993. British merchant ships over 1,600 tons sunk by mine or submarine, including three previously, 27; under 1,600 tons, including one previously, five.

British merchant ships unsuccessfully attacked, including two previously, 31.

British fishing vessels sunk, none. The foregoing figures of British shipping losses as the result of Germany's submarine warfare show a larger number of vessels sunk than in any of the six preceding weeks. Not since the seven-day period ending April 28 has a greater number of ships been destroyed. During the week 51 vessels—38 over and 13 under 1,600 tons—were sunk. The heaviest totals since the Teuton submarine campaign, was opened in February last were registered in the week ending April 21, when forty steamers of more than 1,600 tons were sunk, and 15 vessels of the smaller tonnage were sent to the bottom.

Since the middle of April, when the undersea boat activity recorded its highest toll, 303 British vessels, of which 220 measured more than 1,600 tons, were sunk, the weekly total being as follows:

Week ended.	Over 1,600 tons	Under 1,600 tons

RUSS WOMEN'S BATTLE CORPS

"Command of Death" Soon to Go to the Front.

Leader Says They Will Excel the Men.

Petrograd cable: The "Command of Death," which is the official title of the women's regiment raised by the twice wounded girl officer, Vera Butchikoff, was reviewed to-day by Minister of War Kerensky. The regiment will leave in a fortnight for the front, probably for the Minsk sector.

The Associated Press correspondent who visited the barracks found posted at the gate a little blue-eyed sentry in soldier's khaki blouse, short breeches, green forage cap, ordinary women's black stockings and neat shoes. The sentry was a daughter of Admiral Sakharoff, former commander of the Baltic fleet, and Minister of Marine. In the court yard 300 girls were at drill, mostly between 18 and 25 years old, of good physique and many of them pretty. They wore their hair short or had their heads entirely shaved. They were drilling under the instruction of a male sergeant. Most of the recruits are from the higher educational academies, or secondary schools with a few peasants, factory girls and servants.

Some married women were accepted, but none who had children.

The girl commander said: "We apply the rigid system of discipline of the pre-revolutionary army, rejecting the new principle of soldier self-government. Having no time to laze the girls gradually to handships we impose a Spartan regimen from the first. They sleep on boards without bedclothes. This immediately eliminating the weak. The smallest breach of discipline is punished by expulsion in disgrace. The ordinary soldier's food is furnished. We rise at four and drill daily from 7 to 11 and again from 1 to 6. The girls carry the cavalry carbine, which is five pounds lighter than the regular army rifle.

"We are fully armed and are already entered on the list of regiments. I am convinced that we will excel the male fighters."

Asked as to the attitude of the male army, Commander Butchikoff said that only the Volynsky regiment, which had led the Petrograd revolution, was really favorable to them.

"Do you regard the price of coal as high?" asked the dealer. "No," replied the patient citizen. "You seem to regard the stuff as so precious I am surprised that it is not so of it at any price."—Washington Star.

Alaskan Indian Ice Cream.

The main food of the Alaskan Indian is meat and fish. In the winter many people do not cook the fish at all, simply freeze them in the house for two or three days and then eat them raw. Women always serve the food and at ways, and that others are satisfied before beginning their own meal. They have to be very careful not to spill anything, for that would bring bad luck to the one who is eating. When a person is invited to eat in the village it is considered bad manner to eat all that is before him. He must have enough to take home to the members of the family who did not come. The host generally gives his guest a piece of dried fish to hold the food which he is to take home. The fish is broad and flat, about one-half inch thick, and the bundle is carried away openly, without any attempt at hiding it. In the summer, berries, fruit and roots are added to the diet, and berries are frozen in the fall to last through the winter. Since white people came, flour and canned goods have changed the food very much. It is easy to have ice cream for dessert at any time. There is no cream about it, but tallow and berries are mixed with it, and some of the fat is added to it, and when it is frozen it makes a fine dish.—Southern Workman.

NEW DRIVE BY THE BRITISH

German Report Points to Offensive in Flanders.

Champagne Likely to Have One Also.

London Cable.—Indications point to an early resumption of operations on a grand scale in Belgium and France, if, indeed, they have not already begun in Flanders and Champagne. A significant statement in the latest German official communication says that in Flanders and Champagne "the fighting activity has been revived at several points."

Aside from this there is no information as to the exact status of affairs. In Champagne, the Germans have made an attempt to recapture positions between Mont Didard and Mont Carillet, taken by the French Monday, but met with repulse, suffering heavy casualties. To the northwest around Craonne, heavy artillery duels are being fought.

The situation in Flanders is even more obscure, as neither the British nor French statements tend to clarify the German report of the recommencement of hostilities. Artillery duels of great intensity are known to have been in progress between Boesinghe and Frelingheide and in the regions of Steenstraete and Hetsaas, while to the south, in France, in the neighborhood of the Bapaume-Cambrai road, the British troops have resumed their trench-raiding operations, destroying German dugouts and taking prisoners.

FRENCH REPORT.

Paris, June 19.—Tuesday night's official report read: "There is no event of importance to report with the exception of great artillery activity on both sides in the neighborhood of Craonne."

HALF KUT MEN TURK'S VICTIMS

Died as Prisoners After Being Captured.

London cable says: The correspondent of Reuters Limited in Cairo says he learns from the most reliable sources that a large number of British and Indian prisoners taken by the Turks in Mesopotamia have succumbed to ill-treatment or lack of proper medical attention.

A resident of Taurus," says the correspondent, "testified that in the prison camp there more than half of the men captured at Kut-el-Amara are now dead. It is noteworthy that the Turks would not allow a British commission to visit this camp, or other camps of the same type.

"Thirty-seven British prisoners were sent to a hospital under European management, but soon after their arrival the European doctors and attendants were driven away, and a fortnight later 22 of the prisoners died of neglect. Fifty prisoners who were captured at Kadia, when they arrived at the hospital in Aleppo, could hardly stand owing to weakness from dysentery and starvation."

TRAFFIC IN GIRLS

Cruiger Mystery in N. Y. Reveals Huge Business.

A New York despatch: Sensational allegations of a widespread traffic in girls in this city resulted yesterday in Police Commissioner Woods ordering a rigid investigation of the charges. His act followed the announcement that between 700 and 800 girls have disappeared from their homes here since Jan. 1.

This was the most important result thus far of the belated discovery by a woman lawyer and a private detective of the murder of Ruth Cruiger, 15-year-old high school student, months after the police had ended a superficial search for her.

"Dad, what's a man who runs an auto called?" "It depends on whether he is being called by his employer or by the man he has just missed."—Public.

NO GUN SUPPORT

And the German Airmen Are at Mercy of British Fliers.

(By R. T. Small, Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press).

British Headquarters in France, says: Because of the comparative quiet which reigns along the western front, German prisoners taken in nightly raids say they are being told anew that the Allied offensive is definitely ended. However, they have been told this since often now that they no longer believe what their officers say. From what officer prisoners say, there is palpable nervousness all along the German line as to where the British will strike next. These officers frankly say that they, as well as the higher command, thought the British, having chosen the Arras battlefield for the beginning of their offensive, would have to continue the fight there, and that preparations necessary to a modern offensive made it virtually impossible to shift the front of attack, once it had been selected.

There followed the attack on the Messines Ridge to upset this theory, however, so that now the Germans do not know just what to expect. Prisoners from the ranks say they have been told that the British attacks on the Messines Ridge were wholly repulsed, but that the truth is beginning to filter into the German army organization and to be appreciated at home, despite the efforts of the German press to conceal the fact and the significance of the British victory.

The Germans are still resorting to the use of dummy guns and dummy gun flashes, both in an attempt to conceal their real gun positions and to deceive the infantry as to the amount of the artillery support available. Many dummy guns were found during the German retreat from the Somme, and now more are being discovered in the Messines-Wytschaete area.

All the prisoners continue to dwell upon the feeling which exists between the German gunners and infantrymen. The gunners say the only reason they can offer for lack of artillery support for the infantrymen is that they are not given a sufficient quantity of ammunition. Their shooting, however, is inaccurate, due to badly-worn or otherwise defective weapons. They say that minor repairs to the guns are quickly made, but that more important work, such as the re-lining of barrels or the fixing of badly-damaged guns, has become a matter of months.

The British air tactics are continuing to have a most distressing effect on the German morale. This is strikingly portrayed in a captured letter, written by a soldier stationed opposite Ypres, to his brother in the German flying service.

"We have a very bad position here," says the letter. "The English play with us, so to speak. They fire continually with their machine guns and artillery. Their aim is to do what they like. Scarcely one of ours is to be seen, and if there are seven of ours and the English have five, ours bolt. There is never an air fight here, because our airmen always for the English airmen are ever behind our lines. One day we had a nice bombardment."

"All the dugouts were blown in, although they had concrete head covers a metre thick. This was due mainly to the work of the English airmen."

Spurred on apparently by the necessity of compelling with the British air force, a little more favorably, several German aeroplanes flew quite low over the British lines east of Messines two days ago and opened fire with machine guns. The experiment was hardly a success, however. Three of the machines were shot down.

SURPRISED HUNS IN EAST AFRICA

London cable: An official communication relating to operations in East Africa was made public to night, reading:

"On June 10 operations were begun by our forces at Lindi (a port of German East Africa) with the object of clearing the enemy from the shores of the estuary of the Rufiji River. After the fire of the warships a surprise landing was effected in the vicinity of Mtwaka in the estuary, and a German detachment, which for some time past had occupied the place and mounted a naval gun (Mtwaka), was driven to Mtwaka (Mtwaka), 23 miles to the southwest.

"On June 12 our patrols from the direction of Kilwa destroyed an enemy food supply depot at Utiani."

WELLMAN'S W. I.

The Wellman's W. I. held a special meeting on June 20th in Orange Hall. Miss Conover, of Brampton spoke very clearly on "Choosing foods and planning meals in war time," which was very instructive to all present. A question drawer brought out many helpful hints.

Miss Conover talked for 1 1/2 hours and received the rapt attention of over 75 patriots. Miss Maudie Bailey sang two Patriotic songs in her usual good voice accompanied by Miss Sylvia Dracup and Miss Clea Heath. Miss L. Thain gave a violin selection accompanied by Miss Hilda Reid.

Rev. and Mrs. S. F. Dixon were present and Mr. Dixon addressed the ladies for a short time, after which lunch was served. The National Anthem was sung also "God Save Our Men".

The July meeting will be held on July 14th at the home of Mrs. I. C. Sharr. Roll-call. Patriotic Quotations. Everybody welcome.

Mason's Melodies

When the German soldier walks, destruction like his shadow, stalks. He comes upon some old world town on which the ages have looked down, a town perhaps, whose crumbling walls were built by the ancient Gauls as a protection for their homes against the conqueror from Rome. All leg ended and gray with age—the German wrecks it in his rage, and strews the stonied buildings round, in blackened ruins, on the ground.

The grand cathedral, which appears, as it has done a thousand years, its noble steeple to the sky must in a heap of wreckage lie. Wherever German soldier wanders, all decent human feeling ends; should he advance or yet retire, he marks his path with death and fire. The Kaiser throws his men away: "Let them be slain, if they shall slay; advance, to ever great the loss and draw on me for one iron cross." This is the spirit of Red Bill. "What is the difference whom we kill, or what we ruin or deface, though we may shock the human race, so we have gained another trench, or foiled the British or the French?" This is the savage foe we'll meet—and batter till he owes defeat.—WALT MARON.

The Liberal Conservatives of the Provincial riding of East Northumberland and the Dominion riding of Northumberland met in annual meeting at Warkworth on Thursday afternoon last, and after electing officers passed a strong resolution in favour of the conscription measure introduced by Sir Robert Borden.

Troops Dig Up Mammoth

Excavating in the vicinity of the battered remnants of the Hindenburg line, British soldiers struck a strange object, which proved to be the tooth of a mammoth. The discovery caused great excitement among the troops, who flocked to the scene. The skeleton of this prehistoric monster now has been definitely located, and the gradual exposure of it is proceeding under a scientific party. It will be a decided novelty in natural history research, this unearthing of a mammoth in the very forefront of the world's war.

MURDER AT MARMORA

James Gallagher, a Well-Known Farmer of Marmora Township Killed—Samuel Rodgers Charged with Causing His Death

Samuel Rodgers, of Marmora township was lodged in the County Jail on Tuesday charged with having caused the death by assault of James Gallagher, of Marmora township. On Saturday afternoon the two men in company with a third, Edward Storey, were performing Statute labor on a road beat on the 8th concession of Marmora Tp. about five miles from Marmora village.

Mr. Gallagher was the roadmaster and Rodgers, who works for Hugh Farrell worked the latter's team. Storey, the only witness is described as not very keen intellectually. In Storey's evidence he said that Gallagher, who is a Roman Catholic and Rogers a Protestant were quarrelling over religion and that it began early in the day and continued until finally about four in the afternoon, Rogers is said to have struck Gallagher with a shovel. The blow was probably fatal. Rogers at once notified Farrell, who came and found the body lifeless. Dr. Thompson, of Marmora was summoned and after viewing the remains, notified the Coroner. A Jury was summoned and after the remains were viewed, they adjourned until Thursday, July 5th.

A brother of deceased had a warrant issued by Magistrate Hubbell, of Marmora and Rogers was placed in the lockup at Marmora.

On Tuesday morning he was brought up for preliminary hearing before Magistrate B. C. Hubbell and Wm. Bonter.
Mr. Carnew represented the Crown. A.
A. MacDonald of Marmora and W. D. M.
Storey of Belleville, the defence.

Three witnesses only were examined,
Hugh Farrell, Edward Storey and Dr.
Thompson.

Farrell testified that Rogers admitted to him that he had struck deceased with a shovel. On Wednesday Constable Tanner received instructions from County Crown Attorney Carnew, to have the body exhumed and a post mortem held by Dr. Crawford, assisted by Dr.
Thompson of Marmora.

The trial is held to-day in Town Hall, Marmora.

The Jurymen are:—Chas. Jones, Jas.
McAvoy, Jas. Wiley, Jas. Burns, John
Connors, John Downard, Jas. Downard, Ed. Flynn, John Lennon, Fred Blakely.

Address and Presentation

On Monday of last week a number of Miss Bessie Wallace's friends gathered at the school to wish her good-bye before leaving to spend her summer vacation at her home near Stirling. Mrs. Geo.

Bowen held the following address.

Dear Miss Wallace:—

We your friends in Beechmount feel that we cannot allow you to depart for your summer vacation without showing in some way how we have appreciated the friendship you have bestowed upon us. For two years you have been with us fulfilling your duty as teacher and a friend to all in the community. Therefore we ask you to accept this camera as a slight token of the esteem in which you are held by all your friends in the school section. We also wish you a very pleasant vacation and are very pleased to welcome you back to our midst again next year. Signed on behalf of your friends in Beechmount.

MRS. WM. PLUMLEY,

JOHN WATERS,

AILEEN VALLBAU.

Mrs. Plumley then presented Miss Wallace with a Camera. The latter though taken completely by surprise made a very suitable reply. Before returning to their homes all sang "God Save The King."

WEEKLY PAPERS WILL BE $1.50

Bay of Quinte Press Association So Decides At Its Annual Meeting At Trenton

That the weekly papers of the Bay of Quinte district, will be $1.50 per annum to subscribers was the decision arrived at by the publishers assembled at the Gilbert House, Trenton, on Friday afternoon, for the annual meeting of the Bay of Quinte Press Association.

In the absence of the President, Mr. E.
J. Pollard of Napanee, the Vice-President, Mr. A. E. Calman of Picton, occupied the chair.

The election of officers resulted as follows:—

Hon.-Pres.—Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell.
President.—A. E. Calman, Gazette, Picton.

Vice-Pres.—C. G. Young, Courier, Trenton.

Secy.-Treas.—J. O. Herity, Daily Ontario, Belleville.

Executive.—E. J. Pollard, The Express,
Napanee. O. M. Alger, The News,
Tweed. E. S. Bennett, The Leader,
Stirling.

It was decided to hold the next annual meeting at Picton.

Mr. A. R. Alloway, assistant general manager of the Canadian Press Association, was present and delivered a most convincing address on the question of increasing the price of weekly newspapers to $1.50 per annum.

Mr. Alloway contended that it would raise the paper, adopting the increase, in the estimation of the people. The public would regard it as only fair, in view of increases of cost and the rise in prices of all other commodities. The people are willing to pay a fair price for the home paper, they are familiar with. The local paper is like a friend of the family.

If there was an opposition paper in the same town that refused to adopt the increase people would not like to be seen going to the other office merely because the other paper was fifty cents cheaper.

Besides it was poor satisfaction to any publisher to get business in that way.

The obstacles in the way of increase mostly disappeared when the rate was adopted. One hundred and fifty weekly papers were already in the $1.50 field in the Province of Ontario. The testimony was heartily unanimous that it was pronounced success.

At the recent annual meeting of the Canadian Press Association in Toronto it was like a Methodist experience meeting to hear publishers one after another get up and tell of the benefits.

The Association of General Advertisers also endorsed the movement, believing it improved the quality of the paper and gave quality circulation.

Mr. Alloway read several letters indorsing the movement in the most enthusiastic manner, from publishers in Ontario.

At the conclusion of Mr. Alloway's address a spirited discussion took place among the publishers present. There was a consensus of opinion that the time for action was long overdue.

A resolution was proposed and unanimously carried that the plan to increase the subscription rate to $1.50 be approved and put into effect, Sept. 1st, 1917.

After several matters of a routine nature were disposed of the meeting adjourned.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

Sir Frederic paced up and down for another hour, then, parched with thirst, remembers the wine, and, going in, drinks a goblet with unsteady hand and feverish haste; then absent-mindedly he sinks into the chair in which Signa had been seated, and half-drowzes. There is no fear in his heart, though he knows that he is waiting for the man whose villainy he has unmasked, and whose wife he has sent away; he has passed beyond the range of all feeling save miserable despair.

The evening draws in; lights shine here and there in the windows of the village street; peasants drop in at the Mountain Grot, wearied with their day's work, to get their simple draught of wine and water. The landlady opens the door and looks into the sitting room, but thinking his strange guest has fallen asleep, retires again on tiptoe.

Presently there comes the sound of horses' hoofs down the paved street, and with an abruptness that brings the horse to his haunches, a clatter of hooves, Lord Delamere pulls up, who has been waiting behind the blind, comes into the passage, then shrinks from his task, and muttering: "He said he would wait and explain; let him do so!" Yes, he creeps discreetly out of sight.

Hector hastens through the little hall and opens the door of the room, suddenly, but gently.

"Well, Signa," he says, cheerfully, with an undertone of joyous relief, "I have come back, you see. Where are you? Why are you sitting in the dark? Standers is not so bad, after all. It is a sprain and I left him in good hands. Signa—for the silence suddenly frightens him—are you there? Are you asleep? Where are the lights?"

Hurriedly he takes his match-box from his pocket, and, striking a match, lights a candle, then, shading it with his hand, he turns round and sees—no Signa, but Frederic lying asleep in her chair.

For a moment he stands as if he were dreaming, and the candle almost drops from his hand; then he looks round the room eagerly, and without waiting to rouse the sleeper, darts upstairs into her room. She is not there. With a sudden, awful fear, which he chokes with a discordant laugh, he returns to the sitting-room, and, says to himself: "Frederic is not here! The sleeper awakens, and with startled eyes stares up at the dark, threatening ones glaring down at him, for a moment in a bewildered fashion, Lord Delamere's hand grasps him tighter.

"Wake up," he says, not roughly, but with deep intensity more ominous than any mere roughness. "Why are you here?"

Sir Frederic rises and confronts him, and even in that moment Lord Delamere notices the change that time and passion have wrought in the once self-satisfied countenance.

"You have returned then," says Sir Frederic, not yet quite in possession of his faculties.

"I am here, yes," retorts Lord Delamere, impatiently. "Answer my question; why are you here?—in this place?—in this room?"

"Take your hand from my shoulder," says Sir Frederic, gloomily.

Lord Delamere's hand drops, and he smiles darkly.

"Now, then," he says, "speak quickly. Why are you here?—what is your business?"

"I came to seek you. I followed you here," answers Sir Frederic, calmly, but with the calmness of a man wrangled in despair, and too careless of his danger to heed it.

"Well, you have sought and found me," says Hector, instantly. "And then, what did you come for?"

"I came to tell you that you were a villain," says Sir Frederic, "a cruel, heartless villain."

An awful smile crosses Lord Delamere's face.

"Could you not wait until I returned to England? Was it necessary to take so long a journey for such a purpose?" he says, with deep sarcasm. Then he starts, and looks at him closely.

"Was it to tell me only, or to tell another?" he asks. "Have you seen Sir Lady Delamere?"

"Yes, I have seen her," answers Sir Frederic, with a sigh.

"Where is she? Do you know where she is?" demands Lord Delamere, with a fierce haste.

"I have seen her, I know where she is," is the response, dogged and heavy.

Lord Delamere seizes him by the arm.

"You have seen her, you have followed her here, to pour some wild mad story in her ear!"

"I have come to tell her the truth, the truth of which I warned her the night you treated me like a dog and torn her from me."

Lord Delamere draws a long breath.

"The truth? What is it? No matter. Don't answer. Tell me, where is my wife?"

"Safe from your pursuit," says Sir Frederic, doggedly. "She has left you, Lord Delamere; she has taken the only course open to a pure-minded, innocent girl, when she finds that the man she has married is a villain who has deceived her. She has flown."

Hector rushes to the door with the look of a madman, then he pulls himself up and looks round, for there is an air of security and confidence about the words and tone of his foe that alarms him.

"So!" he breathes, "you have been here—how long? She left—when?"

One word! Pilot, madman, insane as you are, you would not be so mean as to allow her to go by herself!"

Almost madly he put the question, and with the same heavy manner Sir Frederic answers:

"Yes," he says, "she has gone alone. She would not permit me to accompany her."

"You!" echoes Lord Delamere, with a wild scorn that is like Sir Signa's. "You! You! You!"

"I am a gentleman and an honest man, Lord Delamere; you know that she would have been as safe with me as with any other man."

"Cease, you madman!" breaks in Lord Delamere, seizing him by the arm. "Do I not know that she would have rather died than have you with her—oh, my darling—but—oh, Heaven, send me calm sufficient to deal with the fact!" and his lips open with a wild prayer. "Now, listen to me. You say that she is beyond my pursuit. Whither have you sent her?"

"Answer me, or as there is a Heaven above us, I will wring the answer from your throat!" and, indeed, his hand waves in the air with an ominous motion.

"I am not afraid; you cannot awe me, Lord Delamere," says Sir Frederic, "I dread my man."

"Your man!"

"Yes, my coachman, to take her ladyship to Alletto; if he drives quickly and he will do so, he knows the road, and the horses were fresh—he will catch the night mail!"

Hector tears the watch out of his pocket, and with his hand to his head makes a rapid calculation.

"Oh, Heaven! it is too true!" he groans. "She will cross before I can reach her. Oh, fool, fool, to leave her alone and unprotected! I felt this all the while! Oh, Heaven! Oh, Heaven! if I had but stayed! Oh, my darling! my darling! and giving way to his emotion for a moment, he hides his face in his hands, quite forgetful of the tall, white-faced Sir Frederic. After a moment he recovers himself, and looks darkly at his companion—madly and wonderingly.

"You—madman!" he exclaims. "What wild story did you tell her? And to think that she should believe you—believe your simple word against my love and devotion! It is incredible! Am I, too, mad? I cannot believe it. By what witchcraft, what miserable art did you gain her ear and convince her?" he demands, with desperate intensity.

Sir Frederic flushes, then pales again.

"You are right. My bare word, though she knows I would not lie, was not enough. I brought proofs, Lord Delamere, absolute, irrefutable proofs of your crime."

"Crime!" he echoed it with a bewildered air. "Crime! But you said proofs! What proofs? Answer! If you knew that you were in peril of your life—that I can scarcely keep my hands from your throat, you would be more acute, Sir Frederic! Blye!"

"I am not afraid," he responds, doggedly. "I told you as before. I know I am dealing with a desperate, unscrupulous man; but I am utterly and completely indifferent. For myself I care nothing—it is of her—"

"Silence! You shall not speak of her!" exclaims Lord Delamere, sternly. "The proofs—the proofs by which you convinced her, you madman!"

"They were not far to seek; they were ready to my hand," replies Sir Frederic, coldly. "The girl you ruined, whose lover you shot, is here in this place. I had but to bring them to Hector; Signa had but to hear the miserable, cruel story from the victim's own lips—"

Lord Delamere interrupts him with a groan.

"Oh, Heaven! I see it all!" he says, striking his forehead, and leaning against the table. "I see it all! Oh, my poor darling, what you are suffering now! And alone, too—alone!" and more than once he hides his face in his hands.

There is silence broken only by the buzz and hum of the peasants chattering over their wine. Then Lord Delamere lifts his pale, haggard face, and looks sternly at his companion.

"Sir Frederic," he says, and his voice is stern and solemn, "this day you have done a wrong which, if there be any true manhood in you, will bring your death!"

Sir Frederic starts and glares at him.

"Wrong!" he says, hoarsely. "I have done my duty—my duty. I have unmasked a villain, and undecayed a pure, trusting woman."

"Not!" responds Lord Delamere, in an awful voice; "you have committed an error that, by its consequences, amounts to a crime."

"Error!" says Sir Frederic, panting. "Yes, you were you to judge? You elected yourself my judge; you tried me on a matter of life and death; you convicted me; you sentenced me without hearing both sides. For myself, I—I can bear the consequences of your mad injustice and malice; but she—oh, my darling, my tender-hearted girl, whom I have watched over as never father watched over daughter, husband over wife, you have broken her heart, and sent her into the world to tear her misery alone! Oh, Heaven! if there be any sense in you, any feeling of humanity, any capacity for remorse, you will wish that you had died before you did this day's work, bitter!"

White and trembling, Sir Frederic glares at him.

"What—what is this?" he demands, hoarsely. "Do you dare to tell me that it is not true?—that—"

"Look at me," retorts Lord Delamere, confronting him with flashing eyes, and with a face awful in its sternness and solemnity. "In this the face of a coward—an assassin! You mad fool! If you had but waited—if you had but met me man to man, instead of man to woman—I would have convinced you."

With an awful cry, Sir Frederic staggers against the table, and holds out one trembling hand, as if to put the wretched doubt away from him.

"No, no! It is true. You shall not deceive me!" he pants.

Then his voice changes to one of wild, piteous supplication:

"You dare to say it is not true? Prove it to me, prove it to me, and I will grovel at your feet like the cur you deem me!"

"And will that bring my darling back to me?" demands Hector, in a dry, harsh voice. "Will that atone for her broken heart? Though I stretched you dead at my feet, would that efface the agony you have made her endure—"

"Stop! stop! Spare me!" means Sir Frederic, looking like a reed before the hurricane. "For Heaven's sake, spare me! Oh, Heaven! what have I done?"

"You have broken a trusting woman's heart!" is the stern response. "You want proofs, you say, have them. Not proofs such as yours, but evidence so indisputable that your craven soul shall, indeed, grovel in the dust. Come with me, you madman!" and, with a wild gesture, he snatches the candle from the table and strides out.

Sir Frederic follows, trembling and awe-stricken.

CHAPTER XXXII.

There is a bright moon overhead, and as they step out into its rays, Lord Delamere flings the candle from him and strides into the road toward the fountain.

Sir Frederic looks at it and shudders. If—the girl's tale should be false, then—then he has, indeed, broken Signa's heart and wronged this man!

With white, working face, Lord Delamere, every step familiar to him, and stops pling before a small cottage within the churchyard boundary, he knocks gently.

"Where—where are we going?" asks Sir Frederic, faintly.

As to a man who knows the truth, and whose word even you dare not doubt," says Lord Delamere in a low, stern voice.

The house is quite still; no sound or light comes in answer to the summons.

Sir Frederic waits a moment, then he looks toward the chapel, from the windows of which streams of exquisite colored light are falling faintly on the grass and gleaming crosses of the churchyard.

"Follow me!" he says.

With bent head Sir Frederic follows. As they go along the narrow gravel path between the house and the chapel, a shadow comes into the light from the windows and follows. Too! It is a woman's figure; it is the girl Lucia!

Hector pauses a moment at the porch, and Sir Frederic comes up to his side. They stand in silence as the last strains of the organ accompanying the evening service die away upon the air, and Hector stands with his hand held as if the music and the solemn chant had come upon his troubled and tortured soul like healing from angels' wings. Then he lifts his head, as he does so, the light falls full upon it, and at the instant, with a low cry, the girl, who has been watching, springs before him and all upon her knees, with upstretched hands and with pleading, half-afraid, half-joyous face.

Hector starts and his face grows pale, then he says, gently:

"Lucia, you are here, then?"

"Yes, yes," she pants, "I am here! I have been waiting for you! Something told me you would come, and ah, Heaven! you are here!" and she clasps her hands wildly.

Gently, almost pitifully, he bends over her.

"Get up, Lucia! I want to speak to you. This gentleman—you have seen him before?"

She looks coldly, indifferently on Sir Frederic, and nods.

"Yes! How long you have been coming, Hector, I have seen you in my dream so often, and they told me that you would come, but when I woke—and, oh!—she breaks off, her tone of gentleness changing to one of fierce questioning—"It is not true what they say in the village?"

"What is not true, Lucia?" he says, in the same voice, the voice in which he would speak to a wayward child.

She laughs with light scorn.

"They said—Come near, he will hear!"

Humming her, he draws a little apart, and she stands on tiptoe to whisper.

"They said that I was not your wife, Hector, that—that you had another wife, that the beautiful girl at the fountain who would not let me touch her was your wife—she breaks off suddenly, alarmed, smitten with dread by a look in his eyes. "Tell me! Speak quickly!" she pants, in her swift

Italian. "It is false, is it not? Ah! it could not be true. You would not be so cruel, so false—ah!"

"Lucia," he says, gently, and Sir Frederic, as he hears the tone—the words—he could not understand the words, puts his hand to his head, bewildered. Is this man a master in the art of deceit? If this is not further proof—this meeting of these two and their manner—what is it? "Lucia," he says, "we will talk of that another time. Go now."

"Go, and you!"

"Go, and wait for me at the fountain; I will come to you directly. Go now, like a good child," and he puts his hand on her head soothingly.

Her head sinks on her bosom, but she obeys him. With a swift gesture, she snatches his hand to her lips, before he could have prevented her, and he wished to do so, and glides away.

Lord Delamere motions to Sir Frederic to remain where he is, and then he enters the chapel.

Sir Frederic sees her disappear in the light, and then turns away a few paces; as he does so, he feels a light touch upon his arm, and looking down, sees the girl at his side.

She waits a moment, looking steadily up into his face, her eyes gleaming darkly in the half-darkness; then she draws nearer, and whispers, in broken English:

"Mildred—that young girl—she who listened at the fountain, and snatched her hand from poor Lucia, who is she?"

Sir Frederic hesitates; then he says, slowly, coldly:

"That lady was Lady Delamere, sent—"

"Mildred Do-lamere!" she echoes. "Then it was my Hector's sister?"

Sir Frederic shakes his head.

"No; the lady was his wife. Why do you ask?"

"His wife? His!" pointing in the direction of the porch.

"Yes," he says, bewildered, his mind in a whirl. "Why do you ask? You have asked me a question; will you answer mine; do you understand me?"

She does not reply, does not seem to understand or even hear him; her lips, half-parted, murmur the words: "Wife—wife." In a dazed tone, as if she were trying to realize it.

"Why do you ask?" he says, touching her arm to recall her.

She shakes his hand off in a dull, heavy sort of way, and still murmurs: "Wife," glides slowly from his side.

With his hand to his brow, Sir Frederic turns to the porch.

What is this mystery which, even at the moment of its promised solution, thickens and becomes more inscrutable?

Steps are heard on the walk. It is Lord Delamere. Beside him is the priest, his beautifully plaid face, with snow-white hair inflaming it, looks angelically serene beside the dark, haggard one beside it.

Seeing Sir Frederic, he touches Hector on the arm. Hector looks up.

"My trial—the man of whom I spoke," he explains.

BEST TREE FELLERS.

Beavers Are More Expert Than the Best Lumberjacks.

The most expert lumber jack is inferior to the beaver as a tree feller. He cuts down trees in the most scientific way. He can fell a tree so it will fall toward the pond where he wishes to construct his home, thus saving himself unnecessary work.

After the trees are felled the construction work begins. He works chiefly by night, for he is a nocturnal prowler. The moon is his lantern, the quiet of the night his inspiration, his sharp teeth are his hatchet and chisel, and his little paws are his means of conveyance, his spade, his hammer and his trowel. His hard, flat, hairless and scaly tail is a propeller when swimming and a balance when he is cutting timber, or he stands on his hind legs when gnawing down trees.

The beaver is a strict vegetarian, and his diet consists chiefly of barks, tender shoots and water plants.

To flood low grounds the beavers sometimes have to build a dam exceeding fifty feet in length. They usually lay it out with the curve facing upstream. The foundation is built of poles four or five feet long by an inch or two thick. These they lay crosswise, filling all crevices with mud.

The beaver digs up mud with his fore feet, then holds it close to his breast with his fore legs, swims to where he has started his dam, and having deposited it in its proper place, beats the mud down with his paws—not with his tail, as has been believed.—St. Nicholas.

JOINTS.

A joint or articulation may be defined as the connecting point or surface of two or more bones of the body. Contrary to the common notion, any of the bones so connected may be movable, as is the case, for example, with the articulations of the various bones of the skull. In this class of articulation the structure of the joint is, naturally, much simpler than is the case of the movable joints.

A joint, when movable, may have a free or a limited range of movement. One of the freest of the joints is that at the shoulder, while the most limited are to be found among certain of the vertebrae.

The part of the bone which is concerned in the construction of the joint is called its articular surface, and is covered by a layer of smooth, silvery gristle or cartilage. This smooth layer assists greatly in the free working of the ends of the bones upon each other. The bones which are joined in the articulation are tied together by extremely tough and flexible strings and bands of fibrous tissue, called ligaments. In all normal action of the joint these ligaments allow of sufficient movement, but prevent it becoming excessive, unless enough external force is applied to overcome their resistance. In such a case we have a joint injury, either a ruptured ligament or a displacement of the ends of the bones—a dislocation.

The freely movable joints have a delicate lining of membrane covering them, forming their inner boundary, and this, known as the synovial membrane, secretes into the interior of the joint which it covers a whitish liquid, which acts as a lubricant of the surface of the bones of the joint, and, in a healthy subject, is absorbed at the same rate as it is secreted.

All the joints need a supply of blood to keep them healthy, and a number of capillary vessels are involved in their construction.

As the various joints are constantly being used, and, used violently, injuries to them are far more common. Fracture, dislocation, sprain and injury from the entry of some foreign body, such as a bullet, are the most usual of these injuries. The first sign visible is usually swelling, due to an increase in the synovial fluid or to blood from torn vessels. Where there is tearing or stretching of the ligaments the swelling is usually due to the former fluid, and the condition is known as synovitis. Synovitis, however, which means inflammation of the synovial membrane, very rarely occurs alone, and almost always some other part of the joint is involved; either the ligaments are injured or the articular cartilage is affected—as in the rheumatic diseases. These, together with other microbic diseases, are responsible for a great deal of joint trouble.

INFECTION AND RESPONSIBILITY.

A great amount of sickness and mortality might be prevented if people could be induced to take a more serious view of their responsibilities towards the public. It should be realized that to travel or to allow another person to travel or to go into any place where there is an assemblage of people whilst suspected of suffering from an infectious illness is an anti-social act. So, too, it is the duty of any one knowing himself to be dangerous to others, a consumptive person, for instance, to take every possible precaution; so that at least he may not be the means of bringing other people into his own state of ill-health. Selfishness is hardly a strong enough expression to apply to the conduct of those who knowingly risk the health of others through carelessness or inattention.

THE COOKING OF ARTICHOKE.

I mentioned last week the fact that one of the most useful substitutes for the potato is the tuber known as the Jerusalem artichoke. This vegetable is one of the easiest to grow, being much more vigorous and hardy than the potato. It stands frost, no matter how severe, and can hold its own in soil where the potato would either fade or prove almost fruitless. It is also very easy to cook, and its flavor, although at first it may seem a little peculiar to some, yet generally is much appreciated by the cultivated palate. Perhaps the simplest method of cooking consists in placing them in boiling water, to which a little salt has been added, and allowing them to boil until they are sufficiently tender for a fork to be passed through them. Strain and pile on a dish. A little melted butter poured over them improves them. The time generally required for cooking is about 20 minutes. If they are cooked too long they will become blackened.

The Real "War Bread"

"must contain the entire wheat grain—not the white flour center—but every particle of gluten and mineral salts—also the outer bran coat that is so useful in keeping the bowels healthy and active. Shredded Wheat Biscuit is the real "war bread" because it is 100 per cent. whole wheat prepared in a digestible form. Contains no yeast, baking powder, seasoning, or chemicals of any kind. Food conservation begins with Shredded Wheat Biscuit for breakfast and ends with Shredded Wheat Biscuit for supper. Delicious with sliced bananas, berries, or other fruits. Made in Canada.

Parboiled and then fried in boiling dripping, they have a most delicious and attractive quality. In this way they can either be served as a vegetable, with the dinner, instead of potatoes, or as a separate savoury. They can also be cut in slices and fried briskly for about ten minutes, without being boiled first. They should be piled on a dish when cooked, and a little salt sprinkled over them.

Boiled until tender, then thoroughly strained, to remove all water, they can be placed in a saucepan and beaten up with salt, pepper, and a little milk or butter.

Chinese Locksmiths.

The earliest locks known to man were of Chinese make. Although it is impossible to tell the exact date of those still extant, they are wonderfully well made and as strong as any manufactured in Europe up to the middle of the eighteenth century. The Chinese locksmith of to-day uses exactly the same kind of tools that his forefathers had, for they are very simple and primitive. He carries all his implements in two cabinets, sitting on one and working at the other. When he has finished all the work available in one neighborhood, he fastens the two cabinets to a bamboo rod and slings it over his shoulder. He tramps through the towns burdened in this way and stops when he is called, much as a scissor grinder or umbrella mender does in our country.—Wide World Magazine.

CANADIAN COMPARATIVE GRAIN STATISTICS.

Quantity of wheat and other grain in store at terminal elevators, interior terminal elevators and public elevators in the east on June 1, 1917, with comparisons for three years.

Her Waist.

Yet sometimes the "nips in" is pretended. There is much leeway as to its position. But mostly it stays where it really belongs. It may be swathed in leather-bossed, laced, or simply suggested by lace.

BABY'S OWN TABLETS OF GREAT VALUE

Mrs. J. A. Lagace, Ste. Perpetue, Que., writes: "Baby's Own Tablets have been of great value to me and I would strongly recommend them to other mothers." Thousands of other mothers say the same thing. They have become convinced through actual use of the Tablets that nothing can equal them in regulating the bowels and stomach; driving out constipation and indigestion; breaking up colds and simple fevers; the pelting worms and curing colic.

The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Worth Knowing.

All rubbing and wringing by twisting is harmful when washing woolens; be sure to rinse out all the soap-suds.

A chicken for broiling should be wrapped in a buttered paper bag. This will keep the meat moist and retain flavor.

The stove with a red top will have a cool oven.

Never mix any salad with dressing until you are ready to use it.

A very practical way to finish a floor is to paint it with linseed oil.

A boot tree is an excellent thing to use when darning a stocking. It helps in shaping the darning to the foot.

Paper bag cookery is peculiarly suitable for fish. They are much more delicious when cooked by this method.

When boiling eggs, always have the water boiling when the eggs are put in, and then boil them for two minutes.

Jelly bags, pudding cloths and strainer cloths should be thrown into clear, warm water immediately after using.

Sleeve Vagaries.

Cuffed or cuffed. Tight or of a looseness. Long or brief to shoulders. King-of-the-hill or king-of-the-hill. Rolled or bloused at the wrist. In fact, anything a "fit" but long-sleeved.

"Redpath" stands for sugar quality that is the result of modern equipment and methods, backed by 60 years experience and a determination to produce nothing unworthy of the name "REDPATH."

"Let Redpath Sweeten it."

Poor Outlook for Apple Crop

Not over a fifty per cent. crop in the best sections, and a practical failure in some sections is how the apple situation looks in Ontario, at least outside of Prince Edward County. In Prince Edward County a fair crop is promised, but everywhere else is from a half crop to almost none at all. W. H. Gibson, the big apple grower in Newcastle district, counts on a fifty per cent. crop; at Whitby Demonstration Orchard the same is looked for; Lambton, Norfolk, Brant, Collingwood, and Toronto to Hamilton districts are all light. York County has very few early apples; while in Peel, the reverse is the case. Bensappart to have the least bloom of all, while Starks give the best promise. There will be few Spies, Baldwins or Greenings.

WEED OUT THE MALE BIRDS

(Experimental Farm Notes)

The worker bees put their house in order by killing off all the male bees as soon as their services are no longer required. What a great benefit it would be to the poultry producer and the poultry product consumer if the hens of the flock would likewise dispose of the male birds in those flocks that are indifferently managed. The worker bee permits no star boarder to loaf around and consume the product of her labour. The hen is not like the bee in asserting her rights. If she were, then her verdict would be, "Rooster you must die!"

There are over two million five hundred thousand roosters of the various breeds of chickens kept for breeding purposes by the people of our country. Of this vast army perhaps one hundred and fifty thousand have a right to live for another year of service. One hundred and fifty thousand may be good enough as individuals and in breeding to be used in the increase of their kind. What of the two million three hundred and fifty thousand that are usually permitted to live, birds that consume feed, worry the hens and reduce the quality of market eggs?

The function of the rooster is to develop and distribute germ cells, during a short period of three months, February, March and April. These germ cells should be distributed only to such egg-laying individuals as are desired to perpetuate the breed. The germ cell is a living organism capable of starting a chain of development and here is where the mischief lies if they are distributed where they do not serve their proper function in race perpetuation.

The function of the modern hen is to produce eggs, ten percent of which may be desired for the increase of the breed and the remaining ninety percent for human food. Nine eggs are used for human food where but one is used for hatching. Only one-tenth of the eggs that a hen lays require fertilization. Why fertilize the nine-tenths of the product that is used for human food? The addition of a living germ cell to an egg that is produced for human food does not add anything to its value and may set up a chain of embryo development that will make the egg quite unfit for human food.

Eggs gathered from flocks where the roosters are permitted to run after the hatching season is over, are not desirable for storage. They are not desirable in the pantry during periods of warm weather as high temperatures will start incubation. Eggs in the first stage of decay are not desirable for human food.

It is an easy matter to prevent the fertilization of eggs. If the male bird is just an ordinary one an axe and a block of wood will prevent further mischief. If the male bird is possessed of such merit as would warrant his being boarded for a year to be used in the next season's breeding operations, then give him an enclosure of his own and see that he stays in it.

The cost of the feed consumed by an ordinary rooster is about twenty cents per month. Can you afford it? If you keep poultry with profit as your object, can you afford to keep a star boarder for nine months and perhaps have him doing mischief all the time?

The two million, three hundred and fifty thousand odd, unnecessary male birds are costing the country about three and a half million dollars per year while enjoying life. These unnecessary birds are at the same time doing about ten million dollars damage to the egg-producing business. If every person owning a rooster would manage him as a male bird should be managed the poultry industry would be benefited by additional profits many million of dollars.

Amulets and Mascots.

"In respect to belief in magic, witchcraft, and the use of amulets and mascots, the war has occasioned a retrograde movement of two hundred years, and shown that the coating of refinement was very superficial," said Mr. Edward Lovett in a recent lecture at the Horniman Museum, Forest Hill, H. He attributed to the introduction of motorizing, with its dangers, a revival in the belief in charms before the war. As to the effect of the war, he instanced that a child's caul, esteemed a safeguard against drowning, which a little over two years ago could have been bought for two shillings, recently sold for two pounds ten shillings—the increased price being due to the submarine. Nearly every man now fighting carried a mascot, usually beneath the clothing. In the case of these were generally of a religious character; the others were charms of substitution—the small image to divert the evil eye; the charms of "inoculation," such as fragments of enemy shell and symbolic amulets. Referring to the wooden statue of Hindenburg raised by the Germans and the driving into it of nails, he said it is remarkable that the Germans, great students of folk-lore, should be doing in such a case that which, according to folk-lore, was certain to bring the subjects to a disastrous end.

Peat in Dominion.

From 140,000 acres of peat recently discovered in one district in Canada it is estimated that 115,000,000 tons of fuel could be procured. Deposits of peat in Montreal and Ontario districts are said to be capable of yielding 50,000,000 tons.

"Indian Red."

Dogwood was the source of the "Indian red" with which the warriors at one period dyed their eagle feathers and buckskin clothes. They procured the dye from the roots of the tree.

FAME IN A FEW WORDS.

Authors Who Are Now Known Only by a Single Word or Passage.

Philip James Bailey wrote "Festus" when he was twenty-three and lived to be eighty-six without adding appreciably to his early laurels. His "Festus" was compared by enthusiastic admirers to the works of Shakespeare and Goethe. No one reads "Festus" now, but its memory survives in one familiar quotation, a one time favorite for use in eulogistic albums: We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths; in feelings, not in figures on a dial. We should count time by heart throbs. He most lives Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

Bailey is very far from being the only author to live in men's minds by virtue of a single line, stanza or passage. It is a narrow margin by which to escape oblivion, but it serves. True, it is not the writer himself that is remembered, but as long as some spark from his brain still glimmers he is not totally dead. It may be a line from a song, "Meet me by moonlight alone" and "Don't you remember sweet Alice, Ben Bolt?" are repeated as catchwords by thousands who never heard of J. Augustus Wade or Thomas Dunn English. Very often, however, the lines that survive are of high literary value. Theodore O'Hara, soldier of fortune, wrote:

On fame's eternal camping ground Their tents are spread, And glory guards with solemn round The bivouac of the dead.

By these four lines he won for himself admission to the eternal camping ground of poetry.

William Knox, a Scotch versifier (1789-1825), owes his fragmentary survival not so much to any great poetic merit in his mortuary couplets as to the endorsement of Abraham Lincoln, who loved to repeat:

O, why should the spirit of mortal be proud? Like a fast-fitting meteor, a fast-flying cloud, A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave, He passes from life to rest in the grave.

The services throughout the parish of Stirling and Frankford were well attended on June 24th. It is a day that will not soon be forgotten. There were 19 candidates presented for Confirmation and 3 for Baptism. The sermons delivered by His Lordship Dr. Bidwell were of a most impressive nature setting forth the value of the apostolic ordinance from the days of the apostles onward and finally his charge to those who were to receive the blessings from "the laying on of hands". The Surprised Choir added to the beauty of the service and the singing was excellent.

Talented Violinist

The Concert given on Tuesday evening in Stirling Opera House, by Miss Isolde Menges, one of the finest Violinists in the world, was the most delightful treat in violin music we have ever heard. Everyone present appreciated the great artist. Her tone is excellent and she fingers and bows with great skill. The entertainment was a rare treat to music lovers and Miss Menges was applauded again and again. Her technique was perfect and every number was listened to with rapt attention. Miss Menges concert will long be remembered in Stirling.

Address And Presentation

On June 22nd, the pupils of S.S. No. 3 Rawdon presented their teacher, Miss McAdam with a silver bread plate. A number of friends were present and although Miss McAdam was completely surprised she expressed her appreciation in a few well chosen words. The following is the address:—

Dear Miss McAdam,

We, the pupils of S.S. No. 3 having learned with regret that our relationship as teacher and pupils is soon to be severed wish to express to you our appreciation for the faithful service you have rendered to each of our pupils.

At times you have found us very trying but you always showed a Christian spirit. Your ever willing assistance, your kindness and your bright and cheerful manner have endeared yourself to the hearts of us all.

Will you kindly accept this little token as a slight expression of the esteem we have for you, and whenever you have occasion to use it may you recall kindest thoughts and memories of the two years spent among the pupils of Allen School.

Signed on behalf of the school,
KATIE REYNOLDS,

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON II. July 8, 1917.

Ahaz, the Faithless King.—2 Chronicles 28:1-17.

COMMENTARY.—I. Wickedness of Ahaz (vs. 1-4).

1. Ahaz.—The twelfth ruler of the kingdom of Judah. He succeeded his father, Jotham, on the throne. Being twenty years old when he began to reign, he was old enough to have observed the character of his father's administration, and to have profited by it, but evidently he paid no heed to it. He did not that which was right in the sight of the Lord—Ahaz was the most wicked king Judah had up to this time. He seems to have searched out ways in which he might sin against God. Like David—David is referred to as an example of faithfulness and integrity. Although he at times committed grievous sins he heartily and deeply repented and was restored to the divine favor.

2. The ways of the king.—The character and doing of Ahaz were like those of the kings of Israel, who followed the evil example of Jeroboam.

3. To his record.—The author of Kings devotes one chapter (18), and the author of some new matter, and also some matter common to both. Both of his historians give his history in the philosophic order.

4. His great sins.—The first, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

5. His great sin.—The second, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

6. His great sin.—The third, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

7. His great sin.—The fourth, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

8. His great sin.—The fifth, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

9. His great sin.—The sixth, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

10. His great sin.—The seventh, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

11. His great sin.—The eighth, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

12. His great sin.—The ninth, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

13. His great sin.—The tenth, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

14. His great sin.—The eleventh, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

15. His great sin.—The twelfth, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

16. His great sin.—The thirteenth, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

17. His great sin.—The fourteenth, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

18. His great sin.—The fifteenth, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

19. His great sin.—The sixteenth, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

20. His great sin.—The seventeenth, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

21. His great sin.—The eighteenth, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

22. His great sin.—The nineteenth, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

23. His great sin.—The twentieth, his great sin, was the destruction of his defense armies, the exhaustion of his treasury by foreign exactions; the bringing of Judah into and making her naked against the Lord.

FEEDS AND FERTILIZERS

The Latest in Science, The Best in Practice

CHEMICAL ANALYSIS OF SOIL

NOT A SURE GUIDE TO FERTILIZER REQUIREMENTS.

Contrary to the common opinion that chemical analysis of a soil reveals facts leading to its immediate treatment with respect to the nutrients in it, a test is not a sufficient guide to land treatment.

When a chemist tells how much nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium a soil contains, nothing definite is offered the landowner that will aid him in fertilizing the soil, because no chemical compound has the same capacity to extract plant food from the soil as that of living plant tissues.

In which plant food is locked up in unavailable form, and then it gradually and slowly made soluble as plants need it. Waste of plant food is prevented in this way, for if all of it were available it would have been leached out of the soil ages ago.

Granite rocks by chemical test show a high content of potassium, but this element is firmly held in complex combination that plants cannot utilize it. Beds of phosphate rock contain immense stores of phosphorus, but before such rocks are rich in nitrogen, and hence are of little value.

The addition of organic matter, as manure, crop residues and green manuring crops, is necessary before such land can be most productive.

Total plant food in a soil is shown by chemical test, but the amount available is not so determined. Soils differ in their degree of availability of fertility elements, and plants vary in their needs and in their ability to use plant food in the soil. A field test is necessary to determine fertility needs of a soil and crop. The previous treatment of the land has more to do with its present condition than its chemical composition.

PRICES ARE GOOD—WHY NOT RAISE A FALL LITTER OF PIGS?

The present high prices for pigs should be an inducement to farmers to raise two litters of pigs this year. Many farmers, we know, claim that they cannot profitably raise two litters of pigs a year; that the fall litter is more trouble than it is worth, and that it is a heavy drain upon the sow. But this is not so.

While a pig is a very great transgressor, he is also a very great sufferer. He received repeated chastisement from the hand of the Lord. He was literally devoid of true religion. Not one redeeming feature is found that can be placed to his credit.

While Ahaz was a very great transgressor, he was also a very great sufferer. He received repeated chastisement from the hand of the Lord. He was literally devoid of true religion. Not one redeeming feature is found that can be placed to his credit.

AN EXCURSION.

(By the late Rev. H. T. Miller.)

Come, sleep, and keep mine eyelids down; thy wings are soft, thy lips are softer still. Cry hush to this suburban strife, and let me take the hand of the chosen one—chosen not by me, but accepted with that secret impulse of approval which asks for nothing more, and no one else. We will sail away from the heat of the sun, and to the favoring gale, and fear no hidden rocks, no treacherous shoal, or silent whirl which slips into the mind like a reptile moving on the sand.

With a pure career, a bark with my sister's spirit. How lofty the air, how wide the horizon; how large the vision; how sublime the aim. Oh, the conscious bond that binds us to the Absolute, sustaining Life! This life paints the flower, gives song to the bird; it nerves the spirit, sustains the climb of great ones, whose humility is measured only by their loftiness, and whose grandeur is measured only by their lowliness.

Here we reach the fountain-head of life, and drink and are enlarged; here we are in touch with the energy of the angels' wings, the springs of thought, of life, of soul, of being, without measurement and without end.

Sweet spirit, pure and free, let us leave behind the authority of man and his ways and traditions. Let the morning light enlarge us, let the felt presence enrich, enoble us, add to our youthful virtue; claims that do not hinder, honors that do not depress, studies that do not confuse. Oh, the light that does not blind, oh, gleam that leads not astray, oh, company that exalts, employs that enlarges, vision that gives mountain tops, clad in the purest snow, warm with life, and beautiful with love. Fairer than the fairest creation we enjoyed in the grey paths of time.

Deans, archipelagos, constellations, star on star, millions of worlds piled on millions, yet throbbing with common energy governed by the one central mind, design, air, and end, all comprehended within the circle of the all-sustaining, limitless, unnameable One!

There is grandeur in repose, the sleep of infants, the rest of God! His serenity is life; His smile is liberty; His joy is boundless. We will inhale the air of the intuitional, eat more than angels' food, have delicacies delightful, exquisitely complete. We will grasp truths at first hand, and tremble with emotions that throb from the very heart of God.

What touch is that? Is it the herald of the dawn, Awake, thou that sleepest! Watchman, what of the night? The morning cometh!

A RUNAWAY HORSE.

Use Your Hat and Your Head and You Can Stop Him.

The observer of people and events wonders how many people have the slightest notion as to how to stop a runaway horse. An old farmer in an adjacent state was coming home the other morning when he heard a terrific commotion behind him, and when he turned, saw a horse racing toward him in a frenzy of fear. In the spring wagon was a little boy of six or seven, and behind the awning vehicle was a gray haired man—evidently the child's grandfather—chasing the runaway.

In an instant the farmer was out in the middle of the road with his hat whisked off his head, both arms gyrating in wide circles. The hat did the work, for the farmer told folks afterward that his mother had told him that a horse would always stop at the sight of a hat being whirled directly in front of it. The animal came to a stop within a few inches of the farmer, who stood his ground. It was the work of a few seconds to calm the quivering animal, and soon the grandfather came up. He threw his arm around the rescuer and fairly wept for joy.

Next time you see a runaway Dobbin coming your way don't forget to use your hat and your head.—Columbus Despatch.

The Elusive Rhyme.

I sought a word I hoped to rhyme With childhood's happy laughter, I followed on an endless time Pursuing closely after.

I searched my books by day and night, And lexicons I treasure, But there I found no word that might Attune the dulcify measure.

Till, wearied of my fruitless quest, I came away to wander Where Nature sings and songbirds nest, By lanes and woodlands yonder.

Ah, lexicons and books are chaff! There where my quarry found me—The rhymes for Childhood's silvery laugh Were singing all around me!

John D. Wells.

Spanish at Saloniki.

Saloniki contains a large number of Spanish speaking inhabitants, not very surprising perhaps in a mongrel city of the near east, but explained by the fact that large numbers of Spanish Jews exiled some centuries ago, took refuge there and carried their language. Another part of the world in which the Spanish type is outstanding is the high plateau of Colombia. Its inhabitants are a vigorous people, noticeably of Semitic stamp, and successful commercially.

SUNDAY AT HOME

LOVE AND HOME.

No place, house or cot can make a home; Home must be made by love, and love alone.

Love can build sanctuaries in deserts bare, Raise homes of peace and hope and love; Sweet homes of freedom, where the worn may rest, Safe as a babe upon its mother's breast.

Love is the mainspring; love, and love alone, Supplies the sweets of life, the joyful tone has been officially tested three times—at the age of 2 years she made a record of 21 lbs.—at the age of 3 years she increased her record to 32½ and at the age of 4 years made the world's record for her age, of 46.84 lbs.

This record breaking heifer has been milked ever since she started to give milk the first time with an "Empire" and with each test she has bettered her previous record, which proves conclusively that the most valuable cows can be and are being milked with an Empire machine.

G. A. Brethen, Norwood, officially tested a three-year-old that milked 103.3 milk per day, 33 lbs. butter 7 days. This is another Canadian Record for age. Mr. Brethen is greatly enthused over the testing with his Empire Milker.

Oshawa Likely To Separate

The town of Oshawa proposes to separate from the County, because it felt it was being mulcted too heavily by the representatives of the other municipalities in the county council. The ratepayers have voted to separate, and a meeting was held at Whitby recently between committees of town and county to arrange the basis of separation which if not agreed to mutually, will be settled by arbitration. The county's representatives thought separation would be arranged on the basis of the town's population, which is 19 per cent., but that set forth it must be by assessment by which Oshawa will pay only 14 per cent on certain expenditures. A strong appeal was made to Oshawa to remain in the county. Mayor Conant said the town would not longer stand for the knifing tactics that had been adopted. Possibly a fixed basis for the five years might lead the town to reconsider.

INDUCES GOV'T. TO BUILD ROAD

Robt. Cook, M. P. P. the Popular Member for North Hastings Still Working in the Interest of Good Roads Through Hastings County.

(From North Hastings Review)

The St. Lawrence street road, which runs through Madoc Village, on account of the nature of the locality and the heavy traffic to and from the station, has been very costly to the county and also very unsatisfactory to the travelling public.

In 1913-14 and 15 the county appropriations for the village roads were spent on this road, and also a sum of $380, and yet in the fall of 1916 the road was almost impassable. Seeing the difficulty of keeping this road in a satisfactory condition, our Reeve, T. H. Thompson at the January session of this year introduced a resolution moved by himself and seconded by J. A. Gunter, that a committee composed of Messrs J. A. Moore, Chairman of roads and Bridges; H. Blecker, Superintendent of Roads; R. R. Coulter, Chairman of Finance; Sin Fox, Reeve of Madoc Tp.; Henry Kells, Deputy Reeve of Madoc Tp. be appointed and invested with full powers to inspect this road and act thereon. This committee requested the Department of Public Highways to send an engineer to deliberate with them as to the best way of dealing with this section of the county road. The Department sent Mr. Hogarth, chief engineer for the province. Mr. Hogarth, after inspection of the roadbed, and after learning the volume of the traffic and the heavy loads to which it was subjected, advised the construction of a water-bound Macadam. A road of this character would cost about $7000 and even then he would not guarantee its permanency.

On receiving this report the County Council referred the whole matter back to the committee with instructions to build a road with a view to permanency on condition that the Government assume 60% of the cost of it.

Acting on these instructions the committee appointed a sub-committee consisting of Messrs. T. H. Thompson, James Moore, H. Blecker, to interview the Department of Public Highways. This committee, together with the local member, Robert Cook, M. L. A., succeeded in getting the Department to assume the whole responsibility of the construction of the road—the County to pay 40% of the cost.

It is the intention of the Department to build a water-bound Macadam road a mile long due east from the station; the road to be built by the Govt. under the instructions of a departmental engineer. The idea of Government is to build a permanent road, a road that will serve as a demonstration road for the building of other roads in the county.

There is a report in circulation to the effect that an improved road is about to be built from Maynooth to connect with the proposed trunk line running from Toronto to Montreal.

The thanks of the Village and the County are due to Mr. Cook, M. L. A. of North Hastings who is sparing neither time nor means in an effort to bring about better means of transportation for his constituents and the county as a whole.

HYMENEAL

On Wednesday evening July 4th at 7.30, at the home of Mrs. Henry Leonard, Henry St., was the scene of a quiet but pretty wedding. Martha Ellen Leonard of Stirling was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to William Arthur Couch, of Harolds.

The bride, who was given away by her brother John, looked charming in her gown of white. Duchess satin with pearl trimmings, Tulle Veil and orange blossoms and wore the groom's gift, a handsome watch bracelet. She also carried a bouquet of white carnations and maiden hair fern.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. B. F. Byers, in company of about 20 guests, after which all partook of the wedding supper, which was served on the lawn.

The happy couple motored to Brantford. The bride's travelling suit was green poplin and large picture Panama hat.

The many numerous and costly gifts show the great esteem in which the bride and groom were held.

It has been necessary this spring, owing to the cold weather in Scotland, to feed the lambs on whiskey and milk. Deep sighs will now be heard from some men that they are not lambs in Scotland.

Sheep raising ought to be very profitable this year, with wool at 50c. to 60c. per lb.; spring lambs $15 to $18; yearlings at $11.50 to $13 and older ones at $8 to $10 each.

FOSTER-MONTGOMERY

A quite but very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Montgomery, Rawdon, Wednesday morning June the 27th, when their eldest daughter Flossie was united in marriage to Harold Foster, Sidney. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. T. Hall in the presence of the near relatives of the contracting parties.

The bride prettily gowned in white silk entered the parlor with her father at ten o'clock to the strains of the Wedding March, and took her place under the wedding bell. Mrs. Cameron Montgomery, in white silk, acted as matron of honor, and the groom was assisted by Mr. Cameron Montgomery.

After congratulations were received, and the wedding breakfast served, Mr. and Mrs. Foster motored to Ivanhoe where they took the train for Ottawa.

The many valuable and useful presents which the bride received testify to the high esteem in which the young couple are held, and the best wishes of Mrs. Foster's large circle of relatives and friends follow them to their new home.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION

A few of Miss Flossie Montgomery's many friends gathered at her home on the evening of June the 25th, and presented her with the following address:—

MISS FLOSSIE MONTGOMERY

Dear Flossie:—

Having learned that you are soon to depart from our midst we feel it our duty to show you in some tangible way the high esteem in which you are held.

As you have been a resident of our neighborhood up to the present time and have taken an active part in all social functions and your kind disposition has won for you many warm and lasting friends.

We ask you to accept these gifts as small tokens of the many sincere friends you leave here.

We fully realize that—True friendship is a sacred thing
Not to be bought or sold
And to possess a friend like you
Is worth far more than gold.
May health and happiness be yours
And sunshine light your way
And may it be as bright as on Your happy wedding day.

Signed on behalf of your many friends,
KATE SELL, KATHLEEN LAMGAN.

On the Road in France

(By U. S. C.)

The battalion sat down at the roadside, waiting to be packed off to its allotted barracks and lots, and as it sat there the good people came out, at once, with jugs of water and milk and even beer, though this last British discipline forbade us to touch. The soldiers in their turn offered cigarettes, and began to talk in that pleasant French which has become famous and current everywhere between Havre and Fribourg. Already, as we sat waiting by the roadside, before we were in our billets, the village and the battalion were on good terms.

The peasant of that part is known to be a thrifty race. It is, then, the more noticeable that every family of that village treated the British soldiers as if they had been their own sons and brothers. But the generousity was not all on one side. In their spare time the soldiers were very ready to do any work that they could about the cottages and farms, the work that the sons and brothers now with the army of France once did. So it was no uncommon thing to see them busy peeling potatoes, or sawing wood, or helping (with great enthusiasm) to put refractory pigs into carts. In a little they were as much part of the daily life of that village as they had lived there for years, and they would suddenly march out of it one day just as they had marched in.

While the men were so employed, the officers were making friends with the cure. At first he was shy of English officers, believing them to be uncultured barbarians, with a taste for horseplay, but he ended by inviting them to his house, where they were subject from religion to political economy was discussed over a bottle of Quinquina Dubonnet. There were duties, too, that fell unexpectedly upon the officers, as a result of the battalion's more difficult work than getting mischievous pigs into carts. One em-barrased officer found himself at the task of translating a proposal of marriage from a wounded English soldier to a publican's daughter, and of taking down a favorable reply.

It so chanced that one afternoon while we were still there a body of French infantry passed singing. They were going northwards, the way that we had come, and they halted and broke off into the village. Our men flocked out to greet them, and made friends in no time, offering tobacco, the first gift of friendship with the armée, examining one another's equipment, in fact looking one another over in frankness and good fellowship. There were jokes and laughter, and then men began to exchange experiences of war. The Frenchmen had seen more active service, they had been in an attack, they expected soon to be in another. We should all be in it together, and annihilate the Boche. With that there was much gesticulation, representing bayonet thrusts. Then a sergeant took a French rifle and did some bayonet work; he was our pride at it; he had that touch of imagination which had enabled him to go at the sacks in camp with the look in the eyes and the passion in all his muscles that spoke the presence of a real enemy. As you watched his face you could see the oath that you had only to turn to see the flames on guard in the flesh. There was applause from the French; then a Frenchman played the frightened German before him with great comic burlesque, and there was applause from the British. Bayonets were compared with much technical talk, and each admitted the other's very generousity, though neither would have exchanged it for his own, and more cigarettes were offered and lighted, for the French officers were giving their men rather longer than the usual halt. When at last they moved off they were followed by many shouts of good luck, and were watched on their road until they were lost through the dust, and then disappeared. The battalion felt at once to talking of the attack, and when it would be, and whether it should ever come across those good fellows again. But, as you know, it might be in terms, disquiet!

Sure enough, a day or two later came the order. The battalion was to push up to the front, where everyone was full of rumors. We said good-bye to the village, to the pigs and the good cur's wine, leaving many questions still unsolved with him, and to be debated should we ever come again (which we never have, and many of us will not come now), and so we took the road once more. We were soon among the preparations for the great attack; as we moved up the road a sudden whirlwind of smoke and fire would rush out beside us from what seemed to be a ditch, or an arbor, or a shell would whirr off in its gigantic arc-shaped flight, till we heard it crash far away on some enemy stronghold. You jumped at that first unexpected whirring of the roadside. It was the sensation, a hundred times intensified, of a grouse getting up from the heather at your feet. But there were many such, and we grew accustomed. It was our battery, and some French heavies mixed with them, registering systematically on every hostile tactical point. We saw aeroplanes sometimes in the distance. The way was being prepared for us infantry with care and method. We wondered as we marched when our turn would come.

A NERVOUS BREAKDOWN

CAN BE AVERTED BY FEEDING THE STARVED NERVES WITH RICH, RED BLOOD.

Nourish your nerves—that is the only way you can overcome life's worst misery, nervous exhaustion, the prostrating headaches, the weakness and trembling of the legs, the unsteady hand and the imperfect digestion that mark the victim of nerve weakness, must end in nervous breakdown if neglected.

Nourish your nerves by the natural process of filling your veins with rich, blood. This explains why these pills have proved successful in so many cases of nervous disease that did not yield to ordinary treatment. For example, Mr. Wilfrid Donald, West Falmouth, Ont., says: "Before I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I was in a serious condition. I was not only badly run down, but my nerves seemed to be completely shattered. I slept badly at night, and when I got up in the morning was as tired as when I went to bed. I seemed to be on the verge of a nervous breakdown. At this stage I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. In the course of a few weeks I felt much relief, and continuing the use of the pills they completely restored my health. I can now sleep soundly, eat well, and am enjoying complete recovery."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine, or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Telling the Bees.

(An Old Gloucestershire Superstition.) They dug no grave for our soldier lad, who fought and who died out there; Bule and rum for him were dumb, and the passing bell gave never a peal to warn that a soul was dead. And we laid him not in the quiet spot where cluster his kin that are dead.

But I hear a foot on the pathway, above the low hum of the hive. That at edge of dark, with the song of the lark, tells that the world is alive; The master starts on his errand, his tread is light and slow. Yet he cannot choose but tell the news—the bees have a right to know.

Bound by the ties of a happier day, they are one with us now in our worst; On the very morn that my boy was born they were told the tidings the first; With pride they will hear of the end he made, and the ordeal that he trod, Of the scream of shell, and the venom of hell, and the flame of the sword of God.

Wise little heralds, tell of my boy; in your golden tabard boots Tell the bank where he slept, and the stream he leapt, where the spangled life floats; The tree he climbed shall lift her head, and the torrent he swam shall thrill, And the tempest that bore his shout before shall cry his message still.

THE CLOTHES MOTH

And Advice On the Way to Prevent Its Ravages.

The tiny yellowish moth which is occasionally seen flitting about at this season is an indication that clothes moths are beginning their destructive work. Egg laying by these little moths is now under way and within a month the eating of woollens and furs by the little caterpillars as they come from the eggs may be anticipated. The little moths that are seen flying about do not eat anything; the destruction is caused by the tiny larvae working under scanty webs made from particles of the garment on which they feed, and the whitish webs can be

GENERAL TRADE NOTES.

Sugar refining has been started at Mukden, Manchuria.

Only Britishers' nannies may now be imported into New Zealand.

Foreign customs may be temporarily imported into Portugal duty free.

Iron safes and cash-boxes are in good demand in French Indo-China.

Paper for newspapers may be imported into the Argentine duty free.

Japan exported merchandise to Russia last year to a value of $11,117,000.

Russia is now producing pig-iron at the rate of over 3,000 tons annually.

Measures are being taken for the better development of cotton cultivation in Brazil.

Guatemala has now its own boot and shoe industry owing to the high prices of imported goods.

Peraguay imported merchandise to $60,000 in 1915, of which Great Britain supplied 39 per cent.

A button manufacturing industry is to be started in Mysore, and machinery has been ordered.

Gold and gold-plated jewelry and silver and silver-plated wares find a good market in Uruguay.

Oil-seeds recently found in Bolivia are stated to be wholly satisfactory, and exploitation has commenced.

Hong Kong is a large market for fireworks, about $50,000 worth being imported from the United States alone yearly.

Peru is a large market for motor vehicles.

There are $2,000,000 knitting-machine needles lying at Germany for export, but have been held up by England.

British leather goods are stated to be too heavy and of too good quality for the Egyptian market; hence the former substituted in Egypt the kind of leather used in the United States.

A register of commerce has just been instituted by legislation in France. British firms or their representatives established in that country will be obliged to conform to the regulations.

Imports of goods from Germany to Peru in 1915 amounted to $250,000 yearly.

The United States supplies 65 per cent of the world's total production of petroleum.

Three-fourths of the planes imported into Brazil before the war were of German make.

The consecutive numbering of packages shipped to Brazil is no longer required by the Brazilian customs.

"Knocked-down" rattan furniture, manufactured in Hong Kong, is finding a good market in Argentina.

South India is beginning to realize the advantage of electricity, Bangalore having set a fine example in this direction.

Machinery is the most important class of goods imported into New Zealand, the British share of which is lamentably deficient.

Story has a very large sale in Chile. American firms are now endeavoring to capture the trade, which was formerly German hands.

The high cost of plant power for traction in Burma is opening the way for portable machine traction, especially in connection with the transport of tea loads.

Modern agricultural machinery is likely to find a much better market in Portugal after the war than previously. Labor costs three times what it did three years ago.

The working of the goldfields at Kilo and Motte, Belgian Congo, has yielded results beyond all expectations.

If Africa had the same proportion of railway mileage as the United States it would have 1,000,000 miles of track, instead of its present 25,000.

A great increase in the purchasing power of the natives of British East Africa and Uganda is noticeable, and brass, copper and iron wire, looking glasses, leather belts, lamps and lanterns, beads, etc., in addition to cotton goods, now sell briskly.

MINARD'S LINIMENT RELIEVES NEURALGIA

The people of Guatemala are very fond of music. Their most popular programmes are those in which classical selections predominate. Band, orchestral and marimba music constitute an indispensable feature of all public festivals and entertainments. The most highly prized music in Guatemala is that of the marimba, a sweet-toned musical instrument said to have been invented by the "Tecomate," a tribe of Indians of the State of Chiapas, Mexico. The original form of the instrument, crude in structure, was brought to Guatemala, where it has been greatly improved. It resembles the xylophone in structure and manner of playing. The keys, strips of wood graduated in length to the musical scale, are made of two kinds of wood called "hornigro" and "aguacate." The keys are held together by means of a cord drawn through them. There are 45 tones and 30 half tones. The bass tones are given by the long, thick slats, the high tones by the short, thin slats. The keys are struck with two small rubber hammers called "banquetas."

The Marimba is about 8 feet long, and varies from 1 to 2 feet in width. The sounding board beneath the keys is constructed of two kinds of wood, "taxicob" and "guachipilin," and the keys are made of mahogany. The cost of a marimba is from $50 to $125 in gold.

The finest marimbas are manufactured in Quezaltenango, and the most skilled operators also come from the city, which is the second in size in Guatemala. Eight operators are required to play a marimba, the addition of a bass viol, a concert violin, gives strength and volume to the music.—Exchange.

With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations.—Second Inaugural address.

You can fool some of the people all of the time, and all of the people some of the time, but you cannot fool all of the people all of the time.—Remark attributed to Thurlow Weed.

Invented the Check System.

John Palmer, who died some years ago in a little town in Michigan, was the inventor of the check system. Palmer was a farmer and assumed responsibility for the hats, coats and wigs of those who came to his dancing parties. In doing things straight he gave numbered checks for the articles committed to his care. Some railroad men who attended one of the dances noticed how perfectly the check system was carried out, and in a short time it was adopted all over the country. As is often the case, the inventor got nothing out of it.

EMPEROR CHARLES.

A Plain (Very) Description of Austria's Ruler.

Emperor Charles, the present ruler of Austria, has lived such an uneventful and useless life that it is really a waste of space to publish anything about him.

Being one of the Hapsburgs, his lower lip curls like a jelly roll, and a baseball team, nine on a side, hangs between his nose and the opening called his mouth. He wears rings under his eyes as well as on his fingers and his head is as empty as a tramp's pocket.

He suffers mental fatigue whenever he concentrates his thoughts for more than two seconds at a time, as his brain is so light that it would waft on the gentle spring zephyrs were it ever released from its stone walled prison.

Prince of Germany and tries to rival that irresponsible individual in the consumption of champagne, but having a constitution as weak as his brain he gets intoxicated whenever he smells a bartender's apron.

The telegraphic connection between his brain and his tongue being badly in need of repair, he has never spoken an intelligible sentence in his life. He always starts things wrong and ends them foolishly and saves money on soap, as he always looks pale enough without washing.

Be said to his credit, however, he never occasioned any one harm, as he is so incapable he couldn't even do that.

This human manikin is operated by the Kaiser of Berlin. Unexpectedly placed on the Austrian throne, he found it more like an electric chair, and as a ruler he is about eleven liches shy.

Ever since he ascended the throne he has been making eyes at the dove of peace. Every little while he freezes the Kaiser's spine by announcing peace terms and then withdraws them when Wilhelm threatens to slap his wrist. Russia has turned him down so often on a separate peace proposal that the vocal chords are sore.

His empire is composed of about fifty thousand and sixty-seven different peoples, who love one another as much as the worm loves a hungry chicken. It is more logical, woven together than a thirty-three cent sweater. The people tolerate this court jester on the throne because they know his reign won't be for long, as Austria will soon be so divided by small States that it will look like

The Monroe Doctrine.

President Monroe in his seventh annual message (Dec. 2, 1823) laid down the principle of what has since been known as the "Monroe doctrine" thus: "We owe it to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those (great European) powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have no interference and shall not interfere, but with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it and whose independence we have on great consideration and on just principles acknowledged we would not view with any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in any other manner their destiny by any European power in any other light than as a manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States."

Household Hints.

Equal parts of sewing machine oil spots and vinegar make an excellent dressing for linoleum.

To take out sewing machine oil spots, dampen them with ammonia, then wash with white soap as a water, using first cold and then warm water.

The sweater bung carelessly soon loses its shape; if slipped through a large embroidery hoop hung in the closet it will not be stretched.

You will find the round hard shell of a salt water clam a more efficient pot scraper than either knife or cloth.

Soaking curtains which have never been washed a few hours in a strong solution of salt and water will take out the lime in the dressing and make them easier to wash.

When giving sticky medicine to children, heat the spoon by dipping it in hot water for a moment, then pour in the medicine and it will slip easily from the spoon.

Spanking Doesn't Cure!

Are These Studies Useless?

You, reader, who have been through the public school mill, ask yourself some questions. What good to you of what utility—utility—are such things as arithmetic's weight, algebra's aliquot parts, cube root, drams, the long method of the greatest common divisor, least common multiple, Troy weight, unreal fractions, the appositive, the objective complement, the objective adjunct, the substantive, conjunctive adverbs, the nominative absolute, geometric theorems, the gerund, etc.? What do you know about them to-day? Yet think of the hours and days and weeks that you poured over them when you were in the public schools! They have brought you no ultimate utility, then they will bring your children no ultimate utility, and if they lack ultimate utility there can be no question that the time spent in their temporary, fleeting acquisition was "wasted childhood."—Grand Rapids Herald.

THURSDAY, JULY 12, 1917

In the debates and discussions over the question of conscription much has been said on both sides that is quite apart from the main issue, and it is wholesome from time to time to call attention to what after all is the real and practical issue involved. Canada is fighting in a great war as a part of the British Empire, and side by side with other and more populous and powerful countries. The one and only essential for us in this great struggle is that our alliance shall not be defeated. If one member relaxes its efforts, it deals a blow to the common cause and commits an act of treachery to its Allies. Some weeks ago most people in Canada were very disgusted and resentful at the attitude of Russia because the Russian people seemed to have lost sight of this great essential and were more than half inclined to withdraw from the war, either formally by a treaty of peace with Germany, or informally by simply making time and ceasing to make preparation for energetic action. There was a general feeling that the Russians, in spite of the plausible arguments of their pacifist and socialist leaders, were playing an unhandsome part. How would Canada stand in the face of the world and before her Allies without the introduction of conscription? Having raised an army by voluntary recruiting, and voluntary recruiting having unquestionably come to an end, she would have had to allow her effective forces at the front to dwindle and disappear as a fighting unit, not actually withdrawing from the war, but ceasing from energetic action exactly as much as the Russians whom we condemned, and without any of the excuses afforded by the disorganization in the government of Russia consequent upon the revolution. The domestic considerations which have seemed so weighty to those Canadians who opposed conscription would in the eyes of our Allies and of the world shrink into their real significance in the face of the prime and undeniable fact that we had refused to take the only sure method of maintaining our fighting force and thereby were ceasing to give our brethren of the other sections of the Empire and our Allies the support which they had a right to expect.

MISS C. E. FAREWELL, Teacher.

ities for work. But while the year has been so busy yet we have been very blessed and happy in our work and we are being rewarded by seeing fruits of our labors.

George you know has charge of St. Andrew's Boys School, beside the supervision of the school he teaches thirty-one hours a week. He is also treasurer of the Mission, which is not so easy in China as at home where there is one standard of currency. Here the silver Mexican dollar is the standard and it is always fluctuating, sometimes selling for less sometimes more. That means that three accounts are kept a tall account, a silver dollar account and gold dollar account for the home office. Then too, he is pastor of the Chengchow Church, two and a half hours ride by train from here. This he visits during holidays and occasional Sundays during the term.

As he is also in charge of the services for the boys and girls School on Sundays he can only get away when he can get a supply for Kaifeng.

To-day at the morning's service nineteen of the school-boys were received into the Catechumens class, to prepare for baptism, there are also eleven boys, who are soon to be baptized, so you can see the work in the boy's school is very encouraging. There are altogether sixty boys in the school and of these thirty boys, thirteen are confirmed and three are baptized.

When we came out last year Miss Benbow was in charge of the Girl's School and was also trying to keep her hands on the women's work. When I came I was able to help her in both.

Then on Miss Robinson's return from Europe she again took on the school work and that left Miss Benbow and me free for the women's work, so in the autumn we opened up a Women's station class.

This proved very successful indeed. Then when Miss Benbow was married at Christmas time to Mr. Grivett, the Kaifeng women's work fell wholly to me.

I held a station class here this winter and Mrs. Trivet held two, one in Kweichow and one in Yungcheng. It made the work heavier for both of us.

On the thirty-first of this month we are to have a Christian wedding here. One of the St. Andrew's boys is marrying a St. Mary's school girl. Both these young people are bright, clever and very popular. The young lady is especially clever and gifted. Miss Robinson says she has never met, either at home or in young lady. In China it is the custom for the families to choose a go-between to negotiate affairs and frequently the girl is never consulted but it is not so in this case. This quite a romantic little love affair, the young man fell in love with the lady just from seeing her and made his proposal by letter and a go-between was chosen afterward.

We are getting quite a little community of foreigners now in Kaifeng. Since Kaifeng is the capital the Missions centre here, and work out in different directions. There are the Free Methodist Mission, the Southern Baptist, the China Inland Mission, the Y.M.C.A. and the Anglican Mission, so the missionaries with the Post Office Commissioner and his Assistant and the Standard Oil agents, but occasional guests makes us number well up to forty.

That we have good musical talent in our midst and have occasional social gatherings is a thing we are very grateful for.

I enclose you a programme of our last social gathering at the home of Mrs. Wheeler. This is the first year we have been able to have anything like this in China or in Kaifeng rather. We do get good music at the larger summer resorts; last year the Messiah was given at Kuling by the singers there.

We have had a very dry season here this spring there has been no moisture since last October neither rain nor snow and food is at famine prices. Every day hot dry dusty winds blow. The fall wheat is all turning yellow but the Chinese say that the heads are crop.

Panic has been prevailing on the streets, and a mob of women visited the Governor's Yamen to bewitch that the price of rice may be fixed as it was going up every day. The Governor acceded their request and notices were posted the next day that the next shipment of rice would have a fixed reasonable price. Rice is not the staple food here but is so much cheaper than wheat that the people are eating it as a staple this spring. That is one benefit they derive from the railroad were it not for the railroad, conditions would be most pitiful here.

All sorts of superstitious practices are being resorted to, to invoke the refreshing showers but still they refuse to fall. These hot dusty days are exceedingly trying and there is considerable sickness in the city. Mr. Simmons joins me in warmest regards to your mother, yourself and Mr. Bennett.

Yours very sincerely
 FLORENCE M. SIMMONS

Frankford Celebrates the Glorious Twelfth

24 Lodges in Line—Thousands of Visitors in Town—Largest Orange Demonstration Ever Held in District No. 1.

The Orange Demonstration held at Frankford on July 12th, was one of the largest ever held in District No. 1. Twenty-five Lodges were in the 'walk' and many others were represented by small delegations. The village had put on all its finery and decorations for the anniversary of the Boyne. A large evergreen arch stood at the corner of the main streets near the river bridge, while banners with such words as "No Surrender," "God Save our King" were flung across the streets. Refreshment booths, restaurants and hotels piled a very successful trade. Patriotic workers were active collecting for the wounded soldiers and selling tags.

The procession organized at the fair grounds at 1.30, the marshal of the parade was District Director Ernest Hubble of District No. 1. Following is the order of parade:

Foxboro Brass Band
Foxboro L. O. L. No. 3

Coddington L. O. L. 1363 Fife and Drum
Sidney L. O. L. 2286, Fife and Drum
Frankford Band
Frankford L. O. L. 240 with Fife and Drum

Sentinel Lodge had four young girls in orange dress assisting the standard bearers. One of the lodges carried its charter draped in mourning.

At the conclusion of the parade addresses were delivered by Rev. Bro. Dr. R. C. Blagrove and R. J. Graham of Belleville. Mr. Arthur Jones Manager of Molsons Bank, Belleville, acting as chairman. It is estimated that about 4000 people were in attendance on that day and all seemed to thoroughly enjoy themselves. Dinner was served on the grounds by the ladies of Stockdale Methodist Church and up town by Trinity Anglican Church. The Frankford W. L. had a booth on the street in aid of Red Cross, and they made $450.

The new United States war loan of three billions will be started on September 15. For the Liberty loan all the financial machinery of Wall Street, all the brokerage houses in the country, and a large part, even of commercial selling

To this purely literary love of words there have been added within last few years a certain renewed regard for it as the profoundest proof of soul, and for some minds not conventionally religious it has regained even its old authority as a spiritual end in itself. And I will confess for myself that sometimes as I fall asleep and dream, and think of the majestic rhetoric of modern writers has seized something to equal the "Tears in Rain," Richard L. Gallienne in Phoebe.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

She returns in a few minutes with Lady Rockwell, and closes the door after her carefully.

"What is all this that Laura has been telling me, Sir Frederic?" says Lady Rockwell, earnestly, and with a sharp scrutiny of his husband's face. "Is it true that poor Lord Delamere is—? Cannot speak the word! It cannot be true."

"It is quite true," he says in a low, uncertain voice. "Helt him dying. There is no time for explanation. Lady Rockwell, my mission is to bring his wife to him. Can she come?"

Lady Rockwell stands at the window, and he knows that the tears are running down her face. Then she turns suddenly.

"I will ask her," she says, with a tone of decision. "Stay here. I may send for you."

Carefully removing all traces of tears, Lady Rockwell goes into the adjoining sitting-room. Pale and motionless, Signa lies in a chair, her head thrown back, her eyes closed, her hand lying in her lap, as she has lain for the last two days, as if dead to the world and lost in the past.

"My dear," she says, then falters. Signa opens her eyes and turns them upon her with the awful, despairing look which has wrung the old lady's heart every time she has met it.

"My dear," she says, "do you feel better, stronger?" and she smooths the hair from the face that has never looked lovelier even in its hours of bliss than it does now for all its pallor.

Lady Rockwell comes up to her and looks at her.

"Better, stronger?" echoes Signa, with a faint smile that is pathetic in its weakness. "Yes, I am quite well, Lady Rockwell. I am lying here because it would hurt you if I got up, and seem ungrateful. But I am tired, oh, very tired! If one could but sleep away one's life when it got unbearable, and she sighs. "But why do you ask?"

"Because I wanted to speak to you, dear. You know we have not pressed you, have not bothered you, since—"

"—since—"

"You found me more dead than alive in that awful state. Yes, I know. You are all goodness to me, dear. I always knew that you had the tenderest heart in the world, and you have proved it by letting me keep my secret," and she takes the wrinkled hand in hers and kisses it softly, letting it drop again with a listless weariness.

Lady Rockwell sits silent for a moment; she has often had to "break" bad news, but never such news as this.

"Then I may speak, dear?" she says.

Signa opens her eyes again.

"Yes, but not—not of what brought me here," she says, fearfully.

"But, Signa—well, I must say this. You know you were very ill!"

Signa shudders.

"I was almost dead," she says, in a whisper.

"People in delirium are mad for the time, dear, and you were delirious. You wandered a great deal in your talk, and mentioned names; amongst them was Sir Frederic Rylie's."

Signa starts, and the blood rushes to her face, leaving a deathly pallor behind.

"Well?" she says, with distended eyes.

"Well, dear, I—I telegraphed to him."

"Not!" she exclaims, with a shudder; then she sinks back. "But it did not matter, was it not?"

"No, he was not there, but—but why do you look like that, Signa? You—you surely do not fear him?"

"Fear him?" she repeats, with clinched fist. "He is the cause of all my misery. But for him I should have gone on, happy in my ignorance, and the hands interlace spasmodically. "But for him I should never have known: I might have gone down to the grave in ignorance, and died in—my darling's arms, happy to the last! Fear Sir Frederic Rylie! I loathe him!"

As Lady Rockwell sinks back in silence, how can she tell her that the man is here, in the same house?

"There is a moment's pause, then Signa sits up again and stares at her wildly.

"But why do you say all this? Why do you ask me? Why do you ask me? Why do you mention that man's name?"

Lady Rockwell nerves herself for the effort.

"My dear," she says, gently, stretching out her hand and taking the white one nearest her, "because he is here!"

"Here! In this house?" exclaims Signa. "How dare he? The coward! Is there no place where I can be safe from his hateful presence?"

"Hush, hush, my poor child! He is here, not by his own accord, but by his necessity. He was sent here—"

"Sent here to me! Who sent him? I do not believe it. It is false! And she tears her hand away and thrusts back her hair from her face with a wild gesture.

"My dear, it is true. Can you not guess who has sent him?"

"No! No, I cannot! No one could have sent him except—"

—a pause; and with a twinge of agony she covers her face with her hands. "No one excepting him! And he would not send this man!"

"My dear, you mean your husband, Lord Delamere," says Lady Rockwell, firmly.

"If you mean your husband, Lord Delamere," says Lady Rockwell, firmly, "but gently, you are right. He has sent him."

"Hector!" breathes Signa, almost inaudibly.

"Yes, Hector Delamere."

"Why? Why?"

"Cannot you guess, Signa? He has sent him to tell you that that you are to go back to him?"

A shudder runs through Signa's frame, and her eyes close.

"No, he would not do that. He knows that I would not go! Never—never!"

"But suppose—I only say suppose—he needed you?"

"Needed me?"

"Yes, be calm, my child! Suppose he needed you very much; that—that he was ill?"

"Ah! Very much, with a gasp.

"Very ill, my dear, you would go to him; you would not be so wicked, so unfeeling, for him have done what he may, as to refuse?"

Signa leans forward, panting, breathless.

"What is it? Oh, tell me at once! Don't—don't keep me in suspense! You are killing me! What is it you want to tell me, and are afraid? Is it—"

"—ah!—with a wild cry. "He is ill, and I am here, all these miles away! Tell me—you shall speak! Why do you sit there staring at me?"

"Hush! hush! my poor child! Signa, be brave still! Signa, I will tell you—I will tell you the truth! Hector is ill—dangerously ill!"

"It is false! You mean that he is dead!" she shrieks. "I see it in your face! and she starts up wildly, with her hands clasped, her eyes staring down at Lady Rockwell's white face.

Lady Rockwell catches her in her arms and holds her. "No, not He is alive! I said that I would tell you the truth! He is alive and has sent for you!"

"Where is he? Oh, Heaven! all those miles away!" pants Signa. "All those miles! Let me go to him—oh, my darling, my darling! I have been mad, mad! I see it now! Who was I to judge? What did it matter? The past, the past was nothing, the present was mine and his, and he loved me. He loved me, and I was not content. Yes, I deserve it all! Heaven has punished me, and her head drops upon Lady Rockwell's bosom with a long moan.

Then her mood changes suddenly, and with a calm, almost haughty resolve, she frees herself from the trembling arms.

"Don't speak to me; leave me alone for a moment—to think! Where am I? In Paris and he is in Casablanca! Is he?"

"Yes, yes!"

"It will take—I must start at once! Ah, this man, Sir Frederic! Where is he? Bring him to me!"

"Are you sure—"

"Bring him to me!" with a low moan. "Do you not see that I have come to my senses? Do not let me find; I know what I am about. Bring him to me! If my poor darling has sent him, I will see him and take my husband's message from his lips. Oh, do not be afraid, I am quite calm now!"

Lady Rockwell goes out immediately.

"Come with me," she says to Sir Frederic. "Be patient with her; she has been almost out of her mind, but she is calm now. You can tell her the worst."

Biting his lips till the blood comes, he follows her.

White, statue-like, Signa stands in the middle of the room, and eyes him as if he were no more to her than any other messenger from her beloved.

"Well, sir?" she pants, "your message—quick!"

"Lord Delamere is dangerously ill; he has sent me for you, I am to give you this," he says, as if every word cost him a pang, and he hands her the ring.

With a low cry she takes it and presses it to her lips.

"No more?"

"Nothing more—except this—he is innocent, Lady Delamere."

She laughs with wild scorn.

"Innocent! What should I care for that? Innocent! Though he were guilty of all you accuse him of, and worse, I should not care! I left him at the bidding of—"

"Do not spare me," he says, with sad bitterness. "No words you can say can be more hard to hear than my own remorse. Rest assured that I am punished—"

She looks at him, through him, then glides swiftly to the door.

"Wait!" she says. "I shall be ready in five minutes. Oh, Heaven, the miles—the miles between us! Dying! and I am here!"

CHAPTER XXIII

The sun is shining behind the Tas can hills, far down in the valley the twinkling of the sunbeams and the lowing of the cattle being driven along is homeward from the still, evening air, and a single harmoniously with the snail-bell, ringing softly for Hector, the Lord of Delamere, lies motionless, with his eyes turned to the window, through which the last rays of the dying sun shine with a warm, crimson glow that lights up the wan face with a semblance of its former self.

Behind him stands the sister, her mild, dove-like eyes fixed upon his face with intense, yet half-concealed watchfulness.

"Is the light too much, mildred?" she inquires.

"No," he says, and only she who has grown familiar to the almost inaudible voice could hear him. "No, I am waiting for it to go—another hour, or less. Did you ever wait as I have waited, sister? Yes? You know, then, how long the minutes can be. These seem hours, ages, weeks! Read me the telegram again."

She takes the familiar paper from his grasp, and reads the message:

"My darling, I shall be with you to-night."

"To-night," he murmurs—"it is only evening now! The train is sure to be late. Ah, how weak my voice sounds! I beg your pardon, sister—come nearer. To-night! I said I should live till she comes, and I think I shall. Give me something—anything. If you could give me the elixir the wise men used to dream of in the middle ages—the elixir of youth and immortality now! But you can only give me—what is it—champagne? Thank you, thank you. Put the clock where I can hear it."

"My lord must calm himself, or he will be worn out before—before the time," murmurs the sister.

A wan smile crosses his face.

"I am calmer myself, sister. He says, 'Yes, I know how important it is. I have been saving up my strength for the next hour. Even the good father is satisfied and praises me. And he smiles again, but it is evident he is only talking to while away the time, the lagging, lame-foot time."

There is a silence for a minute or two, then he looks up at the clock, whose dial he cannot decipher.

"Sister," he says, "I have just made up my mind to sleep."

She shakes her head incredulously.

"No? You shall sleep! Give me the telegram. I will sleep this dawning hour away. What is it the post says?"

"Ah, me, that time should be so long, and life so short."

So short! and with a sigh he closes his eyes.

The sister watches, and presently bends over him. The will so strong still, though all else is so weak, has conquered. He is asleep.

An hour passes. The priest comes in with a note from Signa.

"Asleep?" he says, with hushed surprise; "it is time they were here. Listen, what is that?" for there is the sound of distant wheels.

Hector seems to hear them even in his sleep, for he murmurs:

"My darling! At last! It has been very long—long!"

The priest goes on tiptoe from the room; he has caught the sound of hushed footsteps in the hall below.

A few minutes pass, then the door opens, and Signa glides in. She has thrown her hat and jacket off, and wears the old black dress which she wore that night to St. Clare.

For a moment she pauses at the bedside with averted face; then with one effort she braces herself to meet the change which she knows must have come to the handsome face of her beloved, and looks down at him.

Then, with not a cry, with not a tear, she kneels down and lays her face close to his.

Half a minute passes. The sister and the tender-hearted father stand in the shadow out of sight, both weeping silently.

At the end of the half-hour Hector stirs and opens his eyes.

"Signa," he murmurs; "am I dreaming still?"

She puts her arm round him, and lifts him till his head lies upon her bosom, and lays her lips upon his without a single word.

An hour later, he is still lying in her arms, and there is still silence between them. Only once has he spoken, and then but to say:

"I knew that I should be until you came, dear!" and he seems quite content to lie and rest with his head upon her bosom looking up at her occasionally, as if the sight of her face were life to him. The doctor has arrived, and stands looking down with compressed lips and morrow on his face; he feels the tickling pulse, and avoiding the violet eyes that, fixed upon his face, seem as they would wring the truth from him, goes out of the room.

Downstairs two pale-faced, anxious women are awaiting him, as if he brought the verdict, life or death, in his hands.

"Well?" demands Lady Rockwell, almost fiercely, while Laura clings to her tremblingly.

The doctor looks from one to the other, and shrugs his shoulders, not unfeelingly, but as an intense expression of his inability to answer them.

"Must wait," he says. "He is neither better nor worse. Another man would have been dead twice over; but this man—hell—has the will of three. And, mind, a man who can will him self to live as he has done will not die without a hard fight for it. But I say nothing; I can do nothing; no one can do anything. You need not speak below your breath, mind," he adds.

"It is a case in which no noise or anything is capable of exciting the patient."

And he goes out and smokes a cigarette, much less calm and cold than he seems.

Slowly the night rolls on. A rapid look of peace and deeply rooted joy rests upon Hector's face; and his face is all of patient serenity, as, after a time, he speaks her name.

"Signa!"

"Hector!" she breathes.

"Who came with you, my darling? I heard voices, or did I dream them?"

"Yes," she says, in the same tone.

"Am glad," he murmurs, faintly. "Poor fellow! Signa, send for them. Father, come near. Signa—putting out his hand slowly till it touches the priest's hand—'I—ever—you hear the word friend spoken, think of this good man. No brother, no mother, could have done more for me than he has done. But words are poor things—poor things! and his hand tries to press the one he holds. 'Father, I shall do one thing more for me. There is a story to tell that the must hear. It will come better from your lips than mine, even if I could tell it, which I cannot. I want the others to hear it. Him—Sir Frederic—especially. Will you send for them?'"

"Hector!" she pleads, bending over him; but he smiles and shakes his head.

"It has gone on quite long enough, dear," he says. "Concealment has borne too deadly a crop already; we will cut it down and cast it into the fire. You shall tell the father how it happened; that I have been called a worse man even than I am. Let them come in."

The sister, at a signal from the priest, goes downstairs and speaks a word to the three who are waiting.

"Life has come to you," she says, simply and noiselessly; they follow her into the hushed room. The doctor follows.

"It can do no harm," he says. "He must have his wish. If it should disturb him to much I will hold up my hand and you will go out, please."

Hector grasps them with a faint smile, that grows infinitely tender as Lady Rockwell stoops and kisses his hand.

"Hush!" he says. "Don't cry! That's not like you! Besides, with a faint copy of his old ironical smile, 'I have sent for you to be amused. Sit down, no, let me hold your hand—ah! this was worth living for! Now, father, the truth, and all the truth!'"

A Rainless Coast.

Autofagasta (West Coast of South America) contains some of the greatest nitrate fields in the world. The country looks like a vast tract of slag, rock and cinders, shimmering and incandescent in the blazing heat. Rain falls so seldom that on one occasion a man who was carrying a furled umbrella was mobbed in the street by a mocking crowd, and there is a valley near where, according to tradition, it has never rained since the world began.

Owing to the barren nature of the country, every scrap of fresh meat, every green vegetable, and every drop of fresh water has to be brought hundreds of miles up the coast by steamship.

There are, or were two cows in Autofagasta. One was owned by the British hospital, and its milk jealously reserved for the patients; the other belonged to the wife of the manager of the commercial house—"Wide World Magazine."

Battle Stories From the West Front

WEARING THE BOCHE DOWN

"We're killing the Boches in a great rate," said a wounded sergeant from a home country regiment, "but that's not all of it—we're wearing them down in a variety of ways. Now, here's a tiny example. Where I was we all knew the Boche had made up his mind to win back at any price at all the bit of Hindenburg line we held."

"He tried different dodges, as I dare say you've heard. Opposite my lot he put in a regiment of the Prussian Grenadier Guards, after special training behind the lines—the very cream of his troops, you know. Well, they came in with a bang, and they fairly bombed their bombing attacks. I don't mind admitting that we learned a thing or two ourselves from them—about bombing attacks, I mean—some quite useful tips. And we thought we'd learned the job pretty well, too, since last July. But we got an extra, extra, extra or two from these Prussian Grenadiers. Well, we were tired, and they came in full of beans, or sauerkraut, as you know, and they fairly bombed us out of some of our line. They were overpowered us several times over sheer weight of numbers and—ginger."

"But here's my point. They lasted four days on the first day they beat us out of bits of trenches; on the third and fourth days they came on again, but on the third day they got far more than they gave. The fourth day there wasn't a trace of the fire they showed on the first day. There was no snap left in 'em. By the night of the fourth day we'd got back all the bits of ground we'd lost, and we were pounding 'em out of these Grenadiers at their own expense. Then the remnants of 'em were withdrawn. They were done to the world—finished. We were just beginning to enjoy ourselves, and doing much better than they did on their first day."

Well, we're only an average K. army lot, you know, and they were the Prussian Grenadiers. I tell you we were wearing down the Boches we don't kill. By the time the American millions are ready next spring, I'm thinking Master Boche will be hard put to it to offer them a decent show at all."

GOOD SAMARITANS.

"Our barracks now," said an Irishman in a north country regiment, "are just as good as they were at the first of this show forward. Of course, the pushes come at little bits of the line, here and there, and there's not so much weight in the barrage. On Easter you could see nothing but a curtain of fire for miles, with the turf flyin' and the smoke risin' in wan long line. But you'll understand that got what put me in bed like this, our lads were gettin' under our own fire because they were too eager. An officer ran forward at the risk of his own skin, and stopped the lads from goin' too quick. The poor lad was killed just as he checked the men."

"I got it in both legs before we reached the front line. But, Glory be to God, I fell into a shell-hole, and lay down as snug as you please. In a corner, I lay there for hours, and I heard a great many 'roarin' noise' comin' near me. I know it was a tank, and I prayed it would not come over me, me bein' laid in the shell-hole. But I heard it go 'roarin' past quite near, and then it got away, and I could hear, it fighting and struggling to get clear. I never saw it."

"Later in the day, a lad I knew came by, edged up to the shell-hole. 'Hello, Peter,' says he, 'who he saw me in the hole. For God's sake have you a water-bottle with you?' says I, 'me less is both broke and I can't move to get a grip of mine. He threw me down his water-bottle. It held full of rum and water, it kept me goin'. Then it began to rain, and another lad, passin' by, saw me and threw me down a water-bottle. Late at night the stretcher-bearers got me. So they were all Good Samaritans, the way they helped, them that saw me lyin' by the wayside."

"THE COOLEST THING I'VE SEEN OUT THERE," said a private of the Argyll and Sutherland, "was after the advance had broken into open fighting. Sometimes it happens in open fighting, that you hold a trench, but just a line of shell-holes. This time our shell-holes were next to a battalion of the Gordons, that mostly came from Morayshire, my country, and as things were quiet except for a bit of shelling, I just dragged a water-bottle into a shell-hole where the Gordons were."

"There was a sergeant-major in this hole, shavin' as calmly as if there were no such things as shells flying around. I said to him, 'Man, Sergeant-major,' I said, 'I saw a 'arse' feller. Says he, 'I left my fear by the side of the Loozie. That's the f'r that Elgin stands on. And we had a bit of crack then. He told me he had been an athlete in his day, and when he told me his name, I knew him for a man famous on the cycle-track. We were talking away about Elgin and Puccard and Mosetowic, and about people thereabouts, when suddenly a Boche turned up at the crater lip. How he got there, Heaven only knows, but we were a bit mixed up with the Germans round us near and far. This Boche had an ugly look as if he meant mischief, but I didn't disturb the sergeant-major much. He just laid down his razor and picked up his rifle and bayonet, and sauntered out with soap down one side of his face."

"The Boche had a bomb in his hand, but he dropped it without drawing the safety pin, and he up with his hands. The sergeant-major rounded him up into the shell-hole, dropping him in by the scruff of his neck. He made the German hold up the mirror till he finished his shave."

"I had to laugh at that. The sergeant-major looked as if it was the most ordinary occurrence in the day's work. I had to get back to my lot then, and I don't know what happened to the sergeant-major and his prisoner. I hope he came through all right. The Corporal was over the top soon after, and I hear they made an awful mess of the Germans. If they are all of the same breed as the sergeant-major, I don't wonder in the least."

PUT UP PLENTY OF PRESERVES

INCREASED COST OF SUGAR IS SURPRISINGLY LOW.

Women Now Realize What a Foolish Extravagance It Was to Do Without Homemade Preserves.

There is nothing quite so effective as facts and figures to demolish a fallacy.

Last year, when sugar went up a few cents in price, some people decided that they would not keep up their regular supply of home-made preserves. They could only see the 2-cent or 3-cent increase in the price of sugar. They could not see how much more it would cost them to replace preserves with anything else. They did not stop to figure how this increase in the cost of sugar was going to affect the cost of preserving.

Others did, however, and proved that the cost of preserving, due to the increased cost of sugar, had been greatly exaggerated.

Here is the way these clever women proved it. Before the war, we know that sugar was 5½ cents a pound. Because of war conditions, the price of sugar fluctuates, but the retail price for the best granulated sugar averages 8½ cents a pound. This is an average increase of only 3 cents a pound.

Every good housekeeper knows that a quart jar of preserved berries or fruit requires only a pound of sugar, so that the increased cost of preserving, due to the increased cost of sugar, is only 1½ cents a pound.

This is why a jar of home-made strawberries, raspberries, cherries, plums, peaches or pears is about the most inexpensive sweet or dessert that can be put on the table.

Besides the economy of putting up a good supply of home-made preserves, there is another reason. We must conserve our food supply. We must save our fruit crops. Last year, because of the mistaken idea of economy, hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of berries and fruit were wasted. Now that the women realize that the cost of preserving was greatly exaggerated last year, they are determined to do more preserving, and also to enjoy an abundance of delicious home-made jams, jellies and preserves this winter.

A LITTLE MISTAKE.

Since Gladys took to gardening and decided the radish and beet, she was a bit of a mistake. Just like her brother Joe. And with her in my arms and over the top soon after, and I hear they made an awful mess of the Germans. If they are all of the same breed as the sergeant-major, I don't wonder in the least."

"I had to laugh at that. The sergeant-major looked as if it was the most ordinary occurrence in the day's work. I had to get back to my lot then, and I don't know what happened to the sergeant-major and his prisoner. I hope he came through all right. The Corporal was over the top soon after, and I hear they made an awful mess of the Germans. If they are all of the same breed as the sergeant-major, I don't wonder in the least."

Last night beneath the silver moon, I stole upon him in the garden. She needed the potato patch. With slow and patient care, I placed her in my arms and over the top soon after, and I hear they made an awful mess of the Germans. If they are all of the same breed as the sergeant-major, I don't wonder in the least."

My heart goes pit-a-pat.

HOW IS YOUR APPETITE?

Loss of appetite during the summer months is a common trouble, and indicates that the digestive system is out of order. Lacking a healthy appetite, many people—especially women—go too long without food, or eat sparingly because food seems to distress them, and it is no wonder that they complain that they are constantly tired and unable to stand the hot weather. This simply means that the digestive system is not doing its proper work, and that the nutriment that should come from the food is not being distributed to the various organs of the body.

In other words, the blood is growing thin and watery.

You need a summer tonic, and in all the realm of medicine there is no tonic so gentle as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Take a short treatment with these pills now and notice how promptly your appetite returns and your power to digest food improves. Your food will then do you good, your strength will return and you will no longer complain that the hot weather tries you out.

The best time to begin taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the moment you feel the least bit out of sorts. The sooner you do so the sooner you will regain your pink cheeks, and you can get them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

RUSSIANS DRIVING AHEAD ON A 100-MILE FRONT

Pushing Steadily Ahead All Along From Tarnopol to the Carpathians,

Have Passed Halicz On Way to Lemberg, Whose Fall Shortly Is Expected.

London Cable—Having broken the strong Austro-German line in the vicinity of Halicz, the Russians are pushing forward from Halicz toward Lemberg, the capital of Galicia, and from Stanislau, south of Halicz, westward toward the line of the Danube. After the capture of Halicz, on the front from Halicz to the south, General Korniloff forced the Austro-Germans to continue their retreat. In their advance from Halicz the Russians forced the fleeing enemy across the Lomnica and occupied two towns on the western bank of the river. The next day the Russians reached the River Stoka, about six miles west of the Lomnica. To-night's German official report states that south of the Dniester German and Austrian troops on the River Lomnica are again in fighting contact with the Russians.

South and west of Stanislau the Russians have reached the Posiecz-Lesivka-Kalusz line, the central point of which, Lusiwka, is four miles west of the River Bystritsa. This line is about seven miles east of Kalusz, the nearest largest town west of Stanislau, and which is situated in a bend of the Stoka River. The extension of the Russian fighting line to Zolotyn brings the battle-ground into the foothills of the Carpathians.

On Tuesday the Russians captured 2,000 more prisoners and 30 guns, bringing their total captured from July 8 to 10 to more than 10,000 officers and men and 80 guns. A large amount of machine guns and war material also was taken. Berlin gives no details of Tuesday's fighting in Galicia, merely saying that:

"Movements south of the Dniester have been executed until now as planned."

LEMBERG'S FATE SEALED.

Petrograd Cable—In the capture of Halicz the Russian revolutionary army, so discredited during the last few months, has reached in a single move the objective fought for so stubbornly. This appears to be the line of least resistance, and Halicz was easily taken from the rear.

The strategic results from the taking of Halicz are obvious. Lemberg is now open to attack from Halicz. It is also likely that the Austrian line, which has been so long based on the Onil Lipa River, will be forced to retire, and as the Russian movement develops in the direction of Lemberg it is sure to have an effect upon the situation in the Kovel-Vladimir-Volynsk region.

Since the Russian advance in August, 1914, when the capture of Lemberg followed swiftly on the taking of Halicz, it has been the popular theory that Lemberg cannot long be held after Halicz has fallen, but the defence of Lemberg, according to the view of a majority of the military critics, depends upon the ability of Germany to bring up reserves quickly.

The railroad route from Lemberg, through Bolesheff and Dolina, is circuitous and slow, and will become infeasible with further Russian progress along the Dolina road, and it will be impossible to transfer troops from the Brzezany region, since the enemy cannot afford to weaken that part of the front in view of the continued Russian pressure there.

The military writers, therefore, conclude that there is an excellent chance for the Russians to capture Lemberg in the near future.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

The Petrograd War Office report says: "In the direction of Dolina yesterday, we continued the pursuit northwestward of the retreating enemy, who had been broken by Gen. Korniloff's army on the Jezupol-Batianska-Bogorodchian front."

"At midday the gallant troops took the town of Halicz. Advance detachments were thrown across the left bank of the Dniester. Towards evening our troops reached the valley of the River Lomnica and advance detachments crossing over after a short engagement to the left bank of the river occupied the villages of Bludnik and Babin."

"Our troops advancing on the Bogorodchian Solotvina front having broken down the resistance of the enemy, reached the line of Bolesiecz-Lusiwka-Kalusz. Altogether in the three days' battle from the 8th to the 10th in the direction of Dolina we took prisoner more than 150,000 officers and 10,000 men. Our captures also include about 80 guns, 12 of them of heavy calibre, and a large number of trench mortars and machine guns and a large quantity of engineering material and military stores.

"On the Baltic Sea on Monday squadrons of enemy hydroplanes carried out three flights over Arensburg and the region of Tserella, dropping about thirty bombs on the roadstead batteries and various structures without result, causing no loss or damage. On Sunday a Zeppelin flew over the southern extremity of the Aland archipelago."

AUSTRIANS ADMIT DEFEAT.

Admission by the Austrians of a defeat at the hands of the Russians is contained in a message from Austrian war press headquarters, as forwarded from Amsterdam by the Central News. It says:

"For two days our troops repulsed strong Russian attacks. In trenches which had been destroyed by artillery fire one division defended itself against attacks by superior Russian columns. But when fresh Russian reserves were brought into action our troops were compelled to retreat, giving up their first line."

The following statement on military operations was issued today by the Austro-Hungarian War Office:

"Reinforced and artillery activity in the eastern war theatre was livelier. Renewed bitter fighting developed early yesterday near Stanislau. The allied (Teuton) troops repulsed many attacks, but were withdrawn in the evening, under the increasing pressure of enemy masses, to behind the line of Lomnica. The enemy did not pursue during the night."

"North of the Dniester the Russians were fairly quiet, and our storming troops worked successfully. Between the Galician frontier and the Baltic there was a frequent revival of artillery fire."

BERLIN CRISIS MAY HAVE BEEN STAGE EFFECT

One Section of London Opinion Believes It Was Put On.

STILL OBSCURE

"Reforms" May Be Held Out to Delude the Entente.

London Cable says—There are two distinct points of view here with regard to the German political crisis. One, that it is altogether genuine; another, that it is largely stage-managed. Both agree in firmly believing that the ferment, whether genuine or theatrical, largely originated in Vienna; also that whatever may be the upshot, a new peace offer may be expected from the Central Powers in a few weeks. Not that such an offer would be of a nature to affect the length of the war, but it would be put forward by Germany in the hope of embarrassing the allies. Here it is generally agreed that the American embargo on exports is an infinitely greater blow, affecting the duration of the war, than the German crisis.

The Times under the headline "German Peace Offensive," says overdoing by Berlin may be found accurately to characterize their motives. In considering the value of the Koelnische Volks-Zeitung's news of the crisis, which was cabled yesterday, it must be remembered that Erzberger dominates this newspaper. One outstanding fact is clear, namely, however much the German Government, realizing the crisis that is impending, decided to advertise and capitalize it, there is behind it all plenty of genuine cause for such a shake-up.

JUNKER PRESS REFRACTORY.

A Times Amsterdam special says the Koelnische Volks-Zeitung, speaking of resolutions on peace, says any such resolution must emphasize the fact that Germany has waged the war from the beginning as a defensive war alone, defensive for the future as well as the present. It adds that if peace is not attained the submarines must continue to sink ships (all English arrogance for world domination) which is at the head of the Gulf of Akaba on the westerly side of the Sinai Peninsula. Taffel is about fifteen miles southeast of the southern extremity of the Dead Sea and Mean is located slightly to the south, on a railway line from Damascus to Medina.

Wigg—What do you think of the German retreat? Wigg—It seems to be a case of every man for himself and the devil take the Hindenburg.

CHAMBERLAIN RESIGNS FROM INDIA OFFICE

British Cabinet Man: Out Following Report On Mesopotamia.

HARDINGE STAYS

Offered Resignation Thrice—Both Considered Victims of System.

This party adopted an attitude against the Chancellor, as he did not possess their confidence. What Erzberger really said about the submarine is unknown.

The Wolff Telegraph says it has tested the whole edifice of German policy, being specially thorough with the U-boats, calculations and predictions, and the effect thereupon of America's intervention. From many indications, however, it does not appear that the German Government is in any danger of losing its confidence in the Chancellor's speeches, nor did he wish to speak of an renunciation thereof. The Volks-Zeitung adds that no one can doubt the effect of the submarine war.

A German Government wireless message, intercepted by the British Admiralty, concerning the Crown Council on Monday, says the Emperor William on Tuesday discussed the submarine war's effectiveness in his committee speeches, and predicted that the effect thereupon of America's intervention. From many indications, however, it does not appear that the German Government is in any danger of losing its confidence in the Chancellor's speeches, nor did he wish to speak of an renunciation thereof. The Volks-Zeitung adds that no one can doubt the effect of the submarine war.

DEFENSIVE WAR ONLY.

Amsterdam Cable—The German political situation is still obscure. Notwithstanding the sensational revelations of the Koelnische Volks-Zeitung, nothing definite is yet known concerning the constitution of the coalition Ministry or the Chancellor's attitude. German official circles continue in a state of fermentation, and this is reflected in contradictory articles in the press.

Cautious observers, acquainted with German guile, do not accept reported reforms at their face value. Lord George's class, moreover, has asserted that Germany has taken Lloyd George's counsel to heart, and is willing to democratize itself as a condition before negotiations to end the war, which is daily more loathed and is daily eating more deeply into the vitals of the nation. It is often added, however, that the present situation is complicated by three or four elements—the desire for peace, the desire for victory, the desire for democracy, and the desire for the retention of their privileges. If all these could somehow be combined so as to delude the Entente into the belief that genuine democratic reform was seriously contemplated it might be easier to negotiate with the enemy. That seems to be the underlying policy. That seems the only formula which was to declare that Germany is only waging a defensive war.

The Koelnische Volks-Zeitung today significantly points out that "anyone who desired peace and who voluntarily renounce territorial acquisitions or the security of the frontiers of the Fatherland, or who merely from 'idealistic' motives desired peace, would be a madman. If not a traitor to the Fatherland. Territorial acquisitions and frontier security may be absolutely necessary to a war of defence."

The session of the Crown Council on Monday, says a Berlin telegram, lasted until one o'clock Tuesday morning, when the resignations were accepted definitely. The Imperial Chancellor has decided to offer the vacant portfolios to the leaders of the Reichstag and Prussian Diet. An Imperial Ministry of Labor will be created under the Socialists, Herbert or David.

The above despatch does not reveal the identity of the ministers who resigned. Foreign Minister Zimmermann and Vice-Chancellor Heffelfinger have been mentioned most often as the ministers who would lose their portfolios.

KING OF HEAS HARRIES TURKS

Pro-Ally Arab Ruler Seizes Red Sea Posts.

Ottomans Lost Heavily in the Battles.

London Cable—Although little has been heard of him recently, it develops that the "King of the Hejas," the former Grand Sheriff of Mecca, has been continuing his activity in Arab lands. This Arab leader, who assumed his royal title by virtue of the way he secured over the extensive Hejas region along the Red Sea, has been in revolt against the Turks since July, 1916, and recently has apparently been extending his authority northward.

Replying to a question in the House of Commons today, James MacPherson, Parliamentary Secretary to the War Office, said that the Turkish posts between the Taffel-Main district and Akaba were now in Arab hands. The total Turkish losses in the fighting that has taken place were 700 killed and 600 captured, including 20 officers, he stated, while on the mounted side also was captured. A Turkish battalion was destroyed on July 2nd, and the Hejas railway damaged at many points.

It seems probable that the towns of Taffel and Mean in Northern Arabia, are those alluded to by the spokesman for the War Office. Taffel lies 100 miles northwest of Akaba, which is at the head of the Gulf of Akaba on the westerly side of the Sinai Peninsula. Taffel is about fifteen miles southeast of the southern extremity of the Dead Sea and Mean is located slightly to the south, on a railway line from Damascus to Medina.

Wigg—What do you think of the German retreat? Wigg—It seems to be a case of every man for himself and the devil take the Hindenburg.

London Cable—The Times' Parliamentary correspondent writes: "There was an intensely dramatic climax to the Mesopotamia debate in the House of Commons to-night."

Chamberlain announced his resignation of the office of Secretary of State for India and made the speech of his life in vindication of the part he played in the events on which the commissioners pronounced judgment. At the same time he warmly defended several of his colleagues both in India and at home, whose conduct was criticized in the report of the commission. Mr. Chamberlain's announcement of his resignation took the House by surprise.

Mr. Balfour, the Secretary for Foreign Affairs, announced in the House of Commons that Lord Hardinge had thrice offered to resign, the first time on the issue of the commission's report and the last time as late as yesterday, in each case the Foreign Secretary declined to accept his resignation.

VICTIM OF SYSTEM.

Nothing is known as to whether other resignations are contemplated, but it is considered quite possible that further developments may occur on the return of the King to the capital. It is understood that Premier Lloyd George and Mr. Chamberlain's colleagues have done their best to persuade him to withdraw his resignation, but without avail. That sympathy is felt for Mr. Chamberlain, who is regarded as the victim of the peculiar Indian administrative system.

After a debate extending throughout the evening, which revolved mainly around the form the judicial enquiry should take—strong criticisms being voiced that the tribunal suggested by the Government was a mere whitewashing and shelving procedure to protect the statesmen who came under the commission's condemnation—Mr. Balfour announced that the Government was willing to set up a tribunal by statute competent to deal with both soldiers and civilians, instead of an enquiry tribunal as already proposed.

Speeches in the House of Lords by the Marquis of Crewe, Earl Curzon, the Marquis of Lansdowne, and others, were largely of an apologetic character, defending the impugned statesmen on the ground of their loyal services to the Empire, their good intention and zeal and the difficulties they had to face under exceptional circumstances and the handicap of the peculiar Indian administrative system.

ZEALOUS DEFENDERS.

Baron Hardinge especially found zealous defenders in both the Lords and Commons, Sir Mark Sykes, Unionist for Hull, caused sympathetic demonstrations in the Commons by reminding the House of Lord Hardinge's long and valuable services, the attempt on his life at the Delhi Durbar some years ago, the death of his wife under tragic circumstances, and finally the recent death of his son in action in France.

Sir F. Smith, the Attorney-General, in opening the debate in the House of Commons, described the report as "simply a cemetery of reputations." No single person, he said, mentioned by the report that the commission had made had the advantage of being represented by counsel. It might be that the conclusions in the report were well founded, but that had yet to be ascertained and proved.

He said it would have been both unfair and illegal to take action against the officers mentioned in the commission's report and it would therefore be unfair to take such action against the civilians. But if the House considered the course proposed improper, the Government was prepared to set up a statutory tribunal.

The Speaker of the House, at the outset of the debate, in explaining the suggested tribunal, said that there might be a difference of opinion concerning its form, but the whole House was unanimous that a judicial tribunal should try the question. He announced that the Indian Government had already sent up the commission's report, and that the Government was prepared to set up a statutory tribunal.

Mr. Chamberlain warmly defended himself and the others named in the report against the charge of cowardice in the lives of soldiers for political considerations, and argued that they would not have given orders for an advance unless the military advisers had recommended it as proper course. He invited the House to consider what the commission would have said had they ignored the advice of the military experts. He would not say a word in excuse of the horrible breakdown in the medical service, but sixteen months ago he had, through Lord Hardinge, warned the military authorities of the possibility of such a breakdown, and had been warning them in action, a breakdown would have been averted.

Defending Lord Hardinge, he said that the gravest charge the commission had to bring against him was that he trusted too implicitly in military affairs to the military advisers.

and had failed to use his great authority to overrule them. He declared it would be an evil day for the country, if on account of errors of judgment for which others are equally responsible, a great public event should be hounded out of public life without trial or hearing. In answer to the clamor of an ill-informed and passionate mob.

JUSTICE TO BE DONE.

Mr. Balfour said it was inevitable that such unfortunate events occurred, that there should be a passionate desire that some one be punished, but it was the business of Parliament to see that that natural desire should never exceed the bounds of strict justice. It was their duty to see that it did not rush them over some cateract of public immorality, which they must regret immediately after, and historians for all time. He had the Premier's permission to say that the Government would accept the alternative of a statutory tribunal suggested by the Attorney-General, and urged by Sir John Simon, the former Home Secretary.

While he admired the dignified statement in which Mr. Chamberlain had announced his decision, he thought it right to add that he profoundly disapproved from Mr. Chamberlain's decision.

He thought that Lord Hardinge had not been fairly treated. In regard to some heckling, the Foreign Secretary argued that there was no reason why Lord Hardinge should resign because he would have to appear before the tribunal. He contended that India was not prepared to help in the great European war, but that she had responded nobly at great risk at home. The commission upon the happenings on the western front since the beginning of the war, said the secretary, might produce the same kind of a report in many respects, as that submitted by the Mesopotamia Commission. The debate was adjourned.

SHIP LOSSES TO THE SUBS. AGAIN LOWER

Only 17 Sunk, and the Same Number Escaped When Attacked.

BEATING THE U-BOAT
Lowest Week's Toll Since Campaign Opened, Except an Equal One.

London Cable—The sinking of 14 British merchantmen of more than 1,600 tons, is reported in the weekly summary of shipping losses issued here to-day.

Three merchantmen of less than 1,600 tons, and seven fishing vessels also were sunk.

The naval editor of the Times writes: "On the whole, this return in some ways is more satisfactory than any that have been issued, for it shows that the struggle between the U-boats and the mercantile marine has not become more intense. For two months the total reached is in the neighborhood of 600 vessels. These are vessels of all classes, excluding fishing craft. If we reckon the average tonnage of each vessel, we find somewhere between 3,000 and 3,500 tons the approximate amount of British shipping destroyed in the campaign comes to little less than 2,000,000 gross tonnage. This is about 10 per cent. of the total tonnage of the mercantile marine of this country. This may be an over-estimate. But it cannot be very far from the mark. What it seems to show is that the task the Germans have undertaken is beyond their power to accomplish. We were told a total of 1,000,000 tons of shipping destroyed monthly, and this is necessary for the achievement of their ends. The loss is serious enough, but nothing like the total claimed by the Germans to have been reached the first six months."

"Unless, therefore, the weekly figures are misleading, the problem does not appear such as cannot be solved. Looking at things all round we may take hope."

"It must be recalled the campaign must always be of an intermittent character. The decrease in energy of the last few weeks may not continue the last few weeks of the campaign. On the whole, the hunt for them appears to be making fair progress."

The official summary reads:

"Arrivals, 2,308; sailings, 2,793. "British merchant ships sunk by mine or submarine, over 1,600 tons, including one previously, 14; under 1,600 tons, 3.

"British merchant ships unsuccessfully attacked, including four previously, 17.

"British fishing vessels sunk, including one previously, 7."

The increasing effectiveness of the measures against submarines, which are being carried out by British and allied warships is shown in the record of last week. With one exception the number of merchantmen sunk is the lowest of any week since the British campaign against the U-boats began. The summary of the week ending April 21st, 1917, showed 17 merchantmen sunk, the same total as is shown in the last week's summary.

The preceding report gave the sinking of 15 vessels under 1,600 tons and 17 over 1,600 tons. In the two earlier periods the totals were respectively 28 and 32. This compares with the sinking of 40 large merchantmen in one week and 38 in another at the height of the campaign in April. In the week ended April 21st, 55 vessels in all were sunk.

Wigg—Hardinge's credit is mighty bad, and yet he is cheerful. Wigg—Yes, it seems that he can't even borrow trouble.

RUSS ADVANCE TWENTY MILES IN FIVE DAYS

Teuton Armies Defending Lemberg Menaced by Flanking Movement.

HUGE CAPTURES

42,300 Prisoners, 164 Guns Taken in the Present Offensive.

From Petrograd reports, the following number of prisoners and guns are shown to have been taken since the beginning of the Russian offensive in Galicia:

In the fighting around	Prisoners.	Guns.
Brzezany on July 1 and 2	18,300	29
Around Stanislau and Halicz from July 2 to 8	14,000	55
From July 8 to 11	10,000	80
Totals	42,300	164

These figures do not include machine guns. Twelve of the 55 cannon taken at Halicz are heavy pieces.

London Cable—Another step in the outflanking of the Austro-German armies protecting Lemberg on the east has been achieved by the Russians, who have crossed the River Lomnica and captured Kalusz. Beyond the Lomnica and south of the Dniester, west of Halicz, General Korniloff's advance continues.

When the Russians occupied Kalusz, after forcing a passage of the Lomnica, they had advanced twenty miles northwestward from Stanislau in five days. In the same time the Eighth Russian army took Halicz and crossed the Dniester there and began an advance between Stanislau and Bohorodzyne. A great wedge has been pierced in the Austro-German lines south of the Dniester.

The taking of Halicz Tuesday was a threat against the Austro-German line northward through Brzezany, along the Zlota Lipa and the crossing of the Lomnica and an advance beyond is a blow to the security of the line protecting Lemberg. Should the Russian advance west of Stanislau continue unchecked, and should large Russian forces be thrown across the Dniester in the region of Halicz, the Zlota Lipa line, unbroken by the Russian onslaught of July 1, would be turned making a general retirement inevitable.

On the southern end of the Stanislau front, which is in the foothills of the Carpathians, the Russians are not advancing as rapidly as on the northern end. The enemy is taking advantage of the hilly country and has checked momentarily, attacks west of Bohorodzyne.

The Petrograd report says: "Western (Russian) front: Yesterday our operations along the Rivers Dniester and Lomnica continued to develop. After a stubborn and sanguinary battle the enemy was forced out of the town of Kalusz, which was occupied by us."

"To the west of Bohorodzyne, on the Grabovka-Rosina-Krivits front, the enemy, taking advantage of the extremely intricate terrain, is holding back our advance."

"There were no changes elsewhere on this front."

OUR TROOPS IN ENGLISH CAMPS

Their Health is Good and They Are Well Housed.

Well Fed, and Very Little Drunkenness.

Ottawa Cable—Major-Gen. John Hughes, Inspector-General for Western Canada, has just returned from a visit to the Canadian troops in England and at the front. He has made the following observations to the Minister of Militia and Defence, which the Minister considers will be of interest to the public:

"I visited all the camps (in England). The men were mostly quartered in huts, which are quite comfortable, and very suitable for all conditions of weather. The health of the troops in all camps is good, and the sanitary and medical departments well administered."

"The rations supplied are ample and of good quality. The cooking and messing arrangements for the men are excellent, there is apparently no waste, and I found no complaints as to either quantity or quality of food supplied."

"I am very pleased to report that no crime of a serious nature exists, and that the conduct of all troops in England is of the best. I was pleased to find that for drunkenness there was less than one case per thousand men per week, and this was not for any one camp alone, but the average for all camps in England."

"Are you going to take summer boarders?" "Not this year," answered Farmer Contesse. "I don't propose to let city folks off that easy. I'm going to take 'em up pupils in agriculture and make 'em pay for the opportunity to do some farmin'."—Washington Star.

North Hastings District W. I.

The annual business meeting of North Hastings District Women's Institute was held in the Town Hall, Marmora, on Tuesday, June 12th, 1917. An afternoon session, only, was held, beginning at 2.30 p.m. when a large and representative gathering, composed of members of the various branches had assembled. The District President, Miss E. Rainie of Wellman's Branch, presided. In her opening address she spoke of several outstanding events of the past year, notably the enactment of a prohibitory liquor law and the granting of the franchise to women. These were, no doubt, the direct result of the war. The ballet should be taken seriously, not as a joke, a woman should fit themselves for the duties before them. The annual report of the District Secretary showed a total membership of 344 in the 12 branches, total number of meetings held 102, total attendance at these meetings 1835, extra meetings for Patriotic work 79. Special reports of patriotic work done by the combined branches through the year showed total contributions for Canadian, British, and French Red Cross, Belgian relief and various other patriotic purposes—Cash, $1681.90. Goods donated towards the same objects or sent to the Canadian troops overseas, Value estimated $2683.37, number of pairs of socks sent 1454 pairs. An effort was made to estimate the amount of patriotic work done from the beginning of the war to May 31st 1916, but records were very incomplete and the totals give the work of not more than half the branches and are as follows: Cash $1761.23; Goods $1257.25; Socks 1424 pairs.

The auditors presented their written report showing the receipts for the District to be $74.40, and the expenditures $38.50 leaving a balance of $35.90. The combined report showed total receipts of $3627.40 details as follows, Cash on hand June 1st 1916 $582.75, Members fees $86.00, Grants $97.00, Miscellaneous $2861.65. Total expenditures, $3001.36, details, Expenses for meetings $59.60, Salaries, $82.48, Postage and stationery, $99.04, Printing $51.85, Books, etc. $5.42, Miscellaneous, $2702.97 which leaves cash on hand, $626.04.

The branch secretaries or directors read short accounts of the special work done by their branch, also ways and means of raising funds. Each had a report of sewing and knitting for hospital or soldiers.

The election of Officers resulted in the reelection of Miss Rainie as Pres., Miss Tanner of Crookston was elected 1st Vice-Pres., Mrs. Faulkner of Stirling 2nd Vice-Pres., Mrs. C. A. Bleeker was re-elected Sec.-Treas. The Secretary with Mrs. Caskey and Mrs. Jas. Nickle, representative to the meetings of the Board of Agriculture. Following the conclusion of business there was a short musical programme, and then all repaired to the Council Chamber, where a substantial supper had been prepared by the members of Marmora branch. The next meeting will be held in Springbrook in 1918.

RUSSIAN DELEGATES' LEADERS UPHOLD COURSE OF KERENSKY

Strong Backing for War Minister — Another Demonstration Tuesday.

Petrograd Cable—Another manifestation of armed sailors and soldiers and workmen and women, in which shots were fired, took place along the Nevsky Prospect yesterday. The extent of the casualties is unknown. Yesterday's disturbances were a repetition of those of the day before, except that they occurred at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, whereas the first outbreak occurred around midnight. The manifestants were grouped along the same part of the Nevsky Prospect. A number of the firing of rifles against upper windows and roof tops at a seemingly imaginary foe.

KERENSKY UPHOLD.

London Cable—Leaders of the workmen and soldiers and peasants' delegates issued an appeal to all workmen and soldiers of Petrograd. The appeal says:

"Certain persons, who are unknown, summon you, contrary to the unanimous general will, not excepting that of the Socialist parties, to appear in the streets with weapons, and invite you to protest in this fashion against the disbandment of regiments which have dishonored themselves at the front by criminal breach of their duty towards the revolution."

"We, the delegates of the revolutionary democracy of all Russia, declare that the disbandment of the regiments by the military committee, and by order of Minister of War Kerensky, whom you elected. Consequently, every act in defence of the disbandment is an act against your brothers shedding their blood at the front. We remind you that no military unit should appear with arms without special authority of the commander-in-chief, who is in agreement with us."

"Whoever infringes this order we brand as traitors and enemies of the revolution. We are taking all measures in our power to see that this order is carried out."

"Simultaneously the provisional Government posted a proclamation reading:

"In view of the armed demonstrations of certain military units July 16 and on the night of the 16th and 17th, which resulted in several people being wounded, all demonstrations are prohibited."

BRITISH TANKS AIDING RUSSIA

Washington Report—British armored motor detachments are taking part in the Russian offensive in Galicia, according to semi-official information received to-day from Petrograd by the Russian Embassy here. This is the first mention of the presence of British forces in Russia, and says the armored cars are co-operating effectively with Belgian detachments sent there soon after the war began.

HEAVY GERMAN ASSAULTS BROKEN UP BY FRENCH

Picked Troops Mown Down Everywhere, and the Attacks Utterly Failed.

British Guns Busy, and Infantry Making Many Small Raids.

London Cable—Apparently the Germans are intent on breaking the French line in the region between Soissons and Rheims, they having delivered another tremendous assault from north-east of Craonne east of Hurlbale, into the fray were thrown picked troops, who were mown down everywhere, and the attack, like others that preceded it, failed. Near St. Quentin, where for some time the situation has been calm, the Germans also delivered attacks on a front of about a half-mile. Here they succeeded in penetrating French first-line positions, only to be expelled from them in a counter-attack.

There has been no diminution in the artillery duels between the British and Germans in Northern Belgium, nor in the ceaseless small attacks the British have been making against the German trenches for many days. Around Monchy-le-Preux these infantry attacks have resulted in the British regaining all the ground they lost to the Germans east of Arras July 11.

FRENCH REPORT.

Paris Cable—The official communication issued by the War Office tonight reads:

"The artillery was particularly active to-day between the Somme and the Aisne. South of St. Quentin a fresh enemy attack delivered about 2.30 o'clock against the hill of Montcaumon-Toutvent failed completely."

"After a bombardment of extreme violence, lasting the entire morning, the Germans attacked our positions from north-east of Craonne as far as

FISH PRICES TO COME DOWN

Food Controller Hanna's Significant Statement.

May Control the Actual Distribution.

Toronto Report.—The initial meeting of the Government Food Controller's Fish Committee, was held yesterday afternoon in the office of Hon. W. J. Hanna. Mr. Hanna himself was present, and also Mr. G. Frank Reor, who will be chairman of the Fish Committee, and Mr. F. S. Wiley, Mr. R. Y. Eaton, the third member of the committee, was unavoidably absent in Manitoba. At the conclusion of the conference Mr. Hanna issued a statement which revealed the extent of the authority and the measure of power invested in the members of the special fish committee. It also announced that within a short time the consumption of fish in this and other parts of Canada will see a material reduction in the price of fish. Mr. Hanna's statement was as follows:

"The question is being asked whether the Fish Committee will need to assume control of the actual distribution of fish. Such action may be necessary. It is hoped, however, that the interests concerned may adjust their methods to the requirements of the public. The price to the consumer must and will be lower."

"The Fish Committee is now ascertaining the proportion of the fish supply, which comes direct from the fishermen to the large retail distributors, and the proportion which goes from the fishermen to the so-called wholesale man and thence to the smaller retail dealers."

"I have vested in the members of the Fish Committee like powers to those vested in me by the order-in-council which appointed me Food Controller for Canada."

"The powers cited in the order-in-council and referred to by Mr. Hanna are very comprehensive and drastic if the food controller or his appointees should wish to exert them. For instance, the Fish Committee may govern the price of fish or the storage, distribution, sale and delivery thereof, or the committee, if it desires, may purchase, requisition, store, sell and deliver fish."

It is the intention of the Fish Committee to keep the public informed of its work through official statements. These statements, however, will be issued only when there is real information to give.

SAVED BOY FROM DROWNING.

Woodstock, Report.—John Utting, a merchant of this city, saved a boy's life at South Side Park today. A young lad named Taylor had been playing in the water about the dam and was caught in the current and jumped into the water, which was nine or ten feet deep, and was successful in rescuing the boy who was in a very weakened condition.

GERMANS HAVE ABANDONED THEIR VERDUN ASSAULT

French Firmly Hold All Their Gains, and Take Heavy Toll of the Foe.

British Fliers, In Raids and Air Battles, Again Beat the Huns.

London Cable.—After having tried ineffectually to overcome the French gains in the Verdun sector between the eastern end of the Avocourt wood and Hill 304 the Germans have ceased their costly enterprise and are now contenting themselves with throwing shells into the positions which General Petain's men forced them to evacuate. Likewise along the Chemin-des-Dames the violent infantry activity of the early week has ceased, and artillery duels instead are taking place.

The British and the Germans continued their violent artillery duels in Northern Belgium, and Field Marshal Haig's forces are keeping up their harassing patrol raids on numerous sectors of the front. One of the most successful of these enterprises was carried out each of Monchy-le-Preux, in the Arras sector, in which the British gained ground and took prisoners.

"There was rather lively artillery activity in the region of Cerny and Hurlbale, and in the sector of Craonne."

"In the morning we repulsed a German attack west of the Cerny sugar refinery."

"On the left bank of the Meuse (Verdun front) the enemy did not react in the course of the day west of Hill 304, except with his artillery."

"In the forest of Parroy there were patrol encounters. We took prisoners."

"Eastern Theatre, July 17.—There was cannonading and rifle-firing in the region of Mayadag. During the night several enemy patrols attempted to penetrate our line at Travena Stena, and in the neighborhood of Monastir, but were repulsed."

"British aviators bombarded the station at Angstadt."

BRITISH REPORT.

London Cable.—The British official communication issued this evening says:

"We carried out a successful raid last night in the neighborhood of Fresnoy. Several of the enemy were killed and their dugouts bombed."

"Owing to clouds, there was little aerial activity yesterday until the evening, when a number of combats took place, in two of which large formations were engaged on each side."

In the course of the fighting eight German aeroplanes were downed and six others were driven down out of control. Another enemy machine was shot down by our fire from the ground. Four of our machines are missing."

TELLER PULLED GUN

And Held Man Alleged to be a Forger.

Windsor Report.—While a teller in the Windsor branch of the Merchants Bank to-day held Frederick Atkinson, alias Williams, a captive by pointing a revolver at his head, a telephone call was sent in for a police officer, who placed him under arrest on a charge of forgery.

It is alleged that Atkinson, who is connected with a prominent Amherstburg family, has obtained quite a large sum of money by means of fictitious cheques bearing various names, some of which he cashed in Ford and others in Walkerville. When arrested to-day he was wearing a dark suit and a cheque endorsed with the name "J. C. Clark," a mythical individual. Walkerville police say the prisoner gave his name as George Gregory, and his residence as College street, Toronto, when he put through the "phony."

Atkinson will be arraigned in the police court to-morrow morning.

TEUTONS MAKE DRIVE AGAINST THE RUSSIANS

Great Offensive Opened to Check Invasion of Galicia.

KORNILOFF'S WORK

Eye-Witness Tells of the Marvellous Dash of His Troops.

London Cable.—The Times correspondent at the headquarters of the Eighth Russian army on the 11th, summarizing the fighting, telegraphs: "I have been watching the splendid work of Korniloff's army. With relatively small numbers it carried out an astonishing exploit. Within three days it has broken the line of the Third

GERMAN REPORT.

Berlin, Cable.—Wednesday's War Office report reads:

"Army group of Crown Prince Rupprecht. There was heavy artillery fighting on the coast in Flanders. From the year to the Lys it increased considerably toward the early morning. Between Holbeke and Warnton British reconnoitring advances were repulsed in a hand-to-hand engagement. At La Bassee Canal, Loos and Lens, and also on both banks of the Scarpe there was lively artillery fighting in the evening. When darkness set in the British made an attack north of the Arras-Cambrai Road. They were driven back except on a narrow sector west of Du Vert Wood."

British battalion which advanced north of Fresnoy was driven off effectively by our fire."

"Army group of the German Crown Prince. On the Aisne and Champagne front the fighting for three hours the most part was light, owing to the gloomy weather."

"On the left bank of the Meuse (Verdun front) there was fighting throughout the day. After strong artillery preparations for three hours the French attacked on a front of five kilometers (three miles), from Avocourt wood to the region west of Dead Man Hill. In the southeastern corner of Malancourt wood and on both sides of the Malancourt-Esnes Road the French penetrated trenches we charged recently, after bitter fighting. Elsewhere they were driven back. A fresh assault delivered in the evening by the enemy in an attempt to increase his gain, broke down without any success and with heavy losses. East of the Meuse the firing was heavier than usual."

"Army group of Duke Albrecht. There is nothing important to report."

"Front of Prince Leopold, of Bavaria.—There was an increase in the fighting at Riga, south of Dynek, and at Smorgon."

"In eastern Galicia the firing was strong at Brzezany."

"Front of the Carpathian foothills Bavarian and the Russian troops, in a combined attack, captured the heights to the east of Novica, which were stubbornly defended by the Russians, and repulsed Russian counter-attacks in the captured positions. At other points on the Donnic line also the Russians were forced back in local engagements."

"Fronts of Archduke Joseph and Field Marshal von Mackensen.—A gradual revival of artillery activity was noticeable, especially on both sides of the Suchba Valley and along the Putna and the Sereth."

"Macedonian front.—There was nothing new to report."

Austrian army under General Nadase along a front of 12 miles, forced the Dnieper, captured the historic city of Halicz, advanced 16 miles, and has taken 10,000 prisoners. 170 German officers and a hundred guns. Of the enemy's troops the Austrian fifteenth division lost four-fifths, the German 93rd and Austrian 36th division lost half its effective. Out for 44 battalions of 32,000 bayonets there remain not more than 18,000. Our losses were about a third of these. I regard that Archduke Joseph's battered Korniloff's offensive was not serious, but the enemy is now thoroughly alarmed and offering desperate resistance. Kalusz having changed hands three times in 24 hours."

TEUTONS ON OFFENSIVE.

London Cable.—Having brought up heavy reinforcements all along the line the Germans and Austro-Hungarians in Eastern Galicia have started what apparently is a tremendous offensive against the Russians. From Brody, near the northeastern border of Galicia, southward to below Kalusz, the operations are in full swing, but have not yet developed to an extent where particulars of the battles in their entirety are available.

The latest German official communication announced that the Germans have accepted the stage of battle thrust upon them by the Russians, and in a counter-attack on the line guarding Lemberg from the east have defeated the Russians over a wide front near Zloczow, which lies on the Tarnopol-Lemberg railway line, about forty miles distant from the capital. It is the north of Volhynia, and still farther north on various sectors to the Baltic Sea, especially around Smorgon and Dynek, heavy artillery duels are being fought. Near Lutsk, in the famous Volhynian fortress triangle, the Germans report the capture of many Russian prisoners."

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

The Petrograd War Office statement follows:

"As the result of a night attack our detachments occupied the village of Novica, to the south of Kalusz, but, suffering great losses in this operation, but have not yet developed to an extent where particulars of the battles in their entirety are available."

The holding of this river line is vital to the safety of the Teutonic position, not only in this part of the front, but northward to the Galician border, and that stubborn resistance would be offered there had been anticipated."

On the British front there is pronounced aerial activity, and there has been a notable amount of heavy work done by the artillery, particularly along the lines in Belgium."

HEAVY FIGHTING IN GALICIA.

Petrograd Cable—Heavy fighting is continuing in the region of Novica and Kalusz, in Eastern Galicia, the War Office announced to-day.

The Austro-German guns have opened a heavy fire along the front from South of Brzezany and in the region of Halicz. The text of the official statement reads:

"Western front: There has been intense artillery fighting on the part of the enemy in the region of the village of Poinzow, south of Brzezany and in the neighborhood of Halicz."

"South of the village of Novica, to the south of Kalusz, enemy detachments, after strong artillery preparation, attacked and occupied one of the heights. Our detachments slowly retook the line of the River Bereznica."

"An hour later the enemy renewed the attack from the direction of the village of Novica, but as the result of a valiant counter-attack by our infantry and cavalry, the enemy was thrown back, and we recaptured the above-mentioned height."

"There has been no material change in the situation on the Rumanian and Caucasian fronts."

FRENCH HOLD VERDUN GAINS.

Paris Cable—After heavy shelling the Germans counter-attacked several times during the night in the Verdun sector, but failed to regain a parcel of ground captured by the French yesterday, according to today's War Office statement.

The artillery fighting became rather violent late at night east and west of Cerny. We repulsed a surprise attack on a small post north of Viennes Le Chateau on the western border of the Argonne, and took a number of prisoners."

"On the left bank of the Meuse, after a violent bombardment, the Germans made several counter-attacks on the positions we captured yesterday from Avocourt, wood as far as the western slopes of Hill 304. All these efforts were defeated by the heroic resistance of our troops, which inflicted sanguinary losses on the Germans, without yielding to them the slightest part of the conquered ground."

"A German attack near the Calonne trench was without result. The night elsewhere was calm."

DUTCH CLAIM OF VIOLATION DISCREDITED BY THE FACTS

PETROGRAD NOW REPORTED QUIET

Disturbances Quelled, Situation Well in Hand.

Special Commission to Aid in Control.

London Cable.—The latest reports from Petrograd indicate that the disturbances of the past few days have been quelled, and that the situation is now well in hand. The streets of the capital are being patrolled by Cossacks and other mounted troops.

A Petrograd despatch reads:

"Owing to the urgent necessity of restoring public order and settling important questions, the Provisional Government has decided to appoint a special commission which will be in constant touch with the commandant of the Petrograd district."

The commission comprises M. Skobelev, Minister of Labor, and Lieut. Lebedeff, chief director of the Ministry of Marine, representing the government, and M. Goltz, representing the Workers' and Soldiers' Delegates."

Only Kiev appears to have reflected to a minor degree the disturbances here. A group of soldiers seized the arsenal, but other troops immediately took their station to guard the public institutions. Later they succeeded in arresting some of those in revolt, while others were concerned in the movement fled."

A special congress of delegates representing all the councils of Russia has been summoned to Petrograd, July 28, to determine the future composition of the Cabinet and the Government. The congress will consist of delegates from the local and district councils from the local and Soldiers' Socialists, Maximists and Minimalists' organizations and the regimental committees."

Barley.

It's Scotch.

Or it's pearl.

The Scotch is as good.

A cooling drink is made of it.

It's good qualities are understood.

It admits of numerous additions.

Additions may be medicinal or mere flavors.

First an ounce of barley should be soaked twelve hours in several waters.

Then put it with some lemon peel and a quart of boiling water.

This should be simmered an hour, then strained, the lemon juice and sugar being added.

With the addition of honey and licorice root one has a remedy for coughs and colds."

ENLIST OR LEAVE BRITAIN.

London Cable.—A convention made between the British and the Provisional Russian Government was laid before Parliament to-day to the effect that British subjects of military age in Russia and Russian subjects of military age here must either return to their own country or serve in the army of the country in which they are residing. Russian who remain in Great Britain will be subject to the operations of the military authorities by an order-in-council which it is expected will be issued on August 20.

Practically Impossible for British Ships to Have Been in Holland Waters.

London Cable.—The allegation of Dutch newspapers that part of Monday's encounter between British destroyers and German submarines, which were attempting to run the blockade from Rotterdam, occurred in Dutch territorial waters, in general, is discredited in naval circles here. The only reports thus far received from the Admiralty come from commanders of British forces in the action, in the form of wireless summaries, the substance of which was covered in yesterday's official statement. The complete reports, when received, are expected to clear up the situation satisfactorily.

It is explained that the shoals along the Dutch coast in this district are so far to sea that it is necessary for ships to steer a course well outside the territorial limits. The attack is said to have occurred at a point more than four miles from shore."

It will be a source of great satisfaction to all the allied countries if Monday's coup succeeds in putting a halt to the traffic between the Rhine and Hamburg, which has been increasing in recent weeks, with greater boldness on the part of the German captains. The British withheld their stroke until the largest flotilla thus far sent by this route was well on its way, and then dealt a quick, hard blow."

Already it has been announced from Rotterdam that Germany has decided to lay up thirty coal steamers there, instead of attempting to run them home through the sea lane."

NEW CHANCELLOR IS OPTIMISTIC

Michaelis Foresees a German-Austrian Victory

In Inaugural Message to Teuton Ally.

Copenhagen Cable.—On the occasion of his acceptance of the German Chancellorship, says a Vienna despatch, Dr. Michaelis sent a message to Count Czernin, the Austro-Hungarian Foreign Minister, declaring that he considered it his chief and inviolable duty to preserve the previous inheritance of the closest and most loyal confederation. It was his firm conviction that Austria-Hungary and Germany would be victorious, and that the war would secure for the heroic peoples a happy and bright future."

Count Czernin, in reply, said he saw the most secure guarantee of a happy future for the peoples in intimate and confident co-operation with the leaders of the German policy and firm assistance upon the well-tested alliance Austria was ready for a glorious peace, but, otherwise, was determined to fight to the last. Germany and Austria would in co-operation force conditions in securing an undisturbed and peaceful future."

HEAVY FOE REINFORCEMENTS HOLD UP KORNILOFF'S DRIVE

Teutons Try Desperately to Retain Vital Lomnica River Line of Defence.

German Counters Fail to Regain Any Ground Won by French at Verdun.

General Korniloff's armies in eastern Galicia have been held up for a time by the hurrying of heavy contingents of German reserves to the front, stiffening up the Austrian defense along the River Lomnica.

The holding of this river line is vital to the safety of the Teutonic position, not only in this part of the front, but northward to the Galician border, and that stubborn resistance would be offered there had been anticipated."

On the British front there is pronounced aerial activity, and there has been a notable amount of heavy work done by the artillery, particularly along the lines in Belgium."

HEAVY FIGHTING IN GALICIA.

Petrograd Cable—Heavy fighting is continuing in the region of Novica and Kalusz, in Eastern Galicia, the War Office announced to-day.

The Austro-German guns have opened a heavy fire along the front from South of Brzezany and in the region of Halicz. The text of the official statement reads:

"Western front: There has been intense artillery fighting on the part of the enemy in the region of the village of Poinzow, south of Brzezany and in the neighborhood of Halicz."

"South of the village of Novica, to the south of Kalusz, enemy detachments, after strong artillery preparation, attacked and occupied one of the heights. Our detachments slowly retook the line of the River Bereznica."

"An hour later the enemy renewed the attack from the direction of the village of Novica, but as the result of a valiant counter-attack by our infantry and cavalry, the enemy was thrown back, and we recaptured the above-mentioned height."

"There has been no material change in the situation on the Rumanian and Caucasian fronts."

FRENCH HOLD VERDUN GAINS.

Paris Cable—After heavy shelling the Germans counter-attacked several times during the night in the Verdun sector, but failed to regain a parcel of ground captured by the French yesterday, according to today's War Office statement.

The artillery fighting became rather violent late at night east and west of Cerny. We repulsed a surprise attack on a small post north of Viennes Le Chateau on the western border of the Argonne, and took a number of prisoners."

"On the left bank of the Meuse, after a violent bombardment, the Germans made several counter-attacks on the positions we captured yesterday from Avocourt, wood as far as the western slopes of Hill 304. All these efforts were defeated by the heroic resistance of our troops, which inflicted sanguinary losses on the Germans, without yielding to them the slightest part of the conquered ground."

"A German attack near the Calonne trench was without result. The night elsewhere was calm."

Increase in Cost of Printing

The increase in the cost of printing has been so great since the beginning of the war that an average increase in prices of twenty-five per cent has followed. This has been agreed to by the printing firms in Toronto. The cost of material has jumped all the way from 25 to 300 per cent. In advance of what it was a few years ago, and the 1917 wage schedule has brought up the cost of labor from 24 to 35 per cent. On the different kinds of book paper increases range from 44 per cent. on newsprint to 123 per cent. on Egg-shell book. Manillas have gone up 150 per cent. on Kraft wrapping, and coated enamel, from 61 to 88 per cent. Bond papers have increased from 50 to 140 per cent. and flat papers from 50 to 150 per cent. The greatest increase in the cost of materials has been of ink of all grades, which has gone from 25 to 300 per cent. over former prices.—Collingwood Bulletin.

Letter from Driver Carl Clancy

Shorncliffe Camp, Kent, Eng., June 20th, 1917

Dear mother and all—

Received that glorious parcel which I have long been looking for, I got it last night. I treated all the boys in our tent, all from Cobourg Battery, and Charlie Howard, and they all expressed their opinion on the candy and syrup. It sure seemed good to get some Canadian goods the grip was grand and I kept fine only the box was jammed up some but everything was still in the box. It is raining to-night quite hard for the first time since we came from Otterpool to Shorncliffe and the country sure needs a good rain. Well I am feeling fine and every one of the other lads are all well. Hope every one is well at home and around home and remember me to every one around Wellmans. I suppose Canada is looking her best now and hope the crops come out well for it will mean a lot of extra work in Canada now that conscription is coming as it would take all the young men away. I suppose a lot of the fellows are enlisting voluntarily but I'm glad I signed up when I did for I wouldn't feel contented at home and all the other fellows over here. We had a draft from the Bantam Battalion from Toronto, transferred into the Artillery today, and they certainly are a comical looking bunch of men there isn't a man over five feet tall and a lot of them are not that height. Well we are talking of moving to another camp but we don't know when, but wish high, dry place, and nice and handy to town and everything is going smooth and we all like it fine here, and we are all contented to stay where we are until we get ready to go to France.

A lot of returned men try to tell me that I won't see France, and that the war will be over this fall, I hope they are right and that I never have to go, but if I have to go I am ready to go any time for they have men coming out near Xmas for they have men coming out all the time to be drilled who are ready to go as soon as they are trained and we have to wait until we are of age. I haven't received any letters from Canada in two weeks I don't know how that but hope to be getting some soon. How is father and all the rest standing the summer weather.

Well this is not much news for I wrote a letter on Sunday to Cliff. With lots of love from all the boys and remember me to every one.

My address is—

WELLMAN'S W. I.

The regular meeting of the Wellman's Branch of the Women's Institute met at the home of Mrs. F. C. Snarr on July 19th, there were 30 present.

The District President, Miss Rainie gave a very favorable account of her visit to several of the Northern Institute and found nearly all in a flourishing condition and all doing a noble work for Red Cross.

The new President, Mrs. H. H. Fanning very ably filled the chair. A good programme was prepared by several young girls. Mrs. Carman Nix gave a splendid topic entitled "A girl's contentment on the farm" which proved clearly that the girl on the farm, had a freer, more healthful and enjoyable life than her city sisters in places of business.

Copper bag collection $2.25. Miss Lorena and May Totten rendered a piano duet entitled "The Witches Flight" Miss Clara Snare, instrumental, a comic reading by Mrs. Told entitled "Farm work vs. house work". Miss Hilda and Gladys Reid played a piano duet. Miss Sylvia Dracup rendered beautifully "At the Fountain".

The hostess served candy, and after singing the National Anthem all had their pictures taken by Mrs. A. H. Beckitt. Next meeting at Miss Rainie's, August 16th, visitors always welcome.

The Rawdon Khaki Club

Of The Seventh and Eighth Concessions

The officers are as follows: Pres, Miss Sina Johnston; Vice Pres, Miss Hilda Reid; Secretary, Miss Marjorie McGee; Treas., Mr. Bogart Linn.

Total number of members 27, cash on hand $9.70. The meetings are held in the members' homes every two weeks. Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Dracup kindly offered their home for an open meeting which was largely attended and a very enjoyable evening was spent by all.

Another social evening was held at Mr. Alex Johnstons. Tickets were sold on a fowl, which Mr. George McGee donated for Red Cross, tickets sold amounted to $1.58. Total proceeds of evening $4.55.

Boxes were sent to boys in the trenches, there were six sent. Field cards had been received from the soldiers acknowledging their appreciation of the thoughtfulness of the Rawdon young people.

Last meeting was held at the home of the Treasurer, Bogart Linn, members present 20.

Copper bag collection $1.10. Meeting opened by singing "We'll Never let the Old Flag Fall."

A short programme was prepared. The President acted as chairman. A reading was ably given by Miss Luella Mathews which was greatly appreciated.

Miss Luella Thain gave several splendid violin selections which were enjoyed by all. Miss Sina Johnston gave a patriotic reading.

Miss Hilda Reid also gave violin selections accompanied by Miss Luella Thain. Mr. Bogart Linn entertained with many splendid selections on his graphophone.

It was decided upon to pack boxes at next meeting held at Rose Searles' home. After singing the National Anthem members dispersed all agreeing that Bogart proved a very amiable host. Visitors always welcome.

BELLVIEW

On Friday evening July 20th Judge Wills held Court of Revision in the Council Chamber to hear the case of appeal, Rev. Father O'Reilly against his assessment on the Presbytery. Although this is a valuable property the law states clearly that a property can only be assessed for the amount it will bring in open sale and considerable reduction was made.

Major Darius Green received a letter recently from his brother Willard, East Africa. Five years ago he went to Africa as an Industrial Missionary. At the beginning of the war he enlisted with the Motor Transport Co., British East African forces. He was a prisoner of war for 22 months at Kijaba and when the British captured it from the Germans in October last he was released.

School Teacher Watched

On the last afternoon of school, the friends and pupils of Wellman's Corners gathered at the school to bid Good-bye to their retiring teacher, Miss Frances Hinchcliffe. During the afternoon, an address was read and Miss Hinchcliffe was presented with a wrist watch. Miss Hinchcliffe expressed her thanks for the lovely token of remembrance and, for the people's untiring kindness to her during her stay in their midst. She wished them every success in the years to be. After a few impromptu speeches were made, the pupils entertained the visitors with songs, readings and recitations.

A ploughing demonstration of the Tractor was given on Mr. B. Belshaw's farm on Tuesday by Boyer, Good & Co. of Ottawa, when in the short space of three hours 14 acres were ploughed. During the time of working only one gallon of gasoline was used per hour. This speaks volumes for this excellent machine which is acknowledged to be one of the best and which will be a blessing to the farming community, especially when the help question is such a problem these days. The Tractor is made by the Standard Detroit Tractor Co., Detroit.

The Tractor did the work of 8 horses in 7 minutes on the farm of C. W. Thompson with heavy chert soil to contend with. The Tractor is for sale in Canada by the Importers, Messrs. Boyer, Good & Co., Hope Chambers, Ottawa.

The Trail That Leads To Home

Though I wander far 'neath a distant star
Happy dreams for ever waking,
Keep my lonely heart from aching,
Voice soft are calling me,
There's a golden pathway shining,
Far across the sea.
There's a trail that calls me homeward night and day,
In my dreams the loved ones beckon far away,
Through the shadows and the sunshine,
Some day I shall roam,
Down that long long trail a winding,
The trail that leads to home.
In those dreamy happy faces shine
Back at home again I wander,
Absence makes the heart grow fonder, Friends across the blue give their hearts
a new.
There's a welcome waiting there,
When all my dreams come true.
This poem was composed by Pte. M. V. Cooney.

Drowned in Moira River

Sunday's excessive heat and the desire to seek relief from the sultry conditions, led Charles Harry Carter, the seventeen year old son of Mr. Fred Carter of Foxboro, to his death in the Moira River Sunday morning. About eleven o'clock, he left shore near F. Simpson's boat-house on Floyd Ashley's farm in a skiff. About fifty feet from shore he jumped from the boat to swim ashore. The stream was too much for him and he sank out of sight. The alarm was at once given and dragging parties set to work. In forty five minutes the body was found, of in about twenty feet of water. Being brought ashore, efforts were made by Dr. D. W. Faulkner at resuscitation for three quarters of an hour but without avail.
Dr. Faulkner, who is associate coroner for the county, gave a certificate of accidental death by drowning.
It seems that the boy with others had been swimming and playing about the boat in the stream and taking a notion to go ashore, Carter left the party and started. Apparently, he was taken with a cramp.

West Huntingdon Red Cross Society will hold a lawn social on the Methodist Church grounds, West Huntingdon on the evening of August 3rd.

RITCHIE'S BELLEVILLE

KEEPING THE PRICES

LOW AND THE QUALITIES
HIGH

AT RITCHIES

That has been the one aim of the RITCHIE STORE since the prices began to soar and in some instances the quality standard began to be lowered rather than increase the prices.

We have kept the prices down but not at the expense of quality and in order to do so it was necessary to make high cash purchases direct from the mills many months in advance of our actual needs. Our buyers went right to the source of supply and first of all were assured that the merchandise was of the high RITCHIE Standard and then secured the most advantageous prices that large quantities would permit.

This store numbers among its host of valued customers an ever increasing patronage from Stirling and vicinity and if determination to give unusual money saving values counts for anything together with vast stocks to choose from, then hundreds more will make RITCHIE'S their shopping headquarters, for this is indeed "the store where quality and good value count most and the interests of its customers come first."

Letters from Garnet Bailey

University College Hospital, Gower St., London W. C.
June 25th, 1917

Dear Father and Mother:—

Yesterday was the most pleasant day I ever spent in England. Dr. Smith and his wife called for me again with their car in the morning. We motored sixteen miles into the country and came back to their home in time for lunch at one. We had a great visit in the afternoon and they brought me back to the hospital after tea. I am to call on them on Thursday. They are very nice, plain sensible people with all kinds of money and friends. Mrs. Smith is very fond of her husband and her dog. All the ladies have dogs here. She keeps a couple of male and enjoys an easy life, she is not very strong.

I do not feel badly as a rule now I cannot exert myself in the least or I get dizzy and fall over but I am not sick now since I got out of bed. I go for a walk every afternoon when the days are cool, I am no good on a hot day. I don't know how long it will be before I am better but you don't need to worry, I am alive at any rate. Uncle Webster's visit passed very pleasantly. I am going down to see him as soon as I am strong enough.

I am used fine here, the nurses are very kind. Everybody outside the hospital is most considerate and do everything to make the time pass pleasantly.

From where we were yesterday on the top of the first range of Surrey hills nine hundred feet above London we could see the ocean about fifteen miles away. It was a great view from that height to look almost straight down into the valley below, with its green trees and meadows its roads and rivers winding about. England has been said to be a beautiful garden and it certainly is. It is far prettier than Canada.

On Wednesday last I saw the Queen pass in a coach. She is very stately looking. I have been by the palace several times but have never been inside the grounds of course. Rotten Row leads up to the King's Arch which is the main entrance to the palace. The royalty alone pass through this arch.

I haven't had any letters from Canada, yet I do hope I get some soon. I was like a stranger in a strange land until I made a few nice friends. These English people are easy to manage and I have learned the ropes fairly well.

I must close to be in time for the post. Your loving son, GARNET.

July 2, 1917

Dear Father and Mother:—

To-morrow I am leaving the hospital for Bromley from where I will go to some convalescent home in the country. The doctor said he was hurrying me away because I would be better in the country. I certainly appreciate the fresh air now like I never did before. I am not a bit sick but have hard work to breathe. I feel as though someone was standing on my chest and it hurts me to breathe with him there.

Uncle Webster called on me Saturday afternoon. He is up here to get his eyes tested for another pair of glasses.

He came over Sunday morning and we went down the Thames to Richmond on the boat and came back on the top of a bus. Richmond is a very old and historic town and has the largest and most beautiful park in England. We read our papers and had a look around after dinner and then came up to Key, the next town nearer London, where we had afternoon tea. After tea we came back to London having enjoyed a most perfect day. He is to call again this p.m. and I shall show him around the city itself a bit. He has been through London on the train but never stopped in the city before.

Now that I have seen London I shall be glad to get away. It is too noisy and smoky to suit me now. I have had a splendid time here and have met some of the best people but the doctor is no doubt right that I shall feel much better in the country.

I hope you are all well at home. I haven't had a letter for months and months. Did you get the picture of Reg. and myself. I weighed 190 pounds when that was taken now I weigh 154 so I won't have any more pictures taken for a while yet.

Yesterday I saw Bryson Donnan in Richmond he was quite a ways away and I didn't get a chance to speak to him as we were just getting on a bus. But you can tell Mrs. Montgomery he is looking fine.

I have met some very nice young ladies here but I find I am rapidly developing bachelor qualities.

Mack Hay Case

Magistrate Masson in police court Saturday morning accepted a plea of guilty in the cases of John and Margaret Mack of Rawdon, who were accused of theft of hay on land, occupied by Marshall Sweet, but which was formerly in Mack's possession until Sheriff Morrison disposed of them on April 4th.

Mr. W. D. M. Shorey for the defendants thought the case was one for the civil courts as all turned upon the question of equity. He contended that the case was not one of wilful trespass. The hay had been cut but not taken away.

Both the Macks acted as they did under the belief that they had rights to the land.

Crown Attorney Carnew said that the Macks continued to trespass on Sweet's land from which they were dispossessed, a notice was on July 6th, served on them forbidding trespass. However they came upon the land and an acre of hay was cut, before it was ripe.

As the guarantee was given that they would not molest the present occupant, sentence was suspended. Magistrate Masson impressed upon them that it was not right for them to interfere with Sweet.—Ontario

ENTERED INTO REST

LOUIS DESCENT

At the family residence in Stirling, on Monday, July 30th, 1917, Louis Descent, aged 68 years.

For the past 15 years the deceased had been in ill health and suffered a great deal with heart trouble. During the intense heat early Monday morning he was stricken with paralysis, which resulted in his death.

Mr. Descent was born in Montreal and came to Stirling 48 years ago. For 17 years he was in charge of the Grist Mill and was a thoroughly competent miller. He had a bright, cheery disposition and was highly esteemed by all who knew him.

He married Eliza Highland of Stirling to whom three children were born and is survived by his widow and two daughters, Delia, at home and Mrs. Cross of Toronto, his son, Louis having predeceased him 15 years ago.

The remains were interred on Tuesday in the R. C. cemetery. Service was held on Wednesday morning at the church of St. James the Minor.

Mrs. Descent and family have the sympathy of the community in their bereavement.

Minto W. I.

The regular meeting of the Minto branch of the W. I. was held at the home of Mrs. Freeman Sine on Wednesday July 11th. There were ten present.

Mrs. B. C. Tucker gave a splendid paper entitled "A Century of Dress."

It was decided to put sixty-five dollars in the bank to be used for Red Cross work.

Miss Mae Tucker rendered a Solo "A Mother's Love" which was much enjoyed by all present. The Hostess served candy. The meeting closed by singing the National Anthem.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Ben Hagerman on Wednesday, August 8th. A good program is being prepared for this meeting. Visitors always welcome.

The Scene in the Interior of the One Roomed Mud Hut.

The building was a long, one-story mud hut, with thatched roof. We entered. Behold what the front entrance had created! The long room was the scene of homely industry. From the centre rather hung a big oil lamp, shedding its rays over a patriarchal family as busy as a hive of bees. By the clay stove sat the grandfather feeding the fire with twigs and tending a brood of children playing on a dirt floor packed hard, swept clean. From one corner came the sound of a grinding millstones as a blindfolded donkey walked round and round, while a woman in red with a wonderful headgear gathered up the scraps of yellow cornmeal that oozed from the gray stones. More women in red threw the bright high in the air, winnowing it of its chaff; others leaned over clay mortars, pounding condiments with stone pestles.

Men were hurrying here and there with firewood, cooking for the travellers. One end of the room was reserved for these wayfarers, but the kang at the other corner was divided into sections. From each rather over each section swung quaint little cradles. In each cradle was a little brown baby, each baby tended by a larger child. Far away from the loud clamor of the western world we felt asleep in a clean inner room, to the soft sound of swinging cradles and grinding millstones—Atlantic Monthly.

THE NEW FRENCH PANTHEON.
(New York Tribune.)

Amongst the phrases destined to survive this war there is only one which promises to rank in expressiveness and vitality with "As cruel as a Boche." That is the phrase "As stupid as a German." Sooner or later the typical, spectacular movement of the Kaiser's Sacred Cow, the Great General Staff, turns out to be a blunder. The invasion of Belgium brings England into the war, and Zeppelin baby-killers, mobilized to discourage her people rise up a multitude of conquering soldiers. The United States, flouted as negligible, is at last drawn by the ruthless submarine campaign into the circle of Germany's foes, and the nervous bluffing in her press show how sorely she regrets it. Insensate devastation of Northern France, from the killing of fruit trees to the swish violation of graves, all supposed to further the process of bleeding a people white, serves but to kindle fiercer fire in the veins of an avenging host. And now in its turn comes the German's due reward for that fine flower of German stupidity, the persistent demolition of "Rhines."

"The Germans without reason," runs a late despatch from France, "continue to bombard the town of Rheims, on which 2,000 shells were fired to-day." Had the Boche gunners heard perhaps the news from Paris, that the French Government has determined not to restore the cathedral, but to hang up in its ruins the battle flags of the allies and to dedicate it forever as a pantheon for the unknown dead of all the armies fighting in France? Such a gesture could be no outcome of German stupidity so harmful to Germany as this, and one could well understand how the Kaiser would now only be too glad to blot out by complete destruction all evidence of his original mistake. For this pantheon will hit his country hard when peace comes.

The Kaiser must know, what the duldest schoolboy could tell him, that the most favorable peace is going to mean a heavy burden to him and his people, that the sooner French hatred dies down the better it will be for him and them, and that he must think of German trade, to say nothing of German comfort, in a thousand phases. There will be no monuments all over France to keep hatred alive, but consider the overwhelming, world-wide significance of this one, reared, as it were, by the Kaiser himself. The stupidity of it, the illimitable, ineffaby German stupidity of it. To have secured with their own hands the creation of the one everlasting reproach, the one undying appeal to the imagination of mankind against the German spirit.

"I will not call him king," said Joan the Maid of the Dauphin, "until he shall have been anointed and crowned at Rheims." On that illustrious point France was with her, and to this day Republican France preserves in its soul a kindred legendary emotion for the most renowned of all her heroes. Upon her Pantheon at Paris she has inscribed her tribute—"Aux grands Hommes la Patrie reconnaissante"—and before its portals she has placed "Le Penseur," an image of thought. This new pantheon she gives not to her great men, nor to her men of faith, but to the unknown dead who have saved her, and before their shrine the Maid will sit beside her charger, a symbol of the heart, of all that most swiftly and most simply touches every type of man.

We are swayed by our heart. Long after the cold-blooded theorist, working out on paper the artificial solidarity which he mistakes for the true brotherhood of man, shall have demonstrated to his own satisfaction the absolute necessity of "making friends with Germany," Rheims will give pause to all men who can feel as we think. And the Kaiser will have done it. Not until he and his kind, he and his millions, have done penance in sackcloth and ashes will the penalty of their blasphemous destruction lose a tithe of its weight.

Soy Bean Which Comes from China, is a Meal in Itself.

For full particulars concerning the soy bean, say the New York Evening Post, it would perhaps, be best to consult the natives of China and Japan or else the Italian army. It seems like a long jump from the soy bean fields of China to the battle-front of the Isonzo, but that is the route that only respectable lot of soy beans yet shipped to the United States has taken. It appears that the soy bean, despite the fact that it is the world's champion all-around food, did not leap into instant popularity on arrival here, and even in the course of events it was shipped over to Italy to nourish the boys in the trenches.

Not only is the soy bean the world's champion all-around food—a dish, in fact, that makes a laughing-stock of our elaborate course dinners, since it is everything from soup to nuts, all rolled into a bean—but it is, so far as is known, the only bean in captivity that grows whiskers, and red ones, at that. Unfortunately, the soy beans selected for exhibition by the department of agriculture, and shown in the above, did look as smooth-skinned and sleek as any bean ever mined in Boston town; but, for all that, in their natural state the soy beans are found dwelling two to five in a pod, and "covered with a shaggy hair."

There are, by actual count, forty-nine varieties of the soy, or soja, bean, and these forty-nine varieties could well be grown here and used to keep the great American people alive and well and out of the poor-house, whether meat and eggs and other popular fodder were soaring or not. New York, in fact, has already taken a fancy to one of the innumerable roles in which the red-whiskered bean of China is wont to masquerade. It's the juice of the soy bean that forms the basis of Worcestershire sauce—that indispensable relish which, we all insist on having in restaurants, though seldom at home.

And that isn't the only guile in which we know the soy bean. Persons who patronize Chinese or almost Chinese restaurants know that there is an indefinable something, a distinguishing everything the Chinese cook. It is the soy bean, the sauce from which is put into nearly everything produced in a Chinese kitchen. But soy enters in only a side-line compared with the other activities of the soy bean. Under treatment, the soy bean can be made into butter, milk, oil, breakfast food, crack-cakes, bread, muffins, pancakes and a kind of April-frog coffee, which, being free from injurious caffeine, should be just the thing for the nerves of the tired business man. Besides these things, there are delicious dishes to be had from roasting, baking, broiling, frying, stewing, boiling and hashing the soy bean. At least, they must be delicious, since they're served to keep one of the oldest cities in the world for all these many years and have contributed largely to "the endurance and strength of the Japanese and Chinese soldiers and athletes."

Source of Future Iron.

That iron is the very basis of our industrial civilization will be admitted by the thoughtful, and many of our greater supplies of iron ore are being rapidly depleted because of the increased per capita consumption of iron the world over, an increase which is destined to be greater in the future when the races in Asia and Africa increase their consumption and decrease their reserves have found in the past, particularly about the beginning of this century, been used to create a scare, on the ground that our supplies of usable ore were being so rapidly depleted that their exhaustion would occur within two or three generations. This is a preposterous point of view because we lower the percentage of iron in the rock, which we call "ore," the quantity of such ore increases at a rate out of all proportion to the decrease in iron content, and as we use leaner and leaner ores technical improvements will be made which will minimize any tendency to increased cost of production. The same thing has happened in gold, silver, copper and other ores, and to-day copper ores are being worked with only 1.5 per cent. of copper in them.—Metallurgical Engineering.

Minard's Liniment Cures Burns, Etc. BELIEF IN SORCERY.

Spirits Thought to Haunt Trees, Mountains and Streams.

To the natives of Korea the world is populous with active and malevolent beings who are ready at any moment to fall upon them in wrath, according to a statement made by Dr. I. M. Casanowicz, assistant curator of Old World archaeology of the United States National Museum at Washington concerning the paraphernalia of Korean sorcery now deposited in the museum collections.

Dr. Casanowicz says the Koreans believe that these beings or spirits haunt every tree, mountains and watercourse; are on every roof, fireplace and beam and infest even their chimneys, living rooms and kitchens; that they beset them at home and waylay them when abroad. They seem to be everywhere at all times and make their lives miserable.

To their influence the Koreans attribute every ill, all bad luck, official malevolence, loss of power or position and especially sickness. The natives divide these countless legions of spirits into two main classes: Demons consisting of self-existent malicious spirits of departed impoverished persons who died in distress, and spirits whose natures are partly kindly, which include the ghosts of prosperous and especially rich men, and even the latter appear to be easily offended and extraordinarily capricious.

To cope with these two forms of spirits and be assured of a little peace and quiet the Koreans have two classes of sorcerers, or as they call them, "shamans," the Panu and the Mutang. These are one and the same between the people and the spirits, but they bear little relation to each other. The former are "fortune-tellers" and the latter are the "deceiving crowd," or "bad lot." In this connection Dr. Casanowicz said:

The office of the Panu is restricted to blind men, perhaps owing to the common belief among primitive peoples that those who have been deprived of physical sight have been given an inner spiritual vision. The Mutang is always a woman, generally from the lower classes and of bad repute, and her calling is considered the very lowest in the social scale. While the Panu, as it were, born or made by dint of his loss of eyesight, the Mutang enters upon her office in consequence of a "supernatural call," consisting in the assurance of demoniacal possession, the demon being supposed to have become her double and to have superimposed his personality upon hers. The "possession" is often accompanied by hysterical and pathological symptoms.

"The spirit may seize any woman, maid or wife, rich or poor, plebeian or patrician, and compel her to serve him, and on receiving the 'call of the spirit' a woman will break every tie of custom and relationship, leave home and family, and become henceforth a social outcast, so that she is not even allowed to live within the city walls. But notwithstanding her low social status her services are in constant demand."

Traveling through the country the Mutang or sorceress is constantly to be seen going through the various musical and dancing performances in the midst of a crowd in front of a house where there is sickness. And at the close of the nineteenth century the fees annually paid to the sorcerers were estimated at $750,000.

"The Panu acts as master of the spirits, having gained by his potent formulae and ritual an ascendancy over them. By his spells he can direct them, drive them out and even bury them. The Mutang is supposed to be able to influence them with her friendship with them. She has to play to them, and coax them to go. By her performances she puts herself on rapport with the spirits and is able to ascertain their will and to name the ransom for which they will release the victim who is under torment."

"More varied than the functions of the Panu are the pacifications and propitiations, called kuts or kuts, performed by the Mutang. The kuts may be carried out either at the house of the patient or at the home of the Mutang, or at some shrine or temple, called tang, dedicated to some spirit, which are seen on the hillside in Korea. If as is occasionally the case, the Mutang belongs to a noble family, she is allowed by her family to ply her trade only in her own house. Those who require her services send the required fee and the necessary offerings and the ceremony is performed by the Mutang in her own house or at the tang."

"Her equipment consists of a number of dresses, some of them very costly; a drum, shaped like a hour-glass, about four feet high; copper chains, a copper gong, a copper rod with small bells or tinklers suspended from it by copper chains, a pair of telescoping baskets, strips of silk and paper banners which float around her as she dances; fans, umbrellas, wands and images of men and animals."

SUNLIGHT AND SOIL.
Causes of the Difference of Color in Foliage and Flowers.

It is sunlight that chiefly causes the difference in the color of the foliage and flowers of plants. The foliage and flowers of plants absorb sun rays of certain colors and reflect others, and this it is that makes the flowers take on their proper colors.

We know that the character of the soil and position of a plant in relation to sunlight cause flowers to change their colors. Some wild flowers of New Jersey are of quite a different shade of color from the same flowers in Illinois. The character of the soil causing the flowers to change their selection of the sun's rays, and thus the color of the flower is changed.

To prove that the character of the soil may change the color of flowers take any of the pink flowering varieties of Hyacinth, tulips, ranunculus, etc., and carefully wash away the old soil, and replace it with soil which has been incorporated with a quantity of red ochre or a pound of alum broken into pieces the size of a marble, to each bush or plant of soil. In this soil the plants, instead of producing pink flowers, as formerly, will produce flowers of blue.

New shades of flowers are produced by crossing one color with another, sometimes what an artist mixes paints to obtain desired shades and colors, and with far more trouble and far less accuracy. Sometimes on the same stem flowers of different colors are found due to the tendency to break away from the established type. In nature nothing is still. It is either progression or retrogression.

The range of color for each species seems to be confined within certain limits, though a wilder is gradually extending these limits. Yellow, white and purple are the commonest colors of flowers in the world, and most probably the simplest and most primitive. The colors of the latest and most highly evolved—Exchange.

German Finance
(New York Times.)

Saturday's cablegrams brought the result of the sixth German loan and the announcement of the ninth German credit. The latest loan produced $13,120,000 marks. The previous credits voted were around 80,000,000 marks and the credit at present asked is for 15,000,000 marks. To appreciate that burden it is necessary to recall the budget statement for 1917. There was a deficit requiring 3,568,000 marks to balance the extraordinary expenses, and 1,250,000,000 to balance the ordinary budget. New taxes were announced, and the margin upon loans to facilitate subscriptions to the new imperial loans was reduced from 25 to 16 per cent. Even in ordinary times the German budget was customarily balanced by borrowing. Now Germany is borrowing to pay interest. Of each new loan something like a fifth is now absorbed on interest account, and that fraction will not grow smaller.

Germany is proud of these figures and the budget speech pointed out how superior the showing was to slavery foreign creditors, a reference not too obscure to the billion dollars procured here by Germany's enemies. Germany may not need the dollars, but surely Germany would not scorn the million marks chased here with the credits granted to our allies, our "slaves" in German view.

The figures above are German, and supply about all that is known of Germany's financial affairs. To be above suspicion of bias, the comment on the figures also is best supplied by German authorities. In April O. K. Davis reported for the Times an interview with Herr Haverstein, the president of the Reichsbank. He thought that the limit of Germany's financial capacity would be reached when its interest charge absorbed its total annual increase of wealth. He believed that a sum of one hundred billion marks would bring Germany to the point of collapse. As the interest Germany already pays exceeds the limit which Herr Haverstein set as impossible to be reached because victory would be won previously, the present stage of hostilities must be included as a part of the financial picture.

On the surface German complacency is justified. No war boom surpasses hers. Her industries are prosperous, and her savings bank deposits increase. But all German accounts are in error, and the picture is not good outside Germany. The mark is at a discount of over 40 per cent. in neighboring neutral countries, and soon may not pass at all. As Germany prints her own marks, there is no reason why the supply should not be increased to any extent. But Germany is beginning to spend gold abroad. That is the official report. All through the war, Germany has been miserably with gold as generous with paper. In the speech announcing the new credit Count Roden said: "Gold in the form of jewelry and coins has been hoarded by the Reichsbank." The reason for the order is that the Reichsbank within a fortnight reported the first loss of gold since the war. It was only 76,000,000 marks, less than $20,000,000. But why was it parted with? The customary explanation is that it was desirable to support the bank's ratio of exchange. But what does Germany care for exchange if it can buy with printed money? And how far would that trifling sum go in supporting billions of marks afloat? It is equally easy to imagine that Germany needed something which paper marks would not buy, and had no option but to part with gold.

So long as Germany held her gold she published her iron and steel statistics. She was as proud of them as of her swelling debt. They furnished proof of the German will to conquer, and bounded up faster than the prices of her industrial in the illicit market for them. But for recent months the figures have not been available. It is as disturbing almost as would be the suppression of the bank statement. Perhaps labor power is falling. Perhaps the gold went for some indispensable allow. But the mark is what it may, the world will watch the German gold stock even more closely than it watches the bank reports.

Ambassador Gerard shrewdly remarked in this city that the Reichsbank and the war loan banks do not make their reports on the same day. The Reichsbank notes are secured by gold, but the provincial banks state their accounts simply in marks. There is no means of knowing whether the currency of Germany is Reichsbank notes or war loan notes. When the Reichsbank reports on the same day, the statement it calls in its notes from the provincial banks and issues to them war loan notes. A few days later the process is reversed, and the ratio of the Reichsbank suffers, with nobody the wiser.

It staggers credulity to believe that Germany can buy the materials it needs with paper marks, or that it would dare to part with gold enough to buy them. If the war loan banks' operations are intelligible at all, all Germany is enslaved to the government. The first step is to make good. If the war loans are repudiated, every German will be beggared. If the war loan interest is paid—the principal cannot be paid in hundreds of years—it will absorb the labor of every able-bodied German to support the others in Government institutions as wards of the State.

Potato Crop Insurance

It is estimated that 25% of the Potato crop of Ontario or approximately 5,000,000 bushels is lost annually by the farmers of Ontario due to attacks of the Late Blight and of the Colorado Potato Beetles. This loss can be prevented by spraying thoroughly at regular intervals with Bordeaux Mixture as a fungicide to prevent blight and Paris Green or Arsenate of Lead as a poison to combat the Beetle.

Late Blight is a fungus disease which is particularly noticeable on potatoes in late summer and is quite serious when the weather is all warm, moist and muggy. It is first noticeable in the form of dark colored spots on the leaves, which soon begin to curl up and in some instances the diseased portion of leaves and stem emit a smell like that of bad fish. A careful examination of the under surface of the leaves where these brownish spots appear will reveal the presence of a greyish white "mould" or "mildew." The spores produced in these spots on the leaves are scattered by wind and water and are capable of infecting a healthy potato leaf and starting the disease afresh. If no spraying has been done and the weather conditions are at all favorable, the spores thus produced rapidly infect the surrounding plants and the disease spreads most rapidly. The disease can be prevented by thoroughly spraying with Bordeaux Mixture. It is an insurance, in fact an investment worth while.

Bordeaux Mixture

The Bordeaux Mixture for controlling Late Blight, also Early Blight, should be very carefully prepared and applied in a very thorough manner in order to be effective. The formula is:

4 lbs. Copper Sulphate (Blue-stone)

4 lbs. Lime, freshly slaked,

40 gals. Water.

The Copper Sulphate and Lime should not be mixed in concentrated solutions as this lessens the value of the mixture and fungicide. Dissolve each separately and dilute by making up to 20 gallons with water before straining into the spray tank. Bordeaux should be used fresh, though stock solutions may be kept for an indefinite period. These stock solutions may be made as follows:

Put 20 gals. of water in a barrel and suspend 20 lbs. of blue-stone in an old sack just below the surface of the water. The blue-stone will soon dissolve and each gallon of the solution will contain 1 lb. of the Copper Sulphate. Stake 20 lbs. of lime, good burnt lime, and make up to 20 gals. with water. To make the Bordeaux Mixture put 4 gals. from each of the stock solutions in separate vessels and dilute each to 20 gals. of water and mix together in the spray tank.

In order to control the Potato Beetles some poison may be used along with the Bordeaux Mixture. Add 1 lb. of Paris Green and 1 1/2 lbs. of Arsenate of Lead to 40 gallons of the mixture. This has proved a very effective remedy.

In order to do effective work all parts of the potato plants should be covered with a fine mist or spray. The plants should be sprayed about every two weeks. Carefulness and thoroughness pay and pay well, while careless and poor work is simply energy and material thrown away.

Stop Canning Beans

A letter to the local trade from one of the largest canning companies states that the Washington Government has prohibited the packing of beans and other "keepable" food commodities in time in order to conserve the supply of tin for the canning of perishable goods, and for military purposes. The letter further stated that the Ottawa Government has been approached by Washington with the purpose of getting a like prohibition in Canada, and that, as the supply of tin came from the United States there was a probability that an order to that effect would be forth coming from Ottawa in the near future.

Everyone Should Drink Hot Water in the Morning

Wash away all the stomach, liver, and bowel poisons before breakfast.

To feel your best day in and day out, to feel clean inside; no sour bile to coat your tongue and sicken your breath or clog your head, no constipation, bilious attacks, sick headache, colds, rheumatism or gassy, acid stomach, you must bathe on the inside like you bathe outside. This is vastly more important, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do, says a well-known physician.

To keep these poisons and toxins well flushed from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, drink before breakfast each day, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from your pharmacist. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant. Drink phosphated hot water every morning to rid your system of these vile poisons and toxins; also to prevent their formation.

To feel like young folks feel; like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became saturated with an accumulation of body poisons, begin this treatment and above all, keep it up! As soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and purifying, so limestone phosphate and hot water before breakfast, act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

THE SHERERIZED STORE

I'm running a Shererized store: I wouldn't go back any more, for a carload of rats, to the way of our dads, to the sloppy old methods of yore.

You ask, "what does Shererize mean?" Well firstly, its making things clean; in a Shererized store there's no junk on the floor; no dirt or disorder is seen. The goods are protected from fleas; the mice do not know at the peas; the rat never gloats o'er the shaker rolled oats, and the cat doesn't roost on the cheese. The goods that a customer buys aren't specked by the frolicsome flies, and no how-wow can creep on the crackers I keep, no matter how often he tries.

Folks come to my Shererized store, and when they have looked the place o'er, they murmur, "Gee Whiz! How delightful it is! We've seen nothing like it before!" The customer cheerfully spends and when from my palace he wends, he gives me no knocks, but boosts as he walks, my Shererized store to his friends.

Oh, here in my Shererized shop, economy's always on top; for things are at hand, at my instant command. I don't have to trot till I drop. The goods are in sight of the scale, I am wasting no time in a sale; I gambol and smile in the old fashioned style, as I merrily take in the kale.

The problems that bothered my brain, and drove me three-quarters insane, in the times that are past, have been settled at last; the word "Shererize" will explain. The problems of loss and waste, the problem of profits haste, and ten thousand more, of the grocery store, have all from my doorway been chased. I'm running a Shererized store, I don't tear my hair any more, I don't sprinkle tears on my whiskers and ears, or spend my nights walking the floor.

Si Is A Reformer

Said Silas McGugin, in Peeweeple's store: "Food prices are higher than ever before. If I was in charge of this country you'd see the jails filling up, now just take it from me! The man who boosts prices commits a real crime and every blamed one of 'em ought to do time. I had my way in this country I swear I'd see that you all got a deal that was square." "Say, Silas," said Grandpa McGee with a grin, "how much will you take for that wheat in your bin?" Said Silas: "Why sell it? I'll keep it till May. 'Twill double in price, so the wheat experts say." "That's just what I thought," said old Grandpa McGee. "That you're a reformer is easy to see," said Silas: "Please cut out your insults, you snide!" He left and Jed Peeweeple laughed till he cried.

A Gigantic Meteor Stream.

One of the most accomplished and additional students of meteors, Dr. Pennington, is of the opinion that the August meteor, which radiate from the constellation Perseus and are sometimes popularly called the "tears of St. Lawrence," belong to a stream so broad that the earth, travelling between eight and sixteen miles a second, occupies seven weeks in crossing it.

This would make the width of the stream, if the earth traversed it at a right angle to its course, nearly 80,000,000 miles. These meteors are so scattered all round the orbit in which they travel that some of them are visible every year. They are believed to be connected with a bright comet which appeared in 1862 and is supposed to have a period of about 120 years. The outer end of its elliptical meteor stream is situated far beyond the orbit of Neptune.—Los Angeles Times.

Elephants' Fear of Mice.

The reason why one tiny mouse is capable of scaring a whole herd of elephants half to death is found in the fact that in the elephants' native land there are little animals known as chachanas, which feed on a small, sour berry of which elephants are very fond. They live in settlements, something after the manner of prairie dogs, under the berry bushes, and sometimes when feeding the elephants trample upon the little towns, and the chachanas in their fright frequently run up the tubes of the elephants' trunks. Their long, sharp claws catch in the flesh, and they cannot be ejected. The more violently the monster blows through its trunk the more firmly the hooked claws of the little animal become imbedded in the flesh, and inflammation and death are the result. In captivity, therefore, the elephants think they are in danger of the deadly chachanas when they see a mouse.—New York American.

A Tale of Six Cities.

There are at least six cities on this continent which every one should see. Every one should see New York because it is the largest city in the world and because it combines the magnificence, the wonder, the beauty, the sorrows and the shame of a great metropolis. Every one should see San Francisco because it is so vivid, so alive, so golden. Every one should see Washington, the clean, white splendor of which is like the embodiment of a national dream. Every one should see the old gray granite city of Quebec piled on its hill above the river, like some fortified town in France. Every one should see the sweet and aristocratic city of Charleston, which suggests a museum of tradition and early American elegance, and of course every one should see New Orleans.—Julian Street in Collier's Weekly.

Arms of Washington.

The arms which Washington used are heraldically described as follows: Argent (silver), two bars gules (red), in chief three mullets (stars) of the second, gules (red). The crest: A raven with wings addorsed, sable (black), is sitting out of a shield coronet, or (gold). Although these arms were used by Washington, the arms of the family in Yorkshire are materially different, bearing a lion and being surmounted by a crest with an eagle, not a raven. The Yorkshire arms were the original of the Washington family, first king of the country from Odin, first king of Scandinavia. Fifty-five generations were required to evolve George Washington from Odin.

Not in Stock.

"How much are calories? I want to buy 500," a young woman inquired of the floorwalker.

"Calories?" he replied. "I don't believe—500—I doubt if we have that many in stock. However, inquire at the dress goods counter."

"Have you any calories in stock?" she asked the clerk.

"Calories? What's them?" The clerk for once looked puzzled.

"Well, I don't know. But I know that for once looked puzzled. Calories, you know, are something to eat. I went to a food lecture the other day, and they said to eat at least 500 calories a day. I suppose it's a vegetable."

"I suppose so," said the clerk.—Columbus Dispatch.

True Eloquence.

True eloquence, indeed, does not consist in speech. It cannot be brought from afar. Labor and learning may toll for it, but they will toll in vain. Words and phrases may be marshaled in every way, but they cannot compass it. It must emanate in the man, in the subject and in the occasion. Affected passion, intense expression, the pomp of declamation, all may inspire to it. They cannot reach it. It comes if it comes at all, like the outbreathing of a fountain from the earth or the bursting forth of volcanic fires with spontaneous, original, native force.—Webster.

Heredity.

"Father?"

"Well, son, what is it now?"

"I want to ask you an important question."

"Fire ahead, boy; I shan't be offended at what you ask."

"Thank you, I want to ask why you are so old fashioned in your ideas?"

"I suppose it's heredity. I remember asking my own father that very same question."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom McCauley of Trenton and Mrs. Margaret Dempsey of Florida were guests at Mr. J. Fitzpatrick's on Sunday.

Percy Ashley, son of Howard Ashley West Huntingdon met with an accident yesterday afternoon. He was raking hay on the lower farm, when the span of colts he was driving became frightened at the hay blowing about the field and ran away. Percy was thrown off the seat and when picked up it was found that four ribs were broken also cuts about the head.

Notes—Just as we go to press we learn that Percy Ashley succumbed to his injuries.

A public meeting in the interest of increased food production is called for Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock in the Opera House. This meeting is being called in the interest of Stirling, Rawdon and Sidney. The Ladies are cordially invited. Professor W. A. Parks of Toronto University will address the meeting. Plans relating to greater production and an increased supply of labor to the farmer will be discussed. Every body come to this meeting.

Red Cross Lawn Social

A very successful social was held by the Rawdon Branch Red Cross on Thos. Montgomery's lawn on Wednesday evening, July 26th. The weather was all that could be desired and a very enjoyable evening was spent. The proceeds amounted to $401.91. Mr. Chas. Morgan donated a quilt which was auctioned and brought in $4.00. The two crochet yokes donated by the Misses Wallace, sold by ticket brought $6.00. The Log Cabin quilt was drawn by Bert Finkle of Chatterton.

The expenses for the supplies were:—

Ice Cream ..... $36 40
Soft Drinks and Cigars ..... 14 10
Tickets ..... 70
Bananas, Oranges and Lemons ..... 14 15
Peasants and Melons ..... 5 75
Red Cross Pins ..... 30 10

Leaving a balance to the Red Cross of $300.71.

The Red Cross ladies wish to convey their sincere thanks to all that helped to make the social a success.

SCORE OF BANDS

AT THE "BIG FAIR"

Innes, the Bandman, to Head Unusually Good Musical Programme

"Innes, the Band Man," who will head the musical programme this year at the Canadian National Exhibition, with his famous band of soloists, is an Englishman a graduate of the London Conservatory of Music, and the Band of the Life Guards. Later he went to Paris, where he attracted the attention of the late Pat Gilmour, the greatest of all American leaders. He accompanied Gilmour to America, and has proved a worthy successor to the old master. Innes' band was acclaimed the finest of the many fine bands heard at the Panama Pacific Exposition. He it was, also, who planned and carried to success the remarkable series of festivals which made the Alaska Yukon Exposition notable among all other exhibitions for its musical programmes. Innes will give two free concerts daily, and, in addition, there will be concerts by a score of other bands day and night.

Aeroplane Mail Service

As an evidence of the possibilities of aerial navigation in peace times the delivery of mail in Belleville recently may be taken as the forerunner of future competition by sky skimmers with railways and ships in transporting passengers and mail. A number of aviators from Camp Mohawk came up Saturday and were guests over Sunday at the Hotel Quinte. Their letters arriving at the Camp post office after their departure were tied up in a bundle and Sunday morning were brought to the city by an aviator who circled about until directly over the Hotel Quinte when he dropped the letters to his comrades awaiting below. His aim was good and the mail delivery was perfect.—Belleville Intelligencer.

R. C. Lawn Social

A very successful lawn social was held last evening on Mr. Geo. Whitty's grounds in aid of the Presbytery Building Fund.

A beautiful moonlight night, the brilliant lighting of the spacious lawn, and the music by Belleville Orchestra made every one feel that the evening was all that could be desired. There were prettily decorated booths, where fancy work was sold, ice cream, soft drinks, home made cooking, etc.

Miss Devlin of Kingston gave two solos and her lovely voice and pleasing manner won the hearts of the audience that she was recalled again and again.

Little Miss Bernadette McGee and Patty Cross presented Miss Devlin with bouquets.

Mr. Harold Barrett well known to Stirling audiences gave two selections and was enjoyed heartily.

Just at the close of the evening the names of the winners of lucky tickets was announced. Henry Reid, Stirling won the pig, Miss Laura Shea, Campbellford won the fowl, and Miss D. Decent the crochet yoke.

There was a guessing contest on a doll as no one guessed the name "Jane" the doll was bought by Rev. Father O'Reilly.

A dance was held in the Music Hall after the lawn social, which was also well attended.

Letter of Condolence

Stirling, July 30, 1917
To MRS. WM. POLLOCK AND FAMILY,
Harold, Ont.,

We the officers and members of Loyal Orange Lodge, Wellington Corners desire to thus express to you all our deep sympathy in the loss of a kind husband and a loving father. We shall miss him as he was a member of long standing and one whose faithfulness to the principals of the Order will not soon be forgotten.

We do not mourn as those with out hope and we pray that the God whom he trusted may comfort you all in your bereavement.

COMB SAGE TEA IN

HAIR TO DARKEN IT

It's Grandmother's Recipe to keep her Locks Dark, Glossy, Beautiful.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle.

It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Much talent is devoted to the writing of original sketches for the entertainments, and everybody from the general public to the very highest aristocracy has its part of their satire. The girl prairie is immensely popular, and always brings wild applause to the young barefaced lads who take them. Being aided by the illusion produced by the crowding some feminine apparel from the friends across the channel or from the village girls. "Ain't he a peach," is the village's compliment which can be paid to a soldier-servant who dons the petticoat. It may interest the girls to learn to know that the soldiers grow, come to know that the soldiers grow, come to know that the soldiers grow,

PRESERVE EGGS NOW

(Experimental Farm Notes)

The indications are that eggs will be dear next winter, dearer than they were last winter so those who want eggs had better put some down now while they are comparatively cheap. Do not use oat bran, salt of such mediums; moreover, the patent "re-calcified" usually advertised as being so simple and effective had better be adopted with caution. Better use something that has been tried and found satisfactory.

According to Dr. Frank T. Shutt, Dominion Chemist, lime water is one of the best preservatives and we quote the following from his Exhibition Circular No. 42.

The method of preparation is simply to slack one pound good quick lime with a small quantity of water and then stir the milk of lime so formed into 5 gallons of water. After this mixture has been kept well stirred for a few hours it is allowed to settle. The supernatant liquid, which is now "saturated" limewater, is drawn off and poured over the eggs, previously placed in a crock or water-tight barrel.

As exposure to the air tends to precipitate the lime (as carbonate), and thus to weaken the solution, the vessel containing the eggs should be kept covered. The air may be excluded by a covering of sweet oil, or by packing upon which a paste of lime is spread. If, after a time there is any noticeable precipitation of the lime, the lime-water should be drawn off and replaced with a further quantity newly prepared.

GENERAL PRECAUTIONS NECESSARY TO TAKE

It is essential that attention be paid to the following points:

1. That perfectly fresh eggs only be used.
2. That the eggs should throughout the whole period of preservation be completely immersed.
Although not necessary to the preservation of the eggs in a sound condition a temperature of 40 degrees Fh. to 45 degrees Fh. will undoubtedly materially assist towards retaining good flavour or rather in assisting in arresting that "stale" flavour so often characteristic of packed eggs.

Respecting the addition of salt, it must be stated that our experiments—conducted now throughout fifteen seasons—do not show any benefit to be derived therefrom; indeed, salt frequently imparts a limey flavour to the egg, probably by inducing an interchange of the fluids within and without the egg. Our advice is, do not add any salt to the lime-water.

Hay Sent by Parcel Post

The daily Ledger, of Tacoma, Washington, prints the picture of a load of hay which was sent by parcel post. A man in Buhl, Idaho, had a call from his brother in Garland. Hay at that place was held at $35 a ton and impossible to buy at that; so the Garland man ordered a ton sent by mail. It was put up in 100 pound lots, and the postage was $1.08 per 100 pounds which made $21.60 a ton. As the original cost was $25, this made the hay delivered at Garland by mail worth $46.60. That surely is high-priced hay, and a case where the United States parcel post, good and all as it may be, fell down on delivering the goods cheaply. It is doubtful, however, if expressage in the hay would have been cheaper, and the customer wanted the hay at once, as he could buy none in his home market.

IF BACK HURTS USE
SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers you—Meat forms uric acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid-stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Ambiguous.

When Bilkins was away from home on a long business trip he got a letter from his wife that still puzzles him. It ended thus:

"Baby is well and lots brighter than she used to be. Hoping that you are the same, I remain, your loving wife."
—Manchester Union.

Tightwad.

"I understand that Mr. Pinchpenny has been operated on for appendicitis," remarked Miss Cayenne.

"Yes. It's the first time any one was known to get anything out of him."
"And even then they had to give him chloroform to get that."

THE TRACFORD

Manufactured by Standard Detroit Tractor Co., Detroit.

What It Is

The TRACFORD is a strong, well-designed, and thoroughly tested attachment for the standard Model T Ford car.

The rear wheels, fenders, rear springs and running board hangers are removed, and a single half-inch hole bored in the Ford frame on each side about half way of its length. A water circulator and auxiliary brake attachment are furnished as standard equipment.

A blue-print and full assembling instructions are furnished with each TRACFORD.

How Tracford Power and Pulling Ability Is Obtained

A hardened steel roller pinion replaces the regular Ford rear wheels; this roller pinion engages an internal gear on the inside of the TRACFORD wheel rim. The result is a nine to one reduction. The speed of the Ford is reduced nine times. The power delivered at the drawbar is increased nine-fold. Anyone familiar with the pulling ability of the Ford car can appreciate what this means.

The Tracford Will Pull—

PLOWS—Two twelve-inch bottoms in any ordinary soil—and a sixteen inch bottom anywhere.

HARROWS—Two sections of spring-tooth—or three sections of peg harrow.

MANURE SPREADER—Loaded and Working.

Drills Roller or Pulverizer Mowers Binders
Corn Harvesters Potato Diggers Hay Loaders
Road Drags Road Graders

THE TEST:—ANY LOAD on ANY FARM that can be successfully handled by three horses.

The Stripped Chassis with Tracford Attached

Note how the weight of both the Ford machine and the TRACFORD attachment rests on the dead axle leaving the Ford axle for driving power purposes only.

Price: $175 Duty Paid

Does Not Injure the Ford

By the added circulation afforded by the circulator furnished by us, overheating is avoided. A little study of the mechanical principles involved will show you that the Ford car is under no undue strain. The strain is all on the attachment. You know, of course, that by gear reduction a given pound pull can be increased in direct proportion to the decrease in speed. It is on this principle exactly that the TRACFORD operates.

The depreciation on any Ford car, properly cared for, is no greater for a day's work with the TRACFORD than for a similar time on the road at twenty to twenty-five miles an hour.

Outstanding Features:—

- 1—Low initial cost.
- 2—Depreciation in Value Very Low.
- 3—Upkeep small and repairs easily available and cheap.
- 4—No work—no feed.
- 5—Great variety of uses.
- 6—Easy to set up and operate.

Costs less than One Horse and does the work of Three.

The Tracford is Guaranteed

The TRACFORD is warranted to be made of good material and in a good and workmanlike manner. Should any parts of the TRACFORD prove defective within one year from purchase of said TRACFORD on account of inferior material or workmanship, and such parts be returned, transportation prepaid thereon, and be found to be defective on account of such inferior material or workmanship, the MANUFACTURER will furnish new parts in lieu of such defective parts, free.

If you want to know more about the TRACFORD, send for our booklet: "THE TRACFORD CATECHISM."

JUDGE AT "EX"

Canadian National Revives Competition for Farmers and Farmers' Sons

Among the new departures at the Canadian National Exhibition this year are the judging competitions for young farmers and farmer's sons under 20 years of age. They will be held under the supervision of the Ontario Government, and a very large entry is expected from among the three thousand students now taking the Government short courses. Liberal prizes are offered to winners in live stock, poultry, grain, roots, fruits and vegetables. Some years ago judging competitions were held at Toronto, but the present ones are on a much more pretentious scale and under Government auspices should prove a great success.

OBITUARY

PERCY ASHLEY

The death of Percy Ashley, of West Huntingdon who succumbed to his injuries on Thursday, August 2nd, 1917 was a shock to the whole neighborhood.

His life had been an exemplary one, and his friends and associates held him in deepest regard. In his home life he was considerate and thoughtful, a young man of strong character and a faithful member of the church to which he belonged.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Ashley, one brother in the West and a sister survive him. The family have the sympathy of the community in their bereavement.

The funeral services were held at the family residence West Huntingdon, on Saturday afternoon conducted by Rev. J. T. Hall. Interment in Stirling cemetery under the auspices of I. O. O. F. 239, of which society he was a member.

MRS. LYMAN F. MOON

At the family residence, after a lingering illness, on Tuesday, July 31st, Dollie Green, beloved wife of Lyman F. Moon and youngest daughter of Mrs. Esther and the late Ebenezer Green.

Mrs. Moon was born on the old homestead in Rawdon Tp. just west of the village. Sixteen years ago she married Lyman F. Moon, formerly of Madoc.

For several years she was a member of St. Andrew's Church choir and a general favorite in Stirling.

During her illness of five years she maintained the same happy disposition. She is survived by a husband, mother one brother, George residing near the village, and two sisters Mrs. W. H. Calder of Waukegan, Florida, and Annie at home.

The funeral service was conducted at the house on Thursday afternoon, Aug. 2nd by Rev. Mr. Salisbury of Buffalo, in the absence of Rev. J. T. Hall, pastor of St. Andrews.

The floral tributes were numerous and beautiful. Interment in Stirling cemetery. Sincere sympathy is extended to the bereaved.

A Disastrous Fire At Consecon

The home of Dr. J. A. Bean was completely destroyed by fire at this village early on Wednesday morning of this week. Residents were awakened by the ringing of the Church bells at 4 a.m. and soon found that the fire had gained such complete control that it was impossible to save the building. The Doctor himself was suffocated by the dense smoke while his wife and child are severely if not dangerously burnt. The home was one of the finest residences in Prince Edward County built about 30 years ago by the late Dr. Thornton.

Dr. Bean had only recently come to Consecon having purchased the practice when Dr. Fred Thornton left. Much sympathy is felt for the widow and child for whom everything is being done while the villagers spared no effort in assisting as far as possible at the fire.

Dr. Farncomb, Trenton and Dr. Broad of Wellington were soon at hand and every effort is being made to alleviate the suffering of the wife and child.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of Herbert Lewis Engleton who entered into rest August 10th, 1911.

"No loved one stood beside him,
To bid a fond farewell,
No word of comfort could he leave,
To those he loved so well.
Painful he thy rest dear brother,
Tis sweet to breathe thy name,
In life we loved you very dear,
In death 'twill be the same."

Letter to Mrs. A. Conley from her son Pte. Bert Conley

No. 8 British Red Cross Hospital,
B.E.F., France, July 16th, 1917

Dear Mother:—

You will no doubt be surprised to get a letter from me. No doubt you have got some from the matron as she said she had written you. I sure have had a tough pull of it for the past two weeks. Well mother they had to take my leg off at last. I have had nine operations but they couldn't save it. If all goes well you may see me back in Canada in about five months. It will take a long time before the stub is strong enough to fit an artificial leg on. You have to go to a special hospital in England so they tell me. I sure feel like a new boy since I had it off. It was sapping all the strength out of me. I have been very sick and am very weak now but will soon pick up again. No doubt you will feel bad to think I had to lose it but I would sooner lose it than my life.

I get the very best of care and food, a person could not wish for any better. The sisters are very kind to me and give me little things to eat. I received the parcel all O.K. Thank Belle and Bill Bailey very much for me and tell them I will write when I get strong, also Ted Archer, tell her not to stop writing because if she knew what I have suffered in the past three months one does not feel like writing.

Well mother this will be all for now as I am tired. Hope to hear from you soon. Love to all

Your affectionate son, BERT.

Mr. Nelson Seales spent Sunday visiting his brother Mr. George Seales of Minto.

Mr. George Cooke is in Toronto, attending the L. O. O. F. convention.

A gloom was cast over our community last Thursday afternoon when we heard of the sudden death of Mr. Percy Ashley. Percy was engaged in taking hay on Wednesday afternoon when his team of horses became frightened and breaking through the racks were unmanageable. The injuries that Percy received were fatal. He will be much missed as he was a general favourite with those who knew him best. The funeral which was held on Saturday was largely attended, the many floral tributes showed the esteem in which he was held by all. The sorrowing family have the sympathy of the entire community.

THE TRACFORD

Manufactured by Standard Detroit Tractor Co., Detroit.

What It Is

The TRACFORD is a strong, well-designed, and thoroughly tested attachment for the standard Model T Ford car.

The rear wheels, fenders, rear springs and running board hangers are removed, and a single half-inch hole bored in the Ford frame on each side about half way of its length. A water circulator and auxiliary brake attachment are furnished as standard equipment.

A blue-print and full assembling instructions are furnished with each TRACFORD.

How Tracford Power and Pulling Ability Is Obtained

A hardened steel roller pinion replaces the regular Ford rear wheels; this roller pinion engages an internal gear on the inside of the TRACFORD wheel rim. The result is a nine to one reduction. The speed of the Ford is reduced nine times. The power delivered at the drawbar is increased nine-fold. Anyone familiar with the pulling ability of the Ford car can appreciate what this means.

The Tracford Will Pull—

PLOWS—Two twelve-inch bottoms in any ordinary soil—and a sixteen inch bottom anywhere.

HARROWS—Two sections of spring-tooth—or three sections of peg harrow.

MANURE SPREADER—Loaded and Working.

Drills Roller or Pulverizer Mowers Binders
 Corn Harvesters Potato Diggers Hay Loaders
 Road Drags Road Graders

THE TEST—ANY LOAD on ANY FARM that can be successfully handled by three horses.

The Stripped Chassis with Tracford Attached

Note how the weight of both the Ford machine and the TRACFORD attachment rests on the dead axle leaving the Ford axle for driving power purposes only.

Price: $175 Duty Paid

Does Not Injure the Ford

By the added circulation afforded by the circulator furnished by us, overheating is avoided. A little study of the mechanical principles involved will show you that the Ford car is under no undue strain. The strain is all on the attachment. You know, of course, that by gear reduction a given pound pull can be increased in direct proportion to the decrease in speed. It is on this principle exactly that the TRACFORD operates.

The depreciation on any Ford car, properly cared for, is no greater for a day's work with the TRACFORD than for a similar time on the road at twenty to twenty-five miles an hour.

Outstanding Features:

- 1—Low initial cost.
- 2—Depreciation in Value Very Low!
- 3—Upkeep small and repairs easily available and cheap.
- 4—No work—no feed.
- 5—Great variety of uses.
- 6—Easy to set up and operate.

Costs less than One Horse and does the work of Three.

The Tracford is Guaranteed

The TRACFORD is warranted to be made of good material and in a good and workmanlike manner. Should any parts of the TRACFORD prove defective within one year from purchase of said TRACFORD on account of inferior material or workmanship, and such parts be returned, transportation prepaid thereon, and be found to be defective on account of such inferior material or workmanship, the MANUFACTURER will furnish new parts in lieu of such defective parts, free.

If you want to know more about the TRACFORD, send for our booklet: "THE TRACFORD CATECHISM."

Letter to the Editor

Tweed, Ont., August 4th, 1917.

To the Editor of The Leader,

Dear Sir:

Will you allow me a few words to explain a misunderstanding that apparently results in reference to the promotion examinations conducted in S.S. No. 1 Rawdon. In the report sent me by the teacher the total marks obtained by Miss Annie Clare was given as 792. This is evidently a mistake in addition as the correct total, according to the marks submitted, should be 692. I made this quite clear to Miss Clare by a letter sent her some time ago, and therefore I cannot see the occasion for continuing the controversy.

Yours truly,

J. E. MENIE, P. S. I.

MENIE

The Menie W. I. will meet at the home of Mrs. W. A. Garrison on Thursday August 16th. Everyone welcome.

Miss J. Donald will give a paper on our part in the war.

Mr. James Little of Buffalo is visiting the scenes of his childhood.

Mrs. Dr. Milap of Napanee is visiting her parents Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Williams.

Mr. J. S. Williams and wife leave tomorrow, Wednesday, on a visit to their daughters, Mrs. W. Lavoock, Sudbury and Mrs. T. Henry, North B. Bedford, they expect to be away two or three months.

Miss Ruth Taylor of Campbellford is spending the week with Miss Irene Clancy.

We were very sorry to hear that Mr. Alf Brady had been wounded in France. Hope for his speedy recovery.

COSTS $350,000 TO STAGE EXHIBITION

Special Attractions at the Canadian National Above the Ordinary

It costs upwards of $350,000 to stage and prepare the Canadian National Exhibition each year. Much of this is spent on special attractions for which the Exhibition is famous. No expense or effort has been spared in securing for Confederation Year the most array of acts for the Hippodrome show that will be given as usual in front of the Grand Stand every afternoon and evening. There will be a galaxy of stars of the show world filling three stages at the one time. One of the outstanding features will be the At Golden Troupe, court artists to the Shah of Persia, who present the most picturesque and sensational acrobatic novelty now before the public. The remainder of the programme will be in keeping with this wonderful attraction.

Daylight Lake Trips

The C. & B. Line is again maintaining daylight service between Cleveland and Buffalo. These trips proved very popular last season, and this year promises even greater patronage.

From Cleveland, Steamer "CITY OF BUFFALO" leaves New East 9th Street Pier every Saturday during the summer season at 9:30 a.m., arriving at Buffalo 7:30 evening of same day.

From Buffalo, the Great Ship "SEE-ANDBEE" leaves wharves at South Michigan Street Bridge every Saturday at 9:30 a.m., reaching Cleveland at 7:30 p.m.

The night service will be the same as heretofore, namely steamers leave both cities daily at 9:00 p.m., reaching destination the following morning at 7:30. (All Eastern Time.)

Low fare excursions from Cleveland and Buffalo are given every Saturday, good returning Sunday.

A reduced automobile rate of $5.00 round trips is made for these week-end trips for cars not exceeding 127 inches wheelbase.

Enter the Bread Making Contests

at Rural School Fairs in Ontario

The Campbell Flour Mills Company's great offer of the big One-Hundred-and-Fifty-Dollar Pathe phonographs (Five of them!) and other valuable prizes, for the best loaves of bread baked with Cream of the West flour, is stirring up tremendous interest all over Ontario. Many girls are already busy as bees practicing with Cream of the West flour. Last year many girls declared, "Oh, if I had only practised, I'm sure I could have won!" Don't wait another day. Decide right now! Practise, Practise, Practise with

Cream of the West Flour

the hard wheat flour that is guaranteed for bread

Every time you bake with it you find out new qualities in this flour that makes such splendid big loaves of delicious light bread. Practise!

In five districts, each comprising several counties, we will give away five to the winner of the first district prize a large cabinet phonograph. At each fair there will be given a fine list of local prizes.

Prizes Worth Trying Hard For

Five of these large cabinet phonographs, each with twelve records, are prizes in District Contests. Value, $150.00. Size 20 in. x 24 in. x 44 in. high.

1st Local Prize.—"Girls' Own Annual," a great big beautifully bound, illustrated book, 800 pages of stories and articles about people, art, animals, gardens, sewing, crocheting—everything that particularly interests young girls, older girls and their mothers. This is a wonderful prize that you can treasure for years.

3rd Local Prize.—"Britain Overseas," a big handsome bound book with many colored pictures, interesting stories and descriptions of the countries and the peoples of Britain's world-wide Empire.

4th Local Prize.—"The Queen's Gift Book," a book of stories, pictures and special articles by Britain's best writers; the proceeds from the sale of this book are for the benefit of disabled soldiers in England.

Note.—Unless the entries number six or more only the benefit of disabled soldiers will be awarded. Unless the first and second prizes will be awarded. Unless the entries number ten or more no fourth prize will be awarded.

Every girl may compete at the rural school fair in her district, whether or not she attends school, providing that her 15th birthday occurs before November 1st, 1917, or her 10th birthday does not occur before Nov. 1, 1917. One loaf of bread must be submitted baked in not more than 7-8 inches and 4 inches deep, and divided into two loaves, so that they may be separated at the fair. One loaf must be baked with Cream of the West Flour. One loaf will be judged at the fair. The other half of the loaf will be sent to Ontario Ags. College. The judging will be done by Messrs. M. A. Ford, of the Department of Breadmaking and Flour Testing. The actual contest at the fair will be conducted under the same rules as all the other regular contests at your fair.

The Standard by which bread will be judged will be as follows:

1. Appearance of Loaf ..... 15 marks
(a) Color ..... 5 marks
(b) Texture of crust ..... 5 marks
(c) Shape of loaf ..... 5 marks

2. Texture of Crumb ..... 40 marks

GUIDE YOUR BOY NOW.

Keep Him On Road That Leads to Highest Citizenship.

This is a good time to think of your boy. If you do not look after him in the right way some one will do it in the wrong way. Begin now. Teach your boy to follow in the foot steps of his father, to respect the law, to obey his parents, to regard the rights of all men, to honor virtue, to respect womanhood and to depend upon no one but himself for his advancement.

Teach him that the golden rule of life will be found in the Ten Commandments. They are short. They have survived the ages. They stand to-day unchanged and unchallenged. They comprise the first great written law by God to man. Before the commandments all man is brought into insignificance. There is no one to your boy. There is no one to your boy.

TOKIO IS YOUNG.

Only in '60's That It Assumed Place in Life of Japan.

In a way almost unique, Tokio represents an epoch in the history of the country of which it is the capital. When, in the middle '60's, the Japanese made their momentous decision definitely to throw in their lot with the West in the matter of civilization, they set about achieving their purpose with all that thoroughness so characteristic of them as possible. If there was to be a change, then they would make it wholeheartedly.

Kyoto, the ancient capital of the country, was irrevocably bound up with the ancient regime, and the ablest men in Japan saw clearly enough that, if the court was to take its proper place in the country, and the emperor was to become a real ruler, and not the mere mouthpiece he had been, for many centuries, under the rule of the Shoguns, a clean sweep would have to be made of the past.

Osaka, the industrial city, one of the greatest stations of the new era, made, in 1868, a novel and startling proposition. He proposed nothing less than that the emperor should abandon the traditions which had grown up respecting his person and his court, and rule his empire not merely in theory but in practice. To do this successfully he recommended that the capital be transferred from the place of its degrading superstitions, namely Kyoto, to a new home. A few years before, such a proposition would have been regarded as something very like a sacrilege; but those few years had made all the difference. The proposal was received with favor by the emperor, and the place ultimately chosen for the new capital was Yedo, where for 250 years the family of Tokugawa, the last of the Shogun dynasties, had lived and guided the destinies of the empire.

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

THE PROVERBIAL

And so, on November 29, 1869, the emperor arrived at Yedo, and took up his residence at the famous castle, which centuries before by Tokugawa Iyeyasu, the hero of Sekigahara. He left behind him in Kyoto something very like consternation. To many people, the removal of the emperor from the ancient capital was the end of all things. For a thousand years and more Kyoto had been the capital of Japan, and for over twenty-five centuries, according to tradition, the emperors had ruled from spot near the sacred city. All the powers of religious fanaticism were drawn upon it to prevent the emperor from carrying out his purpose, but in vain. Yedo was not only chosen the capital, but to make assurance doubly sure, its name was changed to Tokio, which interpreted, means "eastern capital." And some compensation to the disappointed and much-disheartened citizens of Kyoto, their city was called Saikyo the "western capital." The severance, however, was definite and final, and marked for Japan, perhaps in the most forcible way possible, the final break with the past.

Thus Tokio is far and away the youngest amongst the world's capital cities. Its history, however, stretches back far beyond 1869. Two hundred and fifty years had built there a great city, and not many years after that time Yedo had attained the position of first city of the empire in point of population. As to the modern Tokio it finds a full expression in the Imperial palace, which stands on the ancient castle of Yedo, formerly the residence of the Shoguns. It is half European and half Japanese in its style of architecture. So Tokio, itself, is a mixture of the two. The numerous houses of the daimos, or vassals, the chief characteristic of the old town, have been largely swept away, and government offices and new houses, lining new streets, have taken their place. Tokio, in short, like the Imperial palace, like all Japan, is a strange mixture of east and west.—Christian Science Monitor.

BABY'S GREAT DANGER DURING HOT WEATHER

More little ones die during the hot weather than at any other time of the year. Diarrhoea, dysentery, cholera infantum and stomach troubles come without warning, and when a medicine is not at hand to give promptly the short delay too frequently means that the child has passed beyond aid. Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in homes where there are young children. An occasional dose of the Tablets will prevent stomach and bowels troubles, or if the trouble comes suddenly the prompt use of the Tablets will cure the baby. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Starvation Point.

To the question, "If there were a plague, how long do you think the soldiers and civilians could live after the food supplies gave out?" an English paper answers: Science tells us that if he can get drinking water an ordinary man can exist for thirty days without food. At the end of that time the machinery of the body will not be spoiled and can be brought back to its former strength by careful feeding.

About a quarter of our body weight is fat, and it is mostly this fat that is absorbed as food during the period of starvation. We can absorb and burn up our muscles until 60 per cent. of our weight is gone. We can do the same with from 30 to 40 per cent. of our liver and digestive organs and 20 per cent. of our lungs. Our hearts can lose 10 per cent. and our brains and nervous system can lose 5 per cent.

It will be seen that the more vital organs—brain and heart—yield least of their valuable substance for the life of the body, while the less essential substances—fat, muscle, fiber, etc.—are consumed first.

The Two Mountains

"Ours is Royal, But Only Yours is Crowned"

A MONTREALER ON HIS VISIT TO THE MOUNTAIN SANATORIUM.

"We are proud of our Mount Royal." A Montrealer writes, after a visit to Hamilton, "but yours has one royal distinction that ours has not achieved—a crown."

"We send our own people up to the mountain when they are dead, and bury them in the crater of a burnt-out volcano. You send your people up the mountain to find new life, and to come back and enjoy it. Climb our mountain, and you find a cemetery. Climb yours, and you find a Sanatorium. That is your mountain's crown of glory."

"What I noticed up there first, after the charming scenery and magnificent air, was the spirit of cheerfulness and hope among the patients."

"Of course, it is well known that tuberculosis often has a deceiving effect on its victims, making them feel better than they really are. And that is a great danger."

"Take the soldiers, particularly. They naturally want to get back to their families, and to work, as soon as possible. So they are tempted to quit the sanatorium before they ought, and to undertake more strenuous work than is safe for them. Even when a man is cured—that is, when the germs of the disease have been conquered and apparently paralyzed—the lungs are not so powerful as before they were attacked. If the body is overtaxed, the germs may awake from their torpor and make another attack."

FORTIFYING AGAINST A COUNTER-ATTACK.

"The Military Hospitals Commission evidently realizes this, and does all it possibly can to see that every one of the tuberculous soldiers under its care takes the full treatment required by his particular case, and also to fortify his knowledge against the very grave, though unseen, dangers that will surround him on his return to civil life."

"Just as the soldiers' after enlistment not only have their bodies trained by exercise for the hardships of a campaign, but also have their minds instructed in the arts of modern war—so these men attacked by the 'white plague' not only have their bodies freed from its fatal grip, but their minds instructed and fore-armed, with all the knowledge requisite to prevent another attack, as well as to avoid the possible infection of others by their unconscious acts."

"And the cheerfulness evident in your Mountain Sanatorium is based on solid grounds of hope, not on any delusion."

MUST COMBINE REST AND WORK.

"One of the most hopeful signs I notice is that the men have got something to do. Rest is essential, but it must be rest of mind as well as body. In fact, except in cases of extreme weakness, lying still in bed for long periods without any occupation creates unrest of mind, and largely destroys the good effect of rest of body."

"We smile at the idea of embroidery as an occupation for men—as we smile at the idea of plowing as an occupation for women. But the war has cleared our mental vision and upset many of our old ideas. I have just seen a moving picture of English women engaged in a plowing competition—with walking plows, too. Women who have exchanged the needle for the plow are all the better for it; and these men in your Mountain Sanatorium, forced to give up the plow and other weighty implements, are all the better for taking to the needle."

GIVE CIVILIANS 'THE SAME CHANCE.

"More than 800 men of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, in a total of 7,000 invalids now being cared for by the Military Hospitals Commission, are being treated for tuberculosis. This doubtless got a first lodgment in them during childhood. It has been stimulated to activity by the unaccustomed conditions of military life; but it would very likely have become active in any case, sooner or later, in civilian life. In such a case, it would have had less chance of prompt discovery, and certainly much less chance of thorough and successful treatment."

"With this effective organization of treatment for military consumptives before our eyes, it will be absolutely excusable if the country fails to organize an equally efficient campaign against the 'white plague' among our people as a whole."

"The gain in health and wealth to the country would be simply enormous," as Lord Shaughnessy was quoted as saying a few weeks ago. "As many Canadians have been killed at home by tuberculosis since the war began as have been killed by the war itself. Yet it is an entirely preventable disease. If we stop its ravages, we shall more than make up for the ravages of the war."

"We must never forget that these soldier patients at the Mountain Sanatorium and in the eighteen other Sanatoria used by the Military Hospitals Commission, will themselves be civilians again in a few weeks or months. Instead of being a source of infection and danger, as they would have been without the treatment they are now receiving, their return to civil life will be an actual gain to the community; for, by preaching what they have practised, they can do much to rouse us from our lethargy and start a vigorous offensive against this ravaging foe."

FAMOUS NOVELISTS.

And How They Started On Their Careers.

William Dean Howells was a printer and reporter in a country newspaper office in Ohio during his boyhood.

Joseph Conrad, a native of Poland, was for years a cabin boy, sailor before the mast, and captain in the merchant service.

Sir Rider Haggard gained the material for his first tales while acting as an official in South Africa.

Maxime Gorky, in his youth, was successively a painter of ikons, acultery boy, peddler, gardener, and baker's apprentice.

Jack London was a "hobo" sailor, gold miner in Alaska, oyster pirate, fisherman, longshoreman and seal hunter.

Thomas Harding was articled to an ecclesiastical architect, and spent several years of his young manhood as a church architect.

Eden Philpotts was born in India, the son of an army officer, and was a clerk in an insurance office and studied for the stage.

H. G. Wells is the son of a professional cricket player, and in his youth was chiefly interested in the study of science.

Brand Whitlock was a newspaper reporter in Toledo and Chicago and a clerk in the office of the Illinois secretary of state.

Owen Johnson made his literary debut as the founder and first editor of the Lawrenceville, N. J., Literary Magazine.

Myra Kelly, a native of Dublin, was for some time a public school teacher in the East Side of New York.

Charles S. D. Roberts was a school teacher and college professor in Canada before taking up literature.

Ralph Connor (the Rev. Charles W. Gordon), was missionary among the miners and lumbermen of Western Canada.

Amle Troubetzkoy, nee Rives, began writing stories as a child, and published her first novel, "The Quick for the Dead," in 1888.

Irvin S. Cobb started as a reporter in his native Paducah, and at nineteen became editor of the Paducah Daily News.

Thomas Dixon started his career as a lawyer and politician in North Carolina, entering the Baptist ministry in 1888.

Hall Caine was educated as an archivist, but deserted that profession to enter journalism as a leading writer on the Liverpool Mercury. Thomas Nelson Page was a lawyer in Richmond for many years before he thought of writing novels. Emile Zola, the son of a book-seller, was a librarian in the French Senate, and a Paris Journalist. William Allen White got his literary start as a writer on the Emporia Gazette, of which he is still editor.

Like Scene From Middle Ages.

The oldest and largest university in the world is El-Azhar at Cairo. Founded in 975, it has been from the start a national institution, the khedive being the rector. The minimum age of entrance is fifteen, and the applicant must know half the Koran by heart—if blind, the whole Koran—and be able to read and write. The curriculum consists of virtually nothing but theology and canon law, the final examination fifteen years after matriculation being upon these, together with traditions of the prophet: Grammar, etymology, rhetoric and logic. It is the same in essence, and one who goes into the great court where the circles of students are sitting at the feet of their Gamaleels looks upon a scene preserved from the middle ages, "a perfect specimen, living, breathing and entire."

AN ADVENTURE IN SPELLING.

I once went a-riding, although my friends told me not to do so; I fell off my horse, and who left me in tatters and woe."

A man passing by in a sleigh saw my sorrowful plight and I leigh. And said, "You're hurt!" But I is rather feigh. So I'll just lift you out of the weigh."

He fitted me into a seat—I was bruised from my head to my feet; I had ruined my clothes, I had broken my bones. And truly the cushions were sweet!

Then he hustled me over the snow As fast as his hooves could woe; And drove me up straight To a doctor's front gate. "Hil, Doc! Here's a vision of woe!"

The doctor was drinking his tea, But he came and attended of me; "He can't use his tongue, And he's spoiled his right tongue. As his ribs were not where they should be."

A Story of Longfellow.

In Longfellow's journal, in which he chronicled daily things that came under his observation, he notes that upon a certain occasion he attended a church where the minister took as his subject "Progress." He was very flattered when the latter quoted about half of the "Psalm of Life." After repeating the verses the minister said, "I could never read that poem without feeling the inspiration with which it was written." To this incident Longfellow adds: "But I had the conceit taken out of me on the evening of the same day, when I happened to meet a lady at Prescott's and in our conversation she referred to the sermon in the morning and added, 'He quoted some beautiful verses, but nobody knew whence came the quotations.'"

Using the Scrub Palmetto.

Only a prolific and troublesome waste product throughout Florida, the scrub palmetto is now being developed into an asset of great possibilities. Not only has it been discovered that paper of good quality can be made from it, but the manufacture of mats, matting, tyne, rope and burlap from the plant is already an industry of high standing in the state. Only the green leaf or fan, is used. Chain is made that the palmetto leaves when shredded and spun are very much tougher than the grass now used for matting. The green leaves are fed just as they are into the shredding and spinning machine, and in three minutes they come out in twine. This avoids the discolorations and losses occasioned in drying, storing and handling. Palmetto can be used for matting grasses commonly used for twine. The twine is used as soon afterward as necessary.—Argonaut.

ALGERIA A NEW FRANCE.

Result of a Century of Work Against African Savagery.

After a vast expenditure in lives and treasure France is beginning to reap its reward from the conquest of Algeria. A hundred years ago the northern African country was the abode of barbarism, and piracy was the principal occupation of its people. The United States was the first nation to revolt against the payment of tribute to the dey of Algiers for "protection" to commerce, and after a brief but thrilling conflict the buccaneer chieftain was brought to his knees.

In 1827 the French took up the white man's burden in Algeria and after a struggle of thirty years subdued the country. Under the monarchy and the second empire the government of Algeria was based upon the fact that the republic would not allow the Algerians by withdrawing the military government from all the settled portions of the country, which have since been treated very much as if they were a part of France, each department sending one senator and two deputies to the French chambers. Algerians, save for a few of the tribesmen in the remote interior, are now loyal Frenchmen. Regardless of color, race or religion, Algeria also supplies vast quantities of foodstuffs and metals to France.—New York World.

Don't Be Afraid of Worl.

Charles M. Schwab, the well known master of Bethlehem steel works, has no more patience with the man who works with the time clock than has Adam Bede with his fellow workmen who dropped their tools at the sound of the whistle. In his book, "Selling With What You Have," he writes: "I have yet to hear of one instance where misfortune hit a man because he worked overtime. Not long ago a man was promoted in our works. How did you happen to advance this fellow?" I asked his boss. "Well," he explained, "I noticed that when the day shift went off duty this man stayed on the job until he had talked over the day's problems with his successor. That's why." The man who fails to five fair service during the hours for which he is paid is dishonest. The man who is not willing to give more than this is foolish."

Squabs.

A squab grows enormously the first twelve hours and still more rapidly after the third day.

Squabs are at first sparsely covered with long filaments of down, the root of each filament implicating the point from which each future feather is to start.

The down for awhile still hangs on to the tips of some of the feathers during their growth, and it is thought by some to be finally absorbed into the shaft of the growing feather.

Jones was a good man, but he got rattled in the rush the other night and put the job of an underling under 'Amusements.'"

HUGE BRITISH PREPARATIONS WERE UNSEEN BY THE HUNS

Haig Poured In Enormous Forces of Men and Guns For His Drive, With Foe In Dark.

Welsh Regiment Administers Crushing Defeat to Kaiser's Pet Battalion.

British Front in France and Belgium. Cable.—(By the Associated Press)—Welsh troops yesterday administered a new star to their enemy. It fell to one of their regiments to administer a crushing defeat, in General Haig's great offensive, on the Third Battalion of Infantry Guards, which was Emperor William's crack body of troops. The result in this new battle some presented tremendous difficulty for the attacking armies. Between Dixmude and the point where the Ypres-Comines canal crosses the line on the lower part of the Ypres salient, two great forces had been imbedded for three years, and this portion of the line has come to be looked upon as impregnable for either side.

The present battlefield, between Dixmude and Lizerne, was "no man's land," within whose borders lay marshes and morasses, which in winter months are impassable. The formidable natural barrier was rendered still stronger by the inundation of large areas by the release of waters from the canals. The Germans and Allies alike, seeking bits of dry land for a footing, swung so far apart in some places that the distance between the lines was nearly three miles.

Below this section, opposing lines followed either bank of the Yser canal, and then went on the Ypres salient, face to face, but with the Germans holding the dominating high land about the salient. The Dixmude-Lizerne section of the front is a wilderness of partly inundated and deserted farms, dotted with pools of brackish water, and cut into strange shapes by drainage ditches. There are but few remaining civilian habitations in this "no man's land," crumbling cottages and an occasional roofless church rose above the flats.

Neither side feared a surprise attack or a trench raid. Since Duke Albrecht's Württemberg troops were swallowed up in the flood left loose by opening up the sluice gates in October, 1914, the enemy had not tried to cross the marshes, nor had they tried to get over the Yser since the Belgians, in the spring of 1915, after sanguinary fighting, flung them back across the bridgehead, at Lizerne.

THE YPRES SALIENT.

The Ypres salient itself furnished as nasty a problem as could be presented to an attacking party. The country here is saucer-shaped, and the Germans had held the lip to this saucer. All the lower lying land within this dish had thus been dominated by the enemy, who could pour a stream of shell and machine gun fire into the troops and supply columns advancing across the salient. The situation was rendered still more difficult by the presence within the saucer of a large number of waterways, that must be crossed by means of bridges which might at any moment be destroyed by gunfire. This difficulty, however, was overcome by a brilliant feat of the British engineers, who threw seventeen bridges across the waterways for the advance of troops in the face of terrific gunfire. Similar and equally remarkable work was done by the French engineers, who were forced to bridge the Yser for the attack.

The Germans little feared, apparently, that the battle would turn in the direction of their right wing. It was early in June that rumors of the impending attack began to find their way to German ears, and were voiced in Berlin. Gradually the rumors assumed certainty, and the Germans began feverishly to strengthen their lines, pouring large numbers of fresh forces into Flanders and bringing up all available guns. The surrounding country was evacuated by civilians and stripped of the conflict.

The Germans knew they faced an offensive. They were unable with all their cunning to gather more than a fragmentary idea of the story of these preparations, which is in itself a marvellous one. Day after day the building of new and new lines continued under cover of a unique concealment in mists.

HUNS SAW NOTHING.

Enormous numbers of great guns made their way to selected positions, and were mounted on concrete foundations laid long before. Millions of shells, which are no-day turning the German front into an inferno of death and destruction were brought up and stored, while the enemy watched with unseeing eye. Long lines of dreaded tanks took the road, and the living monsters crawled clumsily but persistently northward, to take their place in the Allied battle formation.

Clearing stations were established at vantage points, and everything possible was done to care for the stream of wounded which was sure to result. All this and much more went on for weeks before the offensive was launched. The Germans were like a man who waits with tense muscles in the dark for the attack of an unseen enemy, knowing the onslaught must come, ignorant of the moment or nature of it.

Thoroughness of preparation is one of the striking characteristics of the British methods, and it is safe to say that there is no one man but had rehearsed the part he was to play in the opening stage of the great conflict.

FRENCH PREMIER GIVES LIE TO CHARGE OF GERMAN CHANCELLOR

France Has No Plot to Seize Territory On Left Bank of the Rhine.

Paris Cable.—Premier Ribot replied in the Chamber yesterday to the declaration made Saturday by Dr. Michaelis, the German Chancellor, that there was a secret treaty between France and Russia having in view plans of conquest. Premier Ribot said:

"I wish to reply to the singular speech which Dr. Michaelis thought fit to invite the Berlin journalists to hear. The German Chancellor publicly commanded the French Government to declare whether, in a secret sitting June 1, the French Government had not made known to the Chamber of Deputies the terms of a secret treaty, made before the Russian revolution, whereby the Emperor bound himself to support French pretensions to German territory on the left bank of the Rhine."

"The Chancellor's version contains gross inaccuracies and absolute lies, notably regarding the role he attributes to the President of the Republic in giving an order to sign a treaty unknown to Premier Briand. The Chamber knows how things passed."

M. Doumergue (ex-Premier and Foreign Minister), after a conversation with the Emperor, demanded and obtained M. Briand's authorization to take note of the Emperor's promise to support our claim to Alsace-Lorraine, and to leave us free to seek guarantees against fresh aggression, not by annexing territories on the left bank of the Rhine, but by making an autonomous state of these territories, which would protect us, and also Belgium, against invasion."

"We have never thought to do what Bismarck did in 1871. We are therefore entitled to demand the liberation of the Chancellor, who evidently knows of the letters exchanged February, 1917, at Petrograd, and falsified since, as his most illustrious predecessor falsified the Ems despatch. Whenever the British Government is willing to publish these letters, we have no objection."

"The Chancellor refrained from speaking about any declaration March 21, wherein I repudiated in France's name any policy of conquest and annexation by force. He has willfully forgotten my language May 22 in the Chamber, saying we were ready to enter into conversation with Russia as to the object of the war, and if the German people, whose right to live and develop peacefully we do not contest, understood that we wished peace founded on the right of peoples, the conclusion of peace would thereby be singularly facilitated."

"Finally, the Chancellor passed over in silence the resolution unanimously voted after the June secret session. Here Premier Ribot read from his speech in the Chamber warning against those who wished to spread the conviction that France was seeking conquest, and read the terms of the resolution adopted by the chamber at that time, declaring that peace conditions must include the return of Alsace-Lorraine to France, the liberation of territories occupied by Germany, and just reparation for damage done in the invaded regions. The resolutions also favored the creation of a league of nations for the maintenance of peace."

"Who now dare to say to the world that we wish annexation?" continued Premier Ribot. Such manoeuvres are too crude for our times, especially for democratic masses of the European people, who it is vainly being tried to separate from their Allies by deceiving them as to the true sentiments of French democracy. What is the Chancellor seeking? He is trying to hide the embarrassment which he feels in defining Germany's objects of the war and conditions whereon she would make peace. He is trying especially to turn aside attention from the terrible responsibility weighing on the conscience of the Kaiser and his counselors."

"Assuredly it is not to Germany that we address ourselves, but to all who are witnesses or actors in the struggle which we have been maintaining for the past three years, and who know that there is in the depth of the French people's soul a deep attachment to the principles of justice, respect for people's rights, and I am adding at the risk of not being understood by our enemies, to generosity."

"The declaration was frequently applauded. It was not followed by any debate."

SOWING MINES IN SEA.

How These Ship Destroyers Are Laid and Anchored.

Mine laying and mine sweeping are two important subordinate functions in a modern navy, and both of these occupations are fraught with danger to those engaged in them.

A mine is really a metal globe containing anything from 200 pounds to 200 pounds of trinitrotoluene, or T. N. T., as it is called, and is usually explosively calculated to make things very unpleasant for any ship that runs against one of the little horns on top of the mine.

Before the mine is put into the sea, the globe must be attached to a cable, and the cable must be attached to a ship. The cable is usually made of wire rope, and is attached to the ship by a hook. The cable is then lowered into the water, and the mine is attached to it. The mine is then lowered to the bottom, and the cable is then hauled up. The mine is then attached to a buoy, and the buoy is then hauled up. The mine is then attached to a buoy, and the buoy is then hauled up.

FRENCH TROOPS WON IN MISTS

Seized and Held Every Hun Post Assigned Them, Though Fog Blinded Their Observers.

With the French Armies in Flanders, Special Cable Says—

An infantry battle in mists has followed upon the most sustained and most intense bombardment yet delivered during the war, stretching from the coast to the North Sea to beyond Ypres. French troops, told of "winning" this morning along a front of about 3,000 yards and succeeded in taking and holding German positions from a point near the famous Pervin house, which acquired bloody renown at the end of 1914, almost to Boesinghe, to a depth ranging from 2,500 to 2,600 yards.

The thick mists overlying the absolutely flat country prevented observers from watching the progress of the fighting, even the airmen were compelled to desist from this futile task. When the airman ascended at an early hour to follow the advance they found thick blocks of fog hanging at an altitude of 100 yards and could not even see their comrades in the air.

News brought back from advanced infantry units, however, told of a victory, despite obstinate resistance. All the objectives set for attainment of the French troops were rapidly gained. How many prisoners were taken cannot be ascertained at the present moment. The troops found the ground wherever they advanced terribly churned by shells. The deep craters had immediately filled with water, owing to the land being below the sea level, and in many instances the craters were joined together, forming a string of miniature canals, which were difficult of negotiation.

Nevertheless, the Frenchmen overcame these obstacles and also extensive fields of barbed wire, amid an awful barrage of fire and showers of machine-gun bullets. The Germans had occupied for three years the eastern bank of the Yser Canal, the western bank of which was in the hands of the Allied troops. At the northern flank of the French line the country was inundated as far as Dixmude, making operations virtually impossible in that vicinity.

On the enemy's side of the canal, and hidden in the woods a short distance behind it, machine guns bristled in nests of dozens, and the artillery preparations by the Allies had accounted for many of them before the French attempted their advance. Steensstraet and Hetsen, on the canal, were soon left behind by the French, who steadily pressed forward, only halting for a breathing spell when the first German line came into their possession.

Meanwhile hundreds of batteries roared incessantly, bringing replies from the powerful German artillery. In the second stage of the battle the French progress took them long before noon into and beyond the second line German trenches, and the troops halted only when the day's task had been accomplished. Then they set about to organize the captured ground.

Thrifty Geese.

The solan geese are so fond of collecting materials for their nests that they do not desert from the habit even when they are about to abandon their nests for the winter migration. Off the coast of Scotland one day flocks of straw bedding were seen floating, and although the birds were on the eve of departure, they gathered up every whelp, as though they had their nests to build, and in the same place they were seen collecting seaweed every day.

In spite of the war tax on booze, money is apt to get tight.

MUST DEFEAT THE U-BOATS, SAYS JELlicoe

More Patrol Ships and More Merchant Boats the Urgent Needs.

HUNS' LAST HOPE

Enemy Will Despair When Subs' Failure is Realized.

London Cable.—Admiral Sir John R. Jellicoe, First Sea Lord and chief of the naval staff, in an interview with the Associated Press to-day, discussed the submarine menace and the naval situation at the end of the third year of the war.

"You ask me to say something of the submarine menace," he began. "It is serious because all the Allied armies and civil population are in varying degrees, dependent on sea transport. But, viewed broadly, the recourse by the Germans to this form of piracy is encouraging. They did not adopt it until they had lost hope in the victory of their armies. They did not risk drawing the United States into the war and concentrating on themselves the hostility of all other neutral States until they were convinced that they could not float a keel on the world's seas and by legitimate means interfere with the growth of the military strength of the Allies."

"For three years naval power has been in process of translation into military power. The Germans, in desperation, decided to embark upon ruthless submarine warfare, and the confident belief that it would prove a fatal stroke in February, according to their own confession, it was 'the best and only means of a speedy and victorious ending of the war.'"

"March, April, May, June and July have passed and their early hopes are still unrealized."

"The Germans have not mastered us, but, on the other hand we have not mastered the submarine. We have not yet discovered the effective antidote. But we have reduced the losses of merchant shipping."

"There is no reason to doubt that the Germans have at sea lately a far larger number of submarines than in February and March, but, nevertheless, the probability of February, which America has renounced, we have prevented them from reaping the harvest which they anticipated."

"How long the German population will live on hopes deferred I cannot profess to say, but they must realize that the probability of February, resting on official authority that the submarine was 'the best and only means of a speedy and victorious ending of the war,' has not been fulfilled."

After a pause, Admiral Jellicoe went on gravely:

"Combating the submarine demands the utmost effort on the part of all the countries which have joined together to defeat Germany. She has staked her all on the submarine, and if we defeat it her last hope will have gone."

"The two urgent needs of the moment are more patrol ships for hunting down submarines and an increased output of merchant shipping, so that the losses suffered at sea may be made good. The war has become one of economic endurance. With the powerful aid which the United States is rendering, in making the naval blockade effective, Germany's condition must become worse week by week. She will hold out so long as there is the faintest hope of the success of the submarine warfare. Once its failure is demonstrated, the German people, whatever may be the case with the German Government, will recognize that defeat stares them in the face."

"It is, therefore, vitally important that every effort be concentrated on destroying what the Prime Minister, Mr. Lloyd George, calls the 'bacilli of the seas.' We must and shall defeat it, but, in order to do so, the inventive and constructive energy of all the nations fighting Germany must be devoted to the work and to the rapid building of patrol ships and merchantmen. If that is done, I have no doubt of the issue."

FRENCH GIRL'S AWFUL STORY

Diary of Slavery and Worse Under Captivity.

But One Way Out—And That Dishonor.

Paris.—A party of forty French girls returned by the Germans out of a total of 6,000 taken into "virtual slavery from Lille and nearby territory, were permitted to make their way to Paris, because the Germans at Lille were afraid of the effect of their stories on the civilian population there.

Here are extracts from the diary of Yvonne Trépo, one of the girls, daughter of a physician of Lille, that show some consideration by the Germans because of her usefulness as a doctor to the people of her parish:

"Feb. 23—Before I could answer the loud knock on my window door I was burst upon. A German soldier rushed past my mother, shouting: 'Get up and dress. You leave Lille in twenty minutes to plant potatoes in the Ardennes.' He did not leave the room and, well, I dressed over my night clothes. Mother tried to shield me by pretending to help with my clothes but she was weeping so bitterly she fell on the floor. Outside the other German lined up in the square stared at me, saying: 'Acht! You have caught a pretty one Fritz!' They laughed."

Eleven years in two days. March 26—it all happened only two days ago, not three years. But I am not 19 now. I am 30. The girls in the cattle truck with me were all classes. While we traveled through the night German soldiers moved about among us in the truck. I took the part of one girl not educated as I had been, and dazed. But always I saw my mother's face, as it was when the truck left. It seemed to be becoming sharper with grief. I may never see it again but I shall always see it."

"March 10—We have been in an empty house in an Ardennes village since then a week. Am I alive or dead—after that? When taken to the headquarters, another empty house, the day after we came, empty house, I was turned to stone, and could not move."

"Not in pity, but to save time he explained something about medical examination. And when I was asked the German doctor asked questions and made tests I did not understand—then I objected so much that girls later in line were treated more kindly."

"I went on the house where I am kept with five other girls, until this morning. In German it said 'six women.' That is why these soldiers had come to look at us, and hint at insults. That is why we must never leave each other alone, but stick together, with our backs to the wall, when these men come."

"What do you mean?" I asked Eugene, an artisan's daughter from our parish in Lille. My father was a doctor and ever watched over me. When she told me what she had heard I understood, too. The Germans had announced we were evil women."

ANOTHER MEDICAL EXAMINATION.

"April 3—Eugene has gone. There was another medical examination two weeks ago. More insulting, more obscene than I had dreamed of. During it things were suggested."

"I kept from fainting only by remembering if I did faint I might lose more than life. We were catalogued as 'good for anything.' We were so ashamed we went home by different streets."

"Eugene had been gone from our house for a week. No wonder! It is simple. It is easy. Poor girl! She had been training over me. If she has a son it will be sent to Germany to become at least a soldier."

SOLDIERS LODGED IN HOUSE.

"May 20—One of the soldiers had been beating one of the girls in the fields every day. He had tried me first, and told me how I could escape. The vision of my mother's face helped me to lie to him. When I told him the lie he left me alone. To-day in mid-afternoon the other girl he had been beating for weeks fell exhausted. He bent over her and called a minute. They left the field."

"And to-night I heard we are to go home to Lille to-morrow, 40 of us out of 6,000. My prayers! My prayers! My mother, so brave! But I do not know if I shall get there safe, or sane—or even alive!"

HUN VERSION OF NEW DRIVE

Says British Batteries Are Losing Power.

Moraht, Day Before, Made Bad Forecast.

Copenhagen Cable.—The German semi-official report on the British offensive, printed to-day under the headline "Before Great Infantry Attacks," stated that front positions were converted into shell-hole fields, and that battery stations were ringed with shell craters. The German artillery, despite the German bombardment by shells of all calibre, up to 15-inch, and the lavish use of gas, had not let up a minute, and was successfully combating the British fire, the statement says. The British batteries were obliged to pause for exhaustion on the 24th and 25th, when they attempted to escape punishment by smoke screens.

The Berlin Lokai Anzeiger's military critic says that the offensive was delayed and weakened by the submarine campaign. The German consequently is longer superior in artillery and aviators, and battalions at the front are on a reduced footing, because of the need of workmen in home munition factories.

Major Moraht, in the Tages Zeitung, intimated the evening before the attack that Gen. Haig, despite weeks of cannonading, has been unable to effect adequate infantry preparation and was afraid to attack.

Courses and Dishes.

Three courses seem to have been the customary menu in mediaeval times for a state banquet, has ceremonial feast comprising only two and no private dinner more than one. But each course must comprise from eight to a dozen different dishes. Thus at the wedding banquet of Henry V. there were only three courses, yet thirty different dishes are mentioned in the records, irrespective of fruits and wines.—London Chronicle.

RUSS LAUNCH A NEW DRIVE IN GALICIA

Partial Offensive Toward Trembowla Has Made Some Gains.

SOME HEAVY LOSSES

When Teutons Forced Them to Retire Across the River Zbrocz.

London Cable.—The beginning of a partial offensive by the Russians in Galicia, in the direction of Trembowla, is announced to-day by the War Office. A hostile position was carried in this movement.

South-west of Kimpolung, towards the southern end of the fighting line, the Russians were forced back some what in the region of Negrey. They were also compelled to retire to some extent to the east of Gerement, between the Dniester and the Pruth rivers.

The statement says the Russians suffered great losses when they were forced to retire across the Zbrocz yesterday.

Austro-German troops have made new advances in the eastern theatre, according to the German official report. The Russian positions on the Horodenska-Czernowitza railway, says the army headquarters, statement today were broken through by shock troops. North of the Dniester the Russians were forced into the Chotin River bend.

A telegram from Jassy says the Russo-Rumanian advances between the Casin and Putna rivers, in the enemy's hands, between July 24 and 28, ninety-eight guns and about 4,500 prisoners. The enemy front of six kilometres (3½ miles) was broken to a depth of between 17 and 20 kilometres.

THE PETROGRAD REPORT.

The text of the Russian statement follows:

"Western front: To the south-west of Brody, in the Dubiezhko region, after strong artillery preparation, the enemy attacked a portion of them. After a fierce engagement our newly arrived reserves drove out the enemy and the situation was restored. In this engagement the 41st regiment particularly distinguished itself."

"In Galicia, in the direction of Trembowla, our troops began a partial offensive, attacking the enemy in the region of Grimalov and carrying the position by assault."

"Repeated attempts of the enemy to cross the River Zbrocz, north of Husiatyn and south of Zbril were frustrated. Yesterday superior forces of the enemy attacked our positions between the Zbrocz and the Dniester, in the region of Zalucz Germanovka, and the confidence of Blagoe and forced our troops after a battle, which was stubbornly contested in places, to retire across the Zbrocz. Our troops suffered great loss, especially among the officers."

"Between the Dniester and the Pruth the enemy yesterday continued to make persistent attacks, chiefly along the southern banks of the Dniester and the road to Czernowitza. After repelling a series of attacks our troops were forced to retire somewhat to the east of Gerement."

"In the Carpathian region, near Siptul, insignificant enemy attacks were beaten off. In the region of Bratza we repelled a little. 'Roumanian front: Southwest of Kimpolung, in the region of Negrey, the enemy attacked our troops and thrust them back a little to the east."

THE GERMAN OFFICIAL.

The Berlin War Office report of Wednesday said:

"Front of Prince Leopold and army group at von Boshm-Broschke. Our troops, pushing forward towards the southern end of the Dniester, forced the enemy, who had prepared himself for a battle behind Billbrook, back into the river bend of Chotin. Between the Dniester and the Pruth our shock group broke through the Russian positions on the Horodenska-Czernowitza railway line, while its southern wing repulsed a strong relief attack near Iwankowitz."

"Front of Archduke Joseph. In the northeastern spur and in the central portion of the Carpathians were two German and Austro-Hungarian divisions captured in an offensive action stubbornly defended valley approaches several enemy attacks."

BRITISH DRIVE FOES IN AFRICA

London Cable.—British troops have driven the Germans from their positions on the Luguan River, in German East Africa, and are pushing forward in the Kilwa region, says an official statement issued to-day by the British War Office.

The text reads:

"East Africa: After sharp fighting the enemy has been driven with loss from his positions on the Luguan River and at Nturala."

"In the Kilwa area a heavy rainfall checked our advance for some days after a successful action at Nturala, but our forward movements have now been resumed."

Muggins—With all this wartime agitation about national economy it seems as though I am always in debt. Bugaine—Don't talk about it. I haven't even paid for the Christmas present my wife gave me.

Letter from G. R. Boulton

A letter received by Miss Lucy Boulton on July 23rd, from her brother at the front reads as follows:—

France, June 30th, 1917

Dear Sister and all:—

Once more I will endeavour to address you a few lines to prove to you that I have not quite forgotten you all together although I have not had any news from you folks at home for some length of time, but am living in hopes of getting a letter from there soon and indeed I hope it will be soon at that, for you know that a letter is very much appreciated out here and I am not in the habit of getting more than my share, in fact not as many as the number I am corresponding with. Nevertheless there is no use of kicking so long as I get one now and again.

Well Lucy a pal of ours just dropped in a few moments ago, and we sat here and told yarns and laughed until my sides are sore. As some of the boys say, "We haven't got much money but we do see life."

The weather is not any too good, a little too much rain, but even at that, we have no complaints coming in, for we can't expect the best all the time.

I just finished a letter to Mother before starting yours, so I guess by the time I am done with this I will have done pretty good, eh?

What are Dad and Guy at these days? Working hard I suppose. I have dreamed of Guy two nights now and can hardly tell what to think of it, also Mrs. John Donohue. I hope there is nothing wrong with him, as I fear there might be, he being sick so long.

How is Mrs. Sager? I see by the Leman paper that she is ill. By the way I have received two copies of my paper and was glad to get them. I learn by it that Dr. Alger is in the 13th Field Ambulance, which is not far from here, although I have not seen him yet, but intend to at first opportunity.

Well now, I guess I had better close for this time, hoping to hear from you real soon. I will say Bye Bye. I am as ever,

Your Brother,
G. R. BOULTON.

PONTATOR—EMMONS

Mr. William Doxtator, son of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Doxtator of Stirling and Miss Bessie Emons, daughter of Mr. John Emons of this city were quietly married at high noon yesterday by the Rev. F. J. Anderson.

The bride wore a costume of grey embroidered gabardine with a large picture hat to match. A buffet luncheon was afterwards served at the bride's home on Foster Ave. The couple left immediately afterwards for a trip west by motor and showers of confetti, the bride travelling in a suit of navy blue with blue hat, trimmed with roses and French wings. The bride received many handsome and useful presents, the groom's gift being a pearl sunburst.

Mr. and Mrs. Doxtator will be at home in Wallaceburg after Sept. 1st—C.M.

Welcomed Home

Private Frank Johnson, No. 907258 son of Wm. Johnson 4th Concession of Rawdon, who is back from the front was given a reception at his home on Tuesday evening. There was a very large gathering of friends and neighbors for many miles around, to welcome him home.

He enlisted in March 8th, 1915 with the 155th. Batt. at Regina, Saskatchewan and was wounded at the battle of Vim Ridge. Private Johnson is a most respected person and was a former pupil of Stirling High School.

Reeve Montgomery acted as chairman and ably filled the position. During the evening Pte. Johnson was presented with a purse of $20. After short speeches were given and lunch served the gathering which was a very enjoyable one broke up at 11.30.

Pte. Johnson expects soon to go to the Convalescent Military Hospital at Kingston.

Crow Lake All Agog

Every famous watering place or summer resort has its own particular feature that gives it notoriety and brings it publicity. One has its board walk, another its sea serpent, another its man-eating shark, another its diminutive and flimsy bathing attire, but it remains for Crow Lake to have as its sensation, one of those pretty little striped pussies, sometimes known as the Alaska Snake, ordinarily called, "Whew! whew! oh! isn't it terrible! Run! Run! Get your skin Oh, Whew, its awful, let's get out of here!"

On Saturday morning the natives and the cottagers of that well known resort, were all excitement when the news spread, that the camp had been invaded by a skunk. His skunkishness evidently was a member of the Board of Health, or some other like organization, for he came across an empty can and being nosy enough to see what it contained, he got his head into the can, and on endeavoring to come back, the lid of the can, which had been turned inwards, acted as a bar on the top of his head, and he couldn't get his head out.

His wild, and unguided perambulations set the campers all up on end, calls came on every hand for somebody to get out his gun. In spite of the fact, that some of the fellows had roamed hill and dale, looking for something to shoot (at) no brave sport was at hand.

The animal endeavored to enter Mrs. Jas. Boldrick's cottage, but it was frightened from its course. Finding that nobody wanted it, it became melancholic and plunged into the inviting waters of the lake and very soon ended its outing. Its body was towed out to the middle of the lake and there committed to the deep but ah! it would not have it thus, it returned again as if to remind its friends once more of the dangers of being too inquisitive. Now the waters of Crow Lake will be popular as Florida Water.

STIRLING

Miss Anderson Extends Thanks

To the people of Stirling and Societies that contributed toward the Ontario Military Hospital Comforts.

Dear Friends:—

Owing to my hurried departure overseas, I shall not be able to thank all who have so generously given to the fund, which is to get comforts for the wounded in the O. M. Hospital in England. I take this opportunity of expressing my sincere gratitude and also of bidding you all AuRevoir. I cannot mention each donation, but there are two I wish to acknowledge, one from West Huntingdon Red Cross of fifty dollars for a chair, the other sent me by Mr. C. J. Hutton, amount sixteen dollars, which was collected at a Young People's dance.

The different societies in town were most generous also the Stirling Cheese Board and the Tannic's at home. Stirling and the surrounding country may well be proud of the bit they have done in this tragic war. It is very satisfactory not to have to return empty handed to my work overseas. I shall write later, when I have been able to expend the fund to the best of my judgement. Again thanking you and wishing you Good bye, I am

Yours Sincerely,
ETHEL ANDERSON, N. S.

Reception to Miss Ethel Anderson

The reception held on Friday evening, August 10th at the residence of the Misses Judd in honor of their niece, Sister Ethel Anderson who was home from overseas on short leave will long be remembered by those who were fortunate enough to be present.

Miss Anderson enlisted for Overseas Service in March 1916 and is one of the Nursing Sisters in the Ontario Military Hospital, Orpington, Kent, England.

She gave an excellent talk on the work carried on in the hospital and by request she explained what was needed in the way of comforts for the wounded soldiers. She also said that the wheel chairs sent her from Stirling for the use of the wounded were greatly appreciated, the money for which was collected in various ways by Mrs. C. Reynolds and Mrs. R. Fletcher.

Nursing Sister Anderson is deeply interested in her work and Stirling can well be proud of her.

Solos were rendered by Mrs. Potts, Miss M. Currie and R. A. Sutcliffe and instrumental selections by Miss C. Caldwell of Madoc and Bob Parker. A dainty lunch was served during the evening.

Miss Anderson expected to report on the 20th, but she received a message on Saturday and left that evening. Mrs. Anderson and the Misses Judd motored to Belleville with her and her sister, Mrs. Oakly of New York who came here expressly to meet her and accompanied her as far as Montreal.

In her work she will not be forgotten by her many friends in Stirling who wish for her a safe voyage and God speed.

The live stock department of the Canadian National Exhibition has stabling accommodation for 1,500 horses, 1,200 cattle, 1,200 sheep and 600 swine.

Received the Socks

The following is a letter received by Miss Bessie Wallace from a soldier that had received socks which she sent.

France, July 6th, 1917

Dear Miss Wallace—
I received your socks last evening and am glad to have them. I have just put them on and they are a perfect fit, also they are well made. Many thanks to you and our kind folks at home. You people certainly help the boys a lot. We are in the trenches although we are a cavalry regiment. It is over two years since we came to this country. We had no horses the first year but we have them now so do cavalry work. I have had one leave to England and expect another soon. My brother is away on leave at present. We came from Bengough, Sask. and it is three years next October since we left our happy home. We would like to see the end but we are never down hearted. So will close now,
Yours Sincerely,

HELPING THE CHILD.

Some Don'ts for Mothers to Turn Over in Their Minds.

A few don'ts might well be conspicuously posted in many a mother's mind. Don't consider it necessary to systematically understate your child. Your adult friends will know you do not mean it, but the child will not, and probably more characters are weakened by the lack of self confidence engendered by such a process than by the vanity which follows the silly bragging of overfond parents. Don't think that the moment you are alone with your boy or girl you must find fault or endeavor to improve the occasion by a little moralizing, no matter in how loving a spirit. This is the hardest of all, for no one is so anxious to help a child toward perfection as its parent, yet it surely leads to an avoidance of the moments alone together, which should be times of happy confidences. Don't correct the child before others. Never mind if a well meaning relative does say: "My dear, I am surprised that you do not show more force of character. Your children are suffering from a lack of discipline." Pass the matter over until you and the small offender can have it out alone. If the circumstances are such that it cannot be passed over take him out of the room. Lastly, laugh often with, but never at your child. This takes self denial, but it pays. Make up your mind that whatever others may say he can depend upon you for a quick, sure understanding without quibble or joke at his expense. This does not mean that he must not take his share of harmless fun. It is wholesome, and too much sheltering would make him over-sensitive, but the mother who lets her child know that she never makes fun of him will be surprised at the confidence with which he relies upon it—Mother's Magazine.

SCIENCE NOTES.

The pearl is the only gem that does not require the lapidary's art to bring out its beauty.

Although England's meat importations are very heavy coming from Australia and North and South America, 50 per cent of the supply is grown at home.

The cod fish has the reputation of being the boss of the sea. It will eat anything and there are many records of it having performed some marvelous feats of swallowing.

An effort is being made to adapt the horse chestnut to the human dietary. The nuts are more than half starch and sugar, with some protein and fat, and are nutritious. Their value chiefly lies in the elimination of the bitter element and the irritating asponia-like glucosides.

A "milk" made by the Chinese from a native bean is shown by analysis to have a specific gravity of 1.020 and a fat content of 3.125 contrasting with a specific gravity of 1.029 and a fat content of 3.3 for a good average cow's milk, and looks exactly like unskimmed cow's milk.

Rubber-tired vehicles provided a passenger and freight service in the United States estimated at $175,000,000 for the year 1916.

The rapid growth of vegetation of the Arctic regions has been attributed by some investigators to the action of the electrical currents in the air, but the Government experiments have failed to show that the growth of vegetation can be forced in this manner.

MUSICAL TRAINING.

It Should Have a Place in the Education of Every Child.

We shall make no real progress in music in this country, says Bruno Hahn, until we come to consider a training in the rudiments of music as an essential point in the education of our children.

For when parents excuse their remoteness on the ground that their children show no spontaneous desire to study music, because a child shows no such desire to study reading, writing and arithmetic to neglect totally these subjects? No normal child desires to study any subject, and a failure on the part of a child to crave musical education should not be permitted to exempt him from such training.

In my opinion the average child should begin to study music at the age of eight or nine and for at least two years devote an hour a day to the exercise of it.

After two years the child's preference and aptitude may safely be considered in regard to further study. But in any event the two years of study have not been wasted, for he has already learned something that will be of use to him all his life.

Musical training, especially in the home, should have a place in the education of every child. Exchange.

THE FIRST LINE OF DEFENCE

Pure blood is the body's first line of defence against disease. Strong, healthy blood neutralizes the poisons of infection, germs, or destroys the germs themselves. That is why many people, exposed to disease do not contract it. Those whose blood is weak and watery and therefore lacking in defensive power are most liable to infection. Everybody may observe that healthy, red-blooded people are less liable to colds and the grippe than pale, bloodless people. It is the bloodless people, who are easily overcome by slight exertion, who wake up in the morning as tired as when they went to bed. While women and girls chiefly suffer from bloodlessness, the trouble also affects both boys and men. It simply affects girls and women to a greater extent because there is a greater demand upon their blood supply. To have no remedy can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They tone up the entire system, make the blood rich and red, feed and strengthen starving nerves, increase the appetite, put color in the cheeks, give refreshing sleep and drive away that unnatural tired feeling. Plenty of sunlight and wholesome food will do the rest.

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine, or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Population by Sex.

About half the probable population of the world has been enumerated with relation to sex. About 50.3 per cent, male, 49.7 per cent, female, is the result of this count. Only in Europe, among continents, do the females outnumber the males, the proportion being: Female, 50.6 per cent; male, 49.4 per cent. In most parts of the world of which we have information the reverse is true. The percentage of males in British India is 50.9; in the tributary states, 51.7; in Japan, 50.5. In the United States by the last census there were 106 males to 100 females, the divisions of native, foreign, etc., being as follows: Native white, 100 per cent; native colored, 104 males, 100 females; native white of foreign parentage, 99.5 males, 100 females; foreign white, 129.2 males, 100 females; negro, 98.9 males, 100 females; all other, 185 males, 100 females.—New York Times.

EMBROIDERY.

Some Points On Its Care When in the Laundry.

No matter how precise the work of embroidery needle or crochet hook, the finished product can never be judged until it has been through the hands of the expert laundress, that is, of course, when the work is done on washable material. To best wash centerpieces one should use lukewarm water and suds of a pure white soap. If a piece is much soiled it should be allowed to soak rather than be rubbed. Sometimes a very soft handbrush can be used to scrub the most soiled spots if the brush is rubbed in the direction of the threads of the embroidery. Thorough rinsing in several lukewarm waters is a necessity, and then the piece should be rolled in a towel until the iron is hot.

Embroidery is best ironed wet with a hot iron, the embroidered side laid down on several thicknesses of towel, to raise it and bring out the pattern generally. Eyelets can be further raised and opened by going through them after ironing while still slightly damp with a stiffener or orange wood stick.

Always iron embroidered linen with the thread. If you iron the centre of a round piece first you will find the outside will ruffle. If you iron the outside first the inside will pucker. Iron right across the whole piece with the thread to get best results. Never approach any piece of work diagonally.

Sometimes in working one will pucker the work in places. These should be wet and stretched until dry before pressing at all. Of the embroidery seems to be taking up too much of the material and the centre still puffs in spite of all your efforts, try shrinking it out and placing a very hot iron down on the wet goods just on the puffy portion, leaving the iron as long as possible and not moving it along. Care must be taken not to scorch.

Oftentimes stretching before ironing will bring a piece into shape. Mark

To Conserve Canada's Food

THE Canadian Pacific Railway Co. has played an important part in the interests of Canada in the world war in a great many ways, and has again been honored by the recent appointment of Mr. W. A. Cooper, one of its prominent officials, to the Food Conservation Committee. Mr. Cooper has had considerable experience in dealing with foods, having been connected with the dining cars of the Canadian Pacific for twenty years, and his wide knowledge will be of much value to the Committee in the conservation of Canada's food stuffs. On this committee Mr. Cooper is associated with Judge Rose, Toronto; Mr. W. Wright, Toronto; and Miss Watson of the Guelph College. Mr. Cooper was born in 1871. After leaving school he commenced work with the Grand Trunk Railway as a junior clerk and later as a timekeeper. He was promoted to the position of General Superintendent of the Dining, Sleeping, and Parlor Cars, operating also the station restaurants, and train news service. For the years 1908, 09, and 10, Mr. Cooper filled the position of President of the American Association of Dining Car Superintendents.

off the correct shape on your ironing board or a large baking board and then proceed to pin the pieces into this shape. This is particularly a good plan for crocheted lace articles. In ironing lace on a towel or runner end be very careful to stretch the lace and material together and iron them thus, for if the lace is stretched by itself and allowed to stretch in the least bit it will incline to ruffle.

In ironing a lace-edged centerpiece, stretch the outer edge of the lace first, lay the piece flat and iron across with the thread, lace and all.

SARGASSO SEA MYTHS.

No Floating Island and No Imprisoned Derelict Ships.

The shortage of potash, owing to the war, has greatly stimulated the business of recovering potash from a kind of seaweed known as kelp, on the Pacific coast. They drag up the kelp with rakes made especially for the work, dry and burn it and get potash from the ashes. This has led to the formation of a company in Florida, which proposes, if it can get capital to back it, to build a floating potash works which will be towed out to the Sargasso Sea and anchored to the west of the island of floating seaweed supposed to exist there. The weed is supposed to contain potash at a rate of 200 tons a day. The prospectus of the company says it can go on forever because the supply of seaweed is inexhaustible, covering an area almost as large as the continent of Europe, and tightly matted into islands. The formation of the company emphasizes one thing: That the ancient myths about the Sargasso sea are generally believed, and that it is still a mystery to many, probably to the majority of persons. The old geographers described the Sargasso Sea as impenetrable and instated that it held forever all that came within its boundaries. It was a vast slow-moving eddy in the center of the Atlantic, where clogged and matted seaweed stretched for endless leagues like some slimy swamp. Here all the derelicts drifted and floated with the seaweed in eternal revolution slowly around and around, and there might be ships there that were caught in its embrace centuries ago. It was a fascinating thing to dream about it; books of fiction and books pretending to be fact.

But it was all false. The romancers forgot that Columbus sailed right through the Sargasso. Many another mariner has sailed through it since. The hydrographic office of the United States government sent a ship through it with a company of scientists six years ago, so there is no mystery about the Sargasso sea to those who have sought to learn.

The so-called Sargasso Sea is an egg-shaped area of ocean about 1,700 miles from east and west and 1,000 miles from north and south, lying due east from the coast of Florida. It is really a kind of eddy; it owes its existence to the ocean currents that encircle it; while in this great area of nearly 2,000,000 square miles there is scarcely any current. Seaweed does exist there in quantities, but the greater part of its growth is a surface seaweed kept afloat by tiny bubbles; but there are no floating islands of matted seaweeds and no derelicts imprisoned there for years.—Kansas City "Star."

So Say They All.

Some time ago a charming girl came to town to spend a week with a young woman friend. While there she was induced to take part in a church bazaar, and was given charge of the confectionery stall. Eventually a middle-aged man was led that way. "They tell me I must buy some chocolates," smiled the victim, picking up a box from the stall. "How much is this?" "Five dollars," answered the girl without any visible evidence of conscientious pang. "Um," thoughtfully returned the victim, glancing from the chocolates to the girl, "aren't you a little dear?" "Well," coyly rejoined the other, "that's what all the boys say."

EXERCISING AT HOME.

How One Man Utilizes Open Air Sporting Outfit.

"I didn't know your business allowed you much time for sports," said the visitor as he glanced around at the athletic paraphernalia displayed on the walls of his friend's den.

"It doesn't—much," replied the middle-aged business man. "When I get a chance I sneak off to a gymnasium or to the country club, but most of my exercising I do right here in this room."

"Surely you don't use the basketball or the ice skates or that rifle here," said his friend, with a smile.

"You're wrong, I do," said the busy man, briskly. "See that hook in the ceiling? I string the basketball up, put on that pair of old kid gloves and bang it around for ten minutes every other morning or so. Best punching bag I ever tried."

"Those ice skates are just the right weight to use or dumbbells in some very quick exercise. Any one of those golf sticks makes a wand such as they use in gymnastics to take the quirk out of the muscles of the arms, chest and back."

"Those tennis balls are invaluable for strengthening the grip of the hands and the cords of the forearm. Take one in each hand and squeeze it about fifty times as hard as you can every day."

"With that hunting rifle I haven't used in four years! I go through the same stunts, including the manual of arms that Uncle Sam has worked out to keep his soldiers in good trim. I must admit that this tennis racket has puzzled me. I can't think of a thing to do with it except practise strokes with one of the balls against that clear part of the wall."—New York Sun.

Delightful.

A certain young person had attained her twenty-fifth year so many times that her ingenuity was about to crack under the strain of getting away with other words, she would soon be an old maid if something wasn't done. But what?

In her perplexity she consulted the seventh daughter of a seventh daughter. "I feel," declared the young person tragically, "as if I were drowning."

"The seventh daughter of a seventh daughter," she replied, "drowning is described by all who have given it serious trial as a delightful sensation, provided you don't struggle against it."

Whereupon the young person saw a great light and went home and lived happily ever after.—New York Post.

THE CAR SHORTAGE

Consignees Can Help by Ordering Full Carloads.

The railways solicit consignees' co-operation in their endeavor to provide all their patrons with a satisfactory freight car supply.

CONSIGNEES CAN HELP BY ORDERING FULL CARLOADS.

Many consignees never order more than the minimum authorized under the tariffs and classification. The result is an economical waste which reduces the efficiency of the railways and the public suffers.

To increase the average car loading by 1 ton, would be equivalent to placing 10,950 additional freight cars in service in Canada.

To fully load cars would go a long way towards solving our transportation difficulties.

Railways realize that some consignees cannot always order full carloads, but they are requested to help by ordering in as large units as possible.

A CAR SAVED IS A CAR GAINED.

The difference between minimum loads and full loads of certain standard commodities is given herewith:

Flour shipped in 24 lb. barrels. Minimum load 210 bbls.; a 30 ton car will hold 300 bbls., a 40-ton car will hold 315 bbls. 98 lb. sacks. Minimum load 459 sacks; a 30 ton car will hold 675 sacks, a 40 ton car will hold 900 sacks.

Sugar shipped in 100 lb. sacks. Minimum load 300 sacks; a 30 ton car will hold 600 sacks, a 40 ton car will hold 800 sacks.

Cement shipped in 87 1/2 lb. sacks. Minimum load 457 sacks; a 30 ton car will hold 754 sacks, a 40 ton car will hold 1074 sacks.

Nails shipped in 107 lb. kegs. Minimum load 280 kegs; a 30 ton car will hold 516 kegs, a 40 ton car will hold 678 kegs.

CONSIGNEES CAN HELP BY PROMPTLY RELEASING CARS.

To most consignees such an appeal is unnecessary—they do not delay cars under load. There are others, however, who appear to be satisfied if they release cars in what is known as "free time." Again, there are still others who hold cars in storage service for weeks, and such consignees are largely responsible for car shortages and terminal congestion.

A recent check of cars placed for unloading and held by consignees at some of the stations on one of the railways showed 700 cars delayed an average of twelve days. Had these cars been released within even five days they would have made nearly 1,400 trips, and would have handled about 25,000 tons of freight. 2,615 other cars unloaded within three days could have been placed for delivery on the tracks occupied by these 700 delayed cars.

The railways do NOT want their cars to earn demurrage, but want them employed in carrying freight.

A ROLLING CAR GATHERS NO DEMURRAGE.

If consignees will order freight from shippers so as to increase the average loading by 5 tons per car, and if they will reduce the average delay in unloading by 24 hours, it will prevent car shortages.

In Co-operation There is Efficiency.

Life's Little Perversities.

There are many little perversities in this life of ours. Doctors cannot heal themselves. Dentists nearly always have bad teeth. Undertakers rarely die and never bury themselves. Editors cannot edit themselves. Film and aerial authorities are always broke. Chefs have no appetite. Tailors are always poorly dressed. Barbers usually need a shave. Bartenders seldom partake—unless it be of a cigar, merely to keep the shingles on the roof. There is no need to multiply instances.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

In These War Times

you want real food that contains the greatest amount of body-building material at lowest cost. The whole wheat grain is all food. Shredded Wheat Biscuits is the whole wheat in a digestible form. Two or three of these little loaves of baked whole wheat with milk and a little fruit make a nourishing, strengthening meal.

French Also Win Much Ground, and Take Strategic Bridgehead.

At this time it is impossible to give more than a general idea of the situation that are transpiring, since a report was given a few hours ago for the advance. There is little doubt, however, that the German troops entered have been dealt a heavy blow and that the British have made appreciable advances at many points in the difficult territory.

The preliminary bombardment by British artillery worked havoc in the German ranks, according to prisoners. All night the heavy guns

The German losses in the preliminary bombardment were severe, and the French already had accounted 300 prisoners when the correspondent of the Associated Press reached their front at noon. The French obtained by the French will be considerable, including a number of machine guns, which stuck in the mud and were abandoned by the retreating Germans. The German high seas fleet since the Justice of the Peace has not found conditions favorable for an engagement, but certainly the enemy will fight, and our fleet is commanded to fight, and that he will do so. No other conclusion is it legitimate to entertain. The enemy, if he comes, will come in the whole force, submarines included, and our units of ours will be ready to meet him and to repair. Therefore, the normal and logical conclusion is that the German fleet has been ready to tackle him and that it is humanely sure that it will be the victor under the conditions specified and will, further, be ready to steer a day or night at any moment, a day or night, the enemy may select. ### WEST HUNTINGDON

Miss Jean Farney is spending a few days at Belleville.

Mr. Fisher, a returned soldier spent the week end at Mr. Robt. Jeffreys.

Rev. Sanderson preached in the Methodist Church on Sunday evening, his subject was "Giants Sleeping at the Church Door." Mr. Sanderson explained very clearly that the man who has his name on the church roll and tries to keep up appearances, but is in sympathy with pool rooms, etc. is a worse sinner than the man who goes down street drunk.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Hillman and twin boys of Rednersville spent Saturday and Sunday at A. B. Farney's.

Some of our farmers have threshed and grain seems to be yielding well.

Mr. Warren Haggerty is suffering from blood poison in his hand.

Rev. C. S. Redick preached at Madoc
Sunday evening.

A young daughter has come to stay at
Mr. and Mrs. William Brays.

Mr. James A. Wilson has purchased one of Mr. Howard Ashley's farms.

A couple of airships from Deseronto visited our burg on Saturday.

The recent rains have been much appreciated by farmers.

MENIE

Miss Janet Donald had the misfortune to run a crocheted hook in the thick part of her thumb one day lately, a physician was called in to remove it, and the thumb is progressing favourably.

Messrs Stewart and Hume leave this Friday with their stock for Toronto Exhibition. We wish them success.

Miss Mae Stewart of Guelph and Miss Mae Odell of Burnbrae visited Mrs. J.
Clancy on Friday.

About 30 ladies attended the W. I. meeting held at Mrs. Garriens last Thursday. It was decided to hold a pie social on the Manor Grounds, Burnbrae on Friday evening August 31st. Proceeds for the Red Cross.

and Miss Thelma Lowrey visited Sunday afternoon at Mr. Charles Dracup's.

A great many from around here attended the lawn social held at Pethericks Corner last Thursday evening and all enjoyed themselves very much.

Mr. Will Laycock of Southbury accompanied her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Williams to North Battleford.

HAROLD

Mrs. Will Broadworth and Donald visited her mother, Mrs. Armstrong one day last week.

Miss Emma Snare entertained a few of her friends to an afternoon tea on Wednesday.

Miss Clara Heath left on Tuesday for Edmonton.

Mr. Earl Bailey passed through this vicinity with a load of buckwheat
last week.

Miss Lilian McGuire has returned home after spending a few days with her friend, Miss Emma Snare.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Bailey and family spent Sunday (the guest of the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Bailey).

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Take a glass of Salts to flush kidneys if bladder bothers you—Drink lots of water.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misdistress in the kidney region; rheumatic twin-gles, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone;
makes a delightful effervescent lithiawater drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

The Canadian National Exhibition grounds cover 264 acres and have up wards of a mile of water front.

Enter the Bread Making Contests

at Rural School Fairs in Ontario

The Campbell Flour Mills Company's great offer of the big One-Hundred-and-Fifty-Dollar Pathe phonographs (Five of them!) and other valuable prizes, for the best loaves of bread baked with Cream of the West Flour, is stirring up tremendous interest all over Ontario. Many girls are already busy as bees practising with Cream of the West Flour. Last year many girls declared, "Oh, if I had only practised, I'm sure I could have won!" Don't wait another day. Decide right now! Practise, Practise, Practise with

Cream of the West Flour

the hard wheat flour that is guaranteed for bread

"Every time you bake with it you find out new qualities in this flour that makes such splendid big loaves of delicious light bread. Practise!"

In five districts, each comprising several counties, we will give away free to the winner of the best district prize a large cabinet phonograph. At each fair there will be given a fine list of local prizes.

Prizes Worth Trying Hard For

1st Local Prize—"Girls' Own Annual," a great big beautifully bound, illustrated book with 800 pages of stories and articles about people, art, animals, garden, sewing, crocheting—everything that particularly interests young girls, older girls and their mothers. This is a wonderful prize that you can treasure for years.

2nd Local Prize—"Stories of Famous Men and Women," heavily cloth bound with gold lettering, many beautiful pictures in color, containing life stories of Florence Nightingale, Grace Darling, Flora MacDonald, Jenny Lind, the late Queen Victoria, and others.

3rd Local Prize—"Britain Overseas," a big handsome bound book with many colored pictures, interesting stories and descriptions of the countries and the peoples of Britain's world-wide empire.

4th Local Prize—"The Queen's Gift Book," a book of stories, pictures and special articles by Britain's best writers, the proceeds from the sale of this book are for the benefit of disabled soldiers in England.

Note—Unless the entries number six or more only first and second prizes will be awarded. Unless the entries number ten or more no fourth prize will be awarded.

The District Prizes—The winner of the first prize at each local fair automatically becomes a competitor for the following District prizes.

1st District Prize—"The Pathephone" is the name given to the big mahogany phonograph we offer as first prize. It will give you endless pleasure and entertainment for a lifetime. It has special reproducer attachments and needles, enabling you to play all kinds of flat disc records of no matter what make. The Pathephone reproduces band music, orchestra music, song and funny pieces perfectly; with it goes a dozen of the famous Pathe records. Total value, $120.00.

2nd District Prize—Set of Dickens' Works, 18 splendently bound volumes, with many illustrations. Among the books in the set are "Oliver Twist" and "Old Curiosity Shop." These are two of the most entrancing stories ever written.

3rd, 4th, and 5th Prizes—"Canner" Bread mixers.
This simple yet well-made machine, takes the hard work out of bread making. Instead of laborious kneading of the old method, you just put in the ingredients, turn the handle, and the dough is thoroughly and more evenly mixed.

Read Carefully Conditions of Contest

Every girl may compete at the rural school fairs in her district, whether or not she attends school, providing that her 12th birthday occurs before November 1st, 1917, or her 13th birthday does not occur before Nov. 1st, 1917.
No loaf of bread will be accepted unless it is at least 7 x 5 inches and 3 inches deep, and divided into two loaves, so that they may be separated and baked separately in the District Contests. The judging will be done by Miss M. A. Purdy, of the Department of Breadmaking and Flour Testing. The local contest at the fair will be conducted under the same rules as all the other regular contests at your fairs.

The Standard by which bread will be judged will be as follows:

1. Appearance of Loaf ..... 15 marks
  - (a) Color ..... 5 marks
  - (b) Texture of crust ..... 5 marks
  - (c) Shape of loaf ..... 5 marks
2. Texture of Crumb ..... 10 marks
  - (a) Evenness ..... 5 marks
  - (b) Softness ..... 5 marks
3. Flavor of Bread ..... 15 marks
  - (a) Taste ..... 5 marks
  - (b) Odor ..... 5 marks

Important—Each loaf must be accompanied by the part of the bag containing the face of the Old Miller, and an entry form signed by the girl and parents or guardian stating date of birth, P.O. address and a living name of dealer from whom Cream of the West Flour was purchased. The format for the entry form and the girl actually baked the loaf entered in the competition. The format will be provided at the time of the fair. The entry of the judges is final. Not more than one entry may be made by each girl and not more than one local prize will be awarded to the same fair.

Which District is Yours? This list shows you which counties you compete against if you become a competitor for the District prizes:

District No. 1.—Counties of Glengarry, Stormont, Duncan, Grenville, Leeds, Frontenac, Lennox and Addington, Carleton, Lanark, Renfrew.

District No. 2.—Counties of Hastings, Prince Edward, Peterborough, Northumberland, Victoria, Durham.

District No. 3.—Counties of York, Ontario, Peel, Halton, Wentworth, Oxford, Brant, Waterloo (with a few farms in Wellington and Perth).

District No. 4.—Counties of Welland, Haldimand, Simcoe, Elgin, Kent, Essex, Lambton, Middlesex (with a few farms in Huron and Lincoln).

District No. 5.—Counties of Bruce, Grey, Dufferin, Simcoe, Districts of Muskoka, Parry Sound, Timiskaming, Algonquin, Manitowish.

THE 14 SPLITTS of the contests at the fair will be made known in the usual way as in the case of all the other regular contests. The District results will be announced as soon as possible after the conclusion of the Rural School Fairs in the Province.

DO NOT MISS THIS GREAT OPPORTUNITY: Every girl between 12 and 18 years should compete. What a splendid way to stir up in yourself interest in breadmaking!
Get a supply of Cream of the West Flour at your dealers and practice using it as often as possible to increase the chances of winning. If your dealer cannot sell it to you, write to the Campbell Flour Mills Co., Ltd., Toronto, and we will promptly tell you the nearest place to get it.

NO COMPETITIONS IN COUNTIES NAMED BELOW:
The competition is open to all parts of the Province where Rural School Fairs are held, except the Districts of Rainy River, Kenora and Thunder Bay. These districts are the only parts of the Province where school fairs are held by the Department of Agriculture in which this competition will not be a feature. There are no district representatives of the Department of Agriculture in the Counties of Sud-bury, Huron, Perth, Wellington, Haldimand, Prescott, Russell or Lincoln, and no rural school fairs are held in these counties by the Dept. of Agriculture. There are, however, a few fairs held by local schools in Wellington, Perth, Huron and Lincoln, and these are included in the competition.

Governments Co-operating to Make Exhibition Great Object Lesson

"Production, conservation and thrift" will be the Confederation Year slogan at the Canadian National Exhibition, every department of which will radiate the "Win the War" spirit. The Governments, Dominion and Provincial, are co-operating with more than usual vigor in the work of preparing exhibits and demonstrations in connection with the propaganda to speed up production and cut down waste, and there will be a splendidly enlightening mobilization of national resources. It will be a great food training camp. The home will be the subject of educational demonstrations of a practical nature, that the housewife may be impressed with the importance of backing up the work on the farm. A "don't waste it—can it" demonstration by experts will be given daily, while domestic science lessons in a model kitchen in the Women's Building will be another of the many special features of interest to women.

To Our Subscribers

Owing to the increased prices of newspaper print the LEADER in common with the other papers of the County will be obliged to adopt the subscription rate of $1.50 a year. While the majority of our neighboring papers adopted that rate a year ago, we have delayed in the hopes of a drop in the paper market. Our subscribers can readily see with the increased cost of paper, ink, wages, etc., as well as the increase of the necessities of life there is no alternative than to increase our subscription rates. All subscribers renewing before Sept. 1st, or any new subscribers may do so for $1.00. The label shows when your subscription expires. Renew now.

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Restore Color, Gloss and Attractiveness.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wych's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, for about 50 cents. Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through times, by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive. Wych's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Unhappiest Woman In All of Europe

Countess Ina's Plot to Ruin the German Crown Prince.

The writer of these staggering disclosures is a lady who rendered a signal service to the German Crown Princess in the latter's schooldays, and because of this was appointed her personal companion. To her the "Unhappiest Woman in Europe" confided most of the terrible troubles and secret anxieties with which her life has been beset. No more remarkable human document has even been penned.

"I can't stand this life any longer!" Cecile flung herself upon a couch in utter despair to the misery that filled her soul. I did my utmost with small attentions as one woman can pay to another at a time of intense suffering, at last she raised her tear-stained face to mine.

"I am going to leave Berlin at once," she said, "and take refuge with my mother!"

I knew that, like all people who are in love, Cecile would be put in wrong if she took this extreme step. The arrangements for royal personages of her importance, made for many weeks beforehand, would have to be cancelled, and her failure to fulfil the engagements she had made would alone give rise to endless scandal, especially in consideration of the notoriety the Crown Prince had recently been earning.

I therefore suggested that she should write to her mother, urging her most powerfully to come to her, and that the Grand Duchess should lay her wrongs before the Kaiser, and try to come to some arrangement for the future.

Cecile listened with attention to such arguments as I was able to find, and finally consented to remain in Berlin. She wrote, however, not only to her mother, but to her brother, the reigning Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin.

As I related in the last instalment of these memoirs, the Crown Prince had charged Cecile with having been instrumental in the poisoning of his favorite mistress. Cecile was determined to obtain redress for the intolerable wrong her husband had done her by making this charge. I need not say that there were many people frowning upon her to suspect that my loved mistress really was the culprit.

A LOVELY CONSPIRATOR.

There is no need for me to describe the great family row which was the result of the prompt appearance of the aroused relatives of the Crown Princess. Both the Emperor and the Empress took part in it; and the result was that the Kaiser insisted on the fullest possible reparation. That took the part of a withdrawal and an apology, tendered by the enraged Prince before the relatives of his wife, and before his own mother as well.

The Empress, like all partial mothers, blamed Cecile for the humiliation of her favorite son, though surely he had brought it upon himself. I even saw a man had, but she is a jealous, small-minded woman, who professes very high principles, but confesses them sadly when it comes to putting them into practice. In no other way can I explain the part she played in the intrigue against the Crown Prince, which followed the visit of the members of the Mecklenburg House to Court.

The chief actor in this affair was the beautiful Countess Ina von Bassewitz, now the morganatic wife of Prince Oscar, Hohenzollern, the Kaiser's fifth son. A few years ago she was called at Potsdam and Berlin "The Stormy Petrel," for her appearance in a prominent capacity was always the forerunner of trouble.

The Countess belonged to a very old Prussian family, her father, Count Hugo von Bassewitz, being a large and very wealthy landowner.

Ina had a very well-recognized talent for intrigue, and a recklessness of disposition which prevented her from drawing the line when serious trouble was looming ahead. When a young girl she had formed an association with a married man—a person of some importance at court—which had ended in her appearance in the divorce court, where she was accused by a wronged wife of conduct which would have wrecked her reputation entirely had the evidence been strong enough to substantiate the charges.

THE PRIGGISH PRINCE.

She scraped out of that trouble, only to figure as to the cause of a fatal duel between two young officers not more than a year later.

turn the passion which she had easily aroused in his heart.

Princess Alexandra, whose husband was absent at the time, acted as kind friend to the couple, and at her establishment they used to meet every day.

"YOUR UNHAPPY CONRAD."

Matters had reached this pass when a young and handsome Bavarian officer of (thians, Vc. Penstenberg by name, committed suicide at the Casino, or club, of his regiment, leaving behind him nothing to account for the act except a letter addressed to some lady whose name he carefully concealed. I have a copy of the letter by me as I write. It runs as follows:

"Adored one.—Since it is now proved beyond all doubt that I must no longer live my life to one such as you, I end my life in despair.

"Why were you so kind to me at first, if it was in your heart—as it must have been—to be so cruel to me such a little time? Your refusal, that one so lowly as I should lift my eyes to one so exalted as yourself, has seared my heart. It was not always so.

I die with your picture on my heart; you gave it to me, and I defy any power to take so precious a possession from the unhappy dead. Let it be buried with me; that is the last wish of your unhappy.

In the inquiries, both legal and military, held into the circumstances of the suicide, it was stated by the orderly who found the dead body, and by the doctor who examined it, that there was no woman's picture at all; and the decision was made that the youth was suffering from acute delusions.

That evidence was credited by nobody. Whispers went round Berlin society, and it was said that this and that lady of the Court was the person implicated. In a very little time the rumors concerning the Crown Princess, and it was said that Von Penstenberg had been found with a miniature of Cecile clasped in his hand.

No rumor of that kind can live unless there is something to justify it. Penstenberg was a gay and gallant young fellow, and in a casual way he had been one of the introducers of the Tango into Germany, and was acknowledged at the time to be the most graceful amateur dancer of that difficult measure. The dance had attracted Cecile from the very first sight of it, and she had made no secret of the pleasure she had received from the assiduous instruction Penstenberg had given her in the first days of the new dance.

But the people who ventured to take the name of the Crown Princess in their mouths had more to their story than this. They declared that a picture was found on Von Penstenberg, and that it was actually the Princess herself, a miniature concerning which there could be no mistake. They said it had passed into the possession of the Kaiser, who had hushed the matter up as far as he could.

It was my task when these malicious scandals were current to keep them from the proud ears of the Princess. I thought they would die away, as many another malicious untruth had died, from sheer lack of anything to justify them.

The Crown Prince, however, would not have it so. He wrote from Dantzig a long letter to the Crown Princess, setting out at some length the scandal that was current, and cunningly affirming his belief that it was baseless. He intimated that he was writing to the Kaiser with a view of establishing the fact that his wife was in no way concerned with the death of Penstenberg.

Following this letter Cecile was received in private by the Kaiser, and returned from the interview in a state of terrible emotion. She had seen the miniature which had been found with the dead man, and it was one of herself. The picture in question had been painted by a Dresden artist in the early days of her marriage, and had been her birthday present to her husband. Neither he nor she liked it; it was certainly a bad likeness, and she had afterwards replaced it with a better piece of work.

The last she had seen of this picture was in a cabinet belonging to the Prince, where it was lying apparently disregarded.

The position was a terrible one, for the matter was extremely delicate, so delicate that open inquiry could not be made. Cecile appeared to have aged by years in the course of the few days that followed, and though we both puzzled our brains over the matter incessantly we found no solution.

AN UNEXPECTED ALLEY

At this stage we found an unexpected ally in the Prince August William. He had received from some sources a letter which disclosed his own account of the exposure of his wife's close intimacy with the Countess Ina von Bassewitz, and of the intrigue between that lady and his callow young brother. He returned to Berlin quietly and unexpectedly, and set his cunning traps to work.

His Princess was no match for him in astuteness, and he found his brother Oscar an easy victim. He at once obtained the full incriminating evidence of the Countess Ina von Bassewitz. Oscar was set upon carrying her, and would be content with nothing less. He disregarded all expostulations and statements that neither the Kaiser nor the proud father of the lady would hear of a morganatic marriage. He was infuriated, and behaved after the fashion of infuriated young men the world over.

The little Princess, in her alarm at the part she had played in an affair which was turning out so seriously, gave Prince August a clue to something that he could see from her alarm and tears that she was keeping something back from him. He pressed her hardily, and she went into hysterics and declared that "mamma" was as much to blame as she was.

This did not deter him.

"You must tell me what it is, Alexandra," he declared, sternly. "What is it that Ina von Bassewitz has induced you to do?"

"The portrait!" the miniature," sobbed the hysterical woman. "Oh, it was not my fault, really it was not. Mamma gave it to me to give to her."

The Prince then took his questions to the Empress, who just as much as Cecile, was his wife. In a very few minutes he had elicited from her the fact that she had taken the old miniature of the Crown Princess from the bureau where Wilhelmina had thrown it. She had kept it for a long time, and when Princess Alexandra had asked for a picture of Cecile had given it to her without asking why it was required.

"I did not like to say anything about it," was the only reason she gave when pressed to tell why she had maintained silence since the wicked whispers had been in circulation.

DARK SECRETS REVEALED.

Having probed this mystery so far, Prince August carried it one step further. He went to the little town where the suicide had taken place, and set to work to unravel the whole business.

Among the persons he questioned closely was the soldier servant of the dead man. This fellow proved to be conversant with his master's affairs, and after a lot of difficulty, the Prince elicited from him the fact that the dead man had been made in love with a dark lady, who had visited him once or twice at his quarters. Prince August concluded this servant knew more than he had disclosed, and took efficient means to make him tell the rest.

In the German army there are ways of making a man like that talk, especially when one happens to be a prince of the blood. The fellow remained obstinately silent for a long time, but at last his secret was wrung from him.

He had been in the pay of the Countess Ina, and had acted on her orders. When his master had committed suicide, he had discovered the dead body and read the letter, knowing to whom it referred and was addressed. He had seen a possibility of extracting more money, and had taken away the like of the Countess Ina from the place, carefully concealing his master's death for the time.

On receiving the news and the picture, the Countess had detained him for a little time, and had then given him another picture, promising him no less than 10,000 marks if he would place it on the body in place of that he had taken away. This, owing to the precaution he had taken on discovering his master's death, he was able to do. He then contrived that a servant of the Casino should discover the body of Penstenberg, with its damning evidence against the innocent Crown Princess.

LAUGHED AT THE KAISER.

I need hardly say that when Prince August William arrived at this stage in his inquiries he determined that the whole matter must be kept a profound secret. At the same time he was not prepared to allow Cecile to suffer in the eyes of the Kaiser in a matter of which she was entirely innocent. The Crown Prince was summoned from Dantzig, and another of those family councils of the Hohenzollerns was summoned, the only outsider present being the Countess Ina von Bassewitz.

If the Kaiser or Prince August expected any remorse or shame on her part, they were utterly disappointed. She cynically admitted the part she had played, only denying, for the honor of Prince Oscar, that there had been anything between her and the dead man except a mad infatuation on his part, which she had done her best to discourage.

"I was mad when I learned what had happened," she said, dramatically, "only I should lose the love of the heart to its true death."

This was uttered with a languishing glance at Prince Oscar, who stood by ready to champion his love to the very bitter end, if need be.

Nor would this hold woman consent to the alliance that all, including Cecile, except upon her own terms.

"Withdraw all opposition," to my marriage with Prince Oscar," she demanded, "or I will tell the whole world how the Empress and the Princess Alexandra helped me to the Princess Ina and create a scandal against the Crown Princess, just because they hate her!"

The Kaiser raved, but she only laughed at his thunder. Prince Oscar might have been expected of such a he, and the Royal Family was in a most unpleasant predicament. In conclusion, the Kaiser was left to difficulty, his position was made harder by the old Count von Bassewitz, who argued out every step of precedence in discussing a morganatic marriage.

INA GETS HER WAY.

The Kaiser had hoped that the lady would not appear at Court, but her father stuck out for every privilege, contending that in the case of such a morganatic marriage the lady must rank only to Imperial and Royal Highnesses.

In the end Ina von Bassewitz had her way. On the eve of the war the pair were united by ceremony known as nuptials of war, and as Countess of Ruppin she ranked before the Mistress of Ceremonies herself at Court.

The victim of the whole affair remained my beloved and wronged mistress. The secrecy taken to keep the name of the Empress out of the scandal ensured that the gossip should continue to collect about her name. She was quite innocent, and the Empress was guilty of at least a very mean and spiteful action, but Cecile, as always, had to suffer.

"I wish to hear no more of this," she said to me, almost sternly, when I alluded to the gross injustice of the whole affair. "Let them settle their troubles as best they may; one wrong more or less, what does it matter to women who must suffer in silence under the greatest wrong of all?"

ANOTHER GERMAN "DISCOVERY."

(New York Tribune.)

Before being impressed by this new German "discovery" of French ambitions, it is worth while to recall the earlier "discovery" of the Germans in Brussels. No one can fail to recall that here faithful, credible German officers—as credible as any German—found proof which convinced all Germany that Belgium had long been plotting to attack the German Empire, and that the German invasion, in fact, and only forestalled the Belgian conspiracy.

It is worth while recalling also that certain German papers have "discovered" that the reason that the United States is at war with Germany is to me found in the fact that the President's son-in-law, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, is under the control of the wicked, Anglophile Morgans. To recall these two interesting German "discoveries" is to get a sense of values in dealing with the newest German find.

Turning now to this German allegation, which, curiously enough, sees the light of day alongside declarations in many German papers, that only the feeble-minded imagines that the Germans will ever give up Belgium, what is the probable substance of it?

The German statement, confidently mentions the name of Saarbrücken and vaguely adds other vast territorial modifications on the left bank of the Rhine. What it seems to refer to is the coal region, which is northeast of the old frontier of Alsace-Lorraine as it existed before the war of 1870. Apparently the Germans think that they have unearthed a French plot to annex some of their territory north of the Saar River.

The history of this territory is simple. In the 18th century Lorraine passed to the French crown, not by war or by conquest, but by the death of the King of Lorraine and in accordance with previous agreements. Lorraine, as it then existed, included a very considerable portion of the territory northeast of the Saar River, which is now German territory. In this region and within the frontiers of Lorraine were very considerable coal deposits. At the close of the Napoleonic wars, after France had been conquered, Prussia occupied and took, as part of her own prize, these coal districts. In the final congress of Vienna, which preceded the return of Napoleon from Elba, Prussia was satisfied with the boundary of the Saar River, but at the second congress Prussia's appetite increased and a number of rich coal fields, including the famous Saar basin, were taken. These in addition, Prussia took from France her most considerable and valuable coal fields.

In 1871, in the treaty of Frankfurt, Germany extended her conquest to include all the iron regions of Lorraine then discovered. After the congress of Vienna and the treaty of Frankfurt, therefore, the Germans quite believed that they had deprived France of her greatest coal-producing districts and her richest iron regions.

The fact that valuable deposits of iron were subsequently found within French territory has always rankled in the German mind, and the elimination of Germany to annex the iron districts has been frequently set forth in all sorts of German publications and by all sorts of Germans.

We may very well leave it to the French to explain that the facts of the situation are as to their purposes and war aims, but it is worth recalling that the district which the Germans now feel that the French wickedly, corruptly and imperially seek to annex is the coal district stolen from France after Napoleon had been defeated in 1815.

This German manoeuvre should develop into a war, it is certain that there will be any number of similar efforts to impress upon the Russian and the American peoples the idea that this is only a war of conquest on the part of the nations that are fighting, and that the only object to peace is the appeasement of the nations that are fighting Germany. No American can be deceived and no Russian should be. The test of German desire for peace remains German purpose as to Belgium.

The revelation on the part of German newspapers of a determination to hold Belgium is an all-sufficient reason why the war should go on and why it will go on.

The Germans attacked France, as they did Belgium, without any warrant and without having received any injury. Their effort to convict Belgium of having plotted German ruin is now logically followed by a similar charge against the French. The allegation against our French friends will carry as much weight as did the German allegation against Belgium.

Just as it may be true that the French, now that their own coal regions have been wantonly wrecked by Germany in the Lens district, have determined to take back a portion of the district wrongfully torn from them by the treaty of 1815. But this is a question which so long as Germany maintains her right to annex Belgium, to make Russian Poland into a subject kingdom and to deny liberty to the Serbians. When Germany has announced her policy with respect to these questions, and when this policy confirms unmistakably and inescapably with the demands of civilization, right and justice, then it will be time to discuss the crimes and purposes of Germany's foes. Just now there is something incredibly ludicrous in the German wolf disclosed in the attitude of accusing the lambs he has plundered and wounded of wicked conspiracies against him.

CHOLERA INFANTUM

Cholera infantum is one of the fatal ailments of childhood. It is a trouble that comes on suddenly, especially during the summer months, and unless prompt action is taken the little one may soon be beyond aid. Baby's Own Tablets are an ideal medicine in warding off this trouble. They regulate the bowels and sweeten the stomach and thus prevent all the dreaded stomach complaints. Concerning them, Fred Rose, South Bay, Ont., says: "I feel Baby's Own Tablets saved the life of our baby when she had cholera infantum, and I would not be without them." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A PIPE DREAM.

German Idea of Coalition With Russia and Japan.

If the Russian chooses the Englishman as his friend, the world power of Germany is relegated to a misty distance; it is, indeed, doubtful whether in that event, our object can never be achieved. Moreover, in addition to this loss, we shall have for a long time to come to reckon with Continental strength which will cost blood, money and strength. The result of which—with Germany standing at the side of Austria-Hungary against Russia, France and England—cannot be calculated. It is impossible to call attention too insistently to the importance of this decisive moment.

If there is a way to effect, from without, in favor of the rising world powers, the comparatively rapid dissolution of the British Empire, it is only by means of a German-Russian-Japanese world coalition. Of course, such a coalition is at bottom, another word for the dissolution of the world. But the object of the political map of the earth is not to remain unaltered; the utmost German devotion to peace would not dispose of the aggressive imperialism of the others, but would merely permit Germany's development to be delayed.

We have the choice between being full partners in the future syndicate for the division of the world or being despised outsiders.

If we succeed, by means of Russian and Japanese advances with Germany, in the destruction of the British Empire, in the ultimate reconciliation of Russian and North American imperialism will be facilitated, because North America will then be unable to co-operate with Great Britain in the Pacific Ocean. Perhaps in the later future—to mention only one of the numerous possibilities.

Paying the Fee.

A young factory hand and his girl went to get married. They got as far as the church when he found out he had not enough money to pay the wedding fee. The clergyman would not marry them, saying, "No money, no wedding."

So the girl asked would he wait till she went home for the money. The clergyman said "Yes."

In a little while the girl returned with the money and the knot was duly tied.

The girl now said to the clergyman: "Can any one oppose our union?" To which he replied: "Nobody, my daughter. Heaven bless you!"

The girl said: "Then there's the pawn ticket for your hat and coat, which I took from the vestry and pawned!"

High Cost of Living.

The researches of Professor Mead, of the University of California show that 310 men own 4,000,000 acres of the best land on the continent and that one railroad owns 5,000,000 acres. The report of the secretary of agriculture shows that less than half of the arable land in the United States is under cultivation.

Farm Boys Fill the Pulpits.

If you are a salesman there is little chance your son will become a minister, while if you are a farmer the chances are the best, and if you are a minister the chances are the next best.

That conclusion results from the statistical data after investigation by the Association of American Colleges.

Thirty-three per cent. of all ministers—at least in the northern states, where the statistics apply—came from the home of farmers and 18 per cent. from the home of ministers. Others furnish the following per cent. of candidates for the ministry: Physicians, 2 per cent.; clerical workers, 4 per cent.; carpenters, 5 per cent.; merchants and laborers, each 8 per cent.; all other vocations, 20 per cent.—Chicago Tribune.

What You Can Do.

You don't know what you can do. At any rate, you don't know until you're up against it and have to try. Some day you're going to bump against a wall. You'll want to quit. You'll want to say to yourself that it simply can't be done. And then if you are really worth while you'll lighten your belt and jump into it. You'll say, "I've got to do it." Then the first thing you know it will be done. And the best part of it is you'll enjoy it, and the satisfaction that comes when it is done will be worth more than hearing your uncle has left you $10,000.—American Boy.

A KISS BY MISTAKE

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

Ned Bartholow and his fiancée Sarah Stevens, were on a railway train entering the city of New York. They were to be married in a month, and Ned having business in the metropolis, Sarah had decided to go down with him and spend a few days there on the matter of her trousseau.

Shortly before reaching the Terminal the train ran into a tunnel. It was a short tunnel, and no lights were lit. Most of the passengers, thinking that they were rolling into the station arose from their seats and crowded into the aisle. Ned and Sarah among the number. When Ned perceived that the train was in the dark he concluded to take a kiss. Drawing Sarah to ward him, he pressed his lips upon hers.

Sarah, to his astonishment, broke away from him, at the same time uttering a cry. The train shot out into the light and revealed to Ned a young woman looking at him indignantly. Sarah was standing a yard away from her fiancée.

The young woman who had been kissed, seeing the astonished expression on Ned's face, broke into a smile. Ned was in a dilemma. He couldn't apologize without saying that he had kissed the wrong woman. So he said nothing. The smile on the girl's face changed to a frown. Sarah, not understanding what had happened, looked curious.

The train stopped in the station, and the passengers poured out on to the platform. The kissed woman alighted before Ned and Sarah, and Ned kept an eye on her as she walked out of the station a dozen yards ahead of him. When she reached the sidewalk she entered a taxi. Ned made a mental note of its number.

Fate has so many persons' affairs in its hands that it starts things that leaves the persons themselves to work out the problem, though fate will take a hand at any time in any of the millions of life's real stories. Ned Bartholow felt that he owed the lady he had kissed by mistake an apology. Since he could not have made one in the presence of Sarah it occurred to him that possibly he might do so when Sarah was not present. At any rate, he fixed in memory the number of the taxi in which the lady had been driven away and as soon as he had disposed of Sarah went to the cab company's office, asked that the number be called in and when the cab came paid the cabman a dollar to tell him where he had driven the lady.

Another strange thing is that we do things for one reason thinking that we are doing them for another. Ned could have sent a brief explanation by mail—that is, after getting the lady's name. He did neither. He called at the address the cabman gave him that very evening and asked for the lady who had arrived during the afternoon on a train.

The truth is that all this part of the story might as well be condensed into a few words. That kiss in the dark was a feast for a god, and he wanted another one from the same lips. He could kiss his fiancée all he liked. Possibly that entered into his reasons for wishing to kiss another woman whom he had no right to kiss.

The lady entered the room wonderingly and, seeing the man who had kissed her, blushed. That was the most unfortunate thing she could have done. It doubled Ned's desire to kiss her again.

"I have taken the liberty to come without permission," he said, "to make an explanation."

The lady dropped her eyes to the floor and waited. Ned had intended to tell her that he was engaged to the lady who had stood near him on the train and to confess that the kiss had been intended for her. But how could he hope for a duplicate kiss after making such an avowal? The scamp changed his tactics, entering instead on a tissue of lies.

"I had noticed you," he said, "sitting in the car not far from me. You will forgive me, won't you?"

"Proceed," said the girl.

"How could I help admiring one to whom admiration is due? Your liquid eyes, your glossy hair, your"—He paused.

"What?"

"Coral lips. They took me up like a whirlwind and made me dizzy. I know not what I did."

He paused. The lady's eyes were still fixed on the rug on which she stood.

"Do not stab me by saying that I am not forgiven."

There was no reply.

"Does this silence mean that I am to be treated as I deserve?"

He made a step toward her. She did not move.

"Have you no reply?"

Still silence.

He turned and went to the door, where he paused and looked back. She stood as if waiting for something. He returned to her and for the second time pressed his lips on hers.

There was a reason for the breaking of the engagement between Ned Bartholow and Sarah Stevens. He said it was financial losses. The real cause was that the train on which he and Sarah entered the city ran through a two minute tunnel.

At any rate, this is the fatalist's road.

Making a Garden.

Agriculture is nearly as old as man, and since it began it is probable that farmers have been studying out balanced rations for domestic animals, but even yet few housekeepers have any real scientific ideas on feeding the family. Your state agricultural college or the department of agriculture, Washington, can help you out in this, and you should take the matter into consideration in making your garden and see to it that your vegetables include the most nutritious and health giving properties. Every farmer knows that when a horse works all day he should receive certain feed and when he is idle in rainy weather, for instance—he gets different rations. How about a man or a child? Do you know how to set your table to get the maximum results and keep perfect health? Do you serve the same food to the men working in the heat of the harvest field, to the boy going to school and to the babies? Your garden should contribute to the health and happiness of each.—Reclamation Record.

Might Have Changed History.

Here is the story of an averted tragedy which, if it had not been averted might have changed the whole course of modern history in Europe. The time was about three weeks after Sadova. The place was the little village of Pilsdorf, about thirty miles from Vienna. King William of Prussia and Bismarck were there, and they sat down on a terrace outside a small cafe to drink beer. Kern, an Austrian forester, saw them. He regarded them as the deadly enemies of his country. He was an excellent marksman, and he had his double barreled gun with him. Taking aim from behind cover, he was about to fire when his wife, seeing what he was after and fearing the consequences, clutched him by the coat. He turned to argue with her, and before the argument was finished the king and his chancellor had disappeared. So nothing happened. But if Kern had been allowed to fire there might have been no German empire.

Got His Dose Later.

WHEN YOU WAKE UP DRINK GLASS OF HOT WATER

Wash the poisons and toxins from system before putting more food into stomach.

Says inside-bathing makes any one look and feel clean, sweet and refreshed.

Wash yourself on the inside before breakfast like you do on the outside. This is vastly more important because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing illness, while the bowel pores do.

For every ounce of food and drink taken into the stomach, nearly an ounce of waste material must be carried out of the body. If this waste material is not eliminated day by day it quickly ferments and generates poisons, gases and toxins which are absorbed or sucked into the blood stream, through the lymph ducts which should suck only nourishment to sustain the body.

A splendid health measure is to drink, before breakfast each day, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless way to wash these poisons, gases and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels; thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs but very little at the drug store but is sufficient to make anyone an enthusiast on inside-bathing. Men and women who are accustomed to wake up with a dull, aching head or have furred tongue, bad taste, nasty breath, sallow complexion, others who have bilious attacks, acid stomach or constipation, are assured of pronounced improvement in both health and appearance shortly.

HYMENEAL

BAKER-MATTHEWS

A quiet but very pretty wedding was solemnized on Wednesday, September 12th at the home of Mr. Thos. Matthews of Stirling, when their eldest daughter, Greta Annabel was united in marriage to Clifford Newton, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Baker, Stirling, only the immediate friends of the contracting parties being present.

The bride entered the drawing room on the arm of her father and took her place under the Wedding Bell suspended from a beautiful chandelier of brass and white filigree. The Rev. J. T. Hall of St. Andrew's Church, Stirling, conducted the ceremony, and Miss Dracup of Wellman's played the wedding music.

The bride was charmingly gowned in ivory silk crepe de chine, hand embroidered and wore a veil of Brussels net with wreath of orange blossoms and carried white Chrysanthemums. She was attended by Miss Stubbuck of Stirling who was daintily gowned in maize crepe de chine and carried yellow chrysanthemums. The groom was ably assisted by Mr. James Johnston of Frankford.

After congratulations among which was a cablegram from Dr. Bruce Richardson of Shorncliffe, England were received and the wedding breakfast partaken of, the bridal party motored to Belleville where Mr. and Mrs. Baker took the train for Chatham and other western points, the bride wearing a brown cloth suit, velvet hat and white fox fur. The large number of valuable and beautiful presents which the bride received not only voice best wishes but speak of the high esteem in which the young couple are held by their large circle of friends.

On the previous Friday evening the friends of the bride elect gathered at her home to give her a shower. Among the many pretty and useful gifts was a cut glass sugar and cream from St. Andrew's A. B. C. of which Mrs. Baker is the organist and also a faithful and efficient member.

Mr. and Mrs. Baker will reside on their return in the Matthews house.

IN MEMORIAM

The pale messenger again visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Tucker on the 8th of January, 1917, and carried away their only surviving son, Lorne Burton, at the early age of fifteen years, five months and one day.

Lorne was a very bright and promising boy, and being possessed of an active and studious mind, his school life was being attended with remarkable success as he sped on from Public to High School work until stricken with scarlet fever, he passed suddenly away after a brief illness of eleven days.

Courteous and pleasing in his manner, he had a warm place in the hearts of all with whom he came in contact, and consequently leaves a large circle of friends and associates in the community, who deeply mourn their loss, and who tender their deepest and tenderest sympathy to the home so suddenly and sadly bereft.

Reared in the atmosphere of a christian home he soon gave evidence of his preference and love for spiritual things by his regular attendance in the means of grace, being seldom absent from his place in the Sabbath school and also in the public services of the Sanctuary. It was here the writer had the pleasing privilege of noting the deep and intelligent interest which he manifested, as seated with his parents, he took part in the Scripture reading and also in the song services of the hour. And in the spiritual campaign conducted by Evangelist G.M. Sharpe on the Rawdon circuit, he also manifested a deep interest, and was among those who there sought "Higher ground" and more entire consecration to the work of the Master.

As viewed from the human side, life seemed very brief. But not so however when viewed from the Divine side. For He liveth long who liveth well; All other lives are short and vain; He liveth longest who can tell "Of living most for heavenly gain."

It was thus he lived and therefore his remains rest in hope in the family burial plot in the Bethel Cemetery.

The Grim Reaper had on two former occasions visited the same home gathering in his embrace thirteen years ago, little Emma, aged two months and last year (May 1916) George, David aged two years seven months and four days.

"I cannot see thy secret things In this, my dark abode I may not reach with earthly wings The heights and depths of God. So faith and patience wait a while Not doubting nor in fear For soon in Heaven my Father's smile Will render all things clear."

Rawdon, Ont., 1917.

Rawdon Khaki Club

The Club met at the home of Mr. David Cotten on September 3rd. There were 20 present.

Meeting opened by singing "We'll Never let the Old Flag Fall." Readings were given by Mr. Fred Thain, Ruby Cotten and Reginald McCre.

Letters were read by Secretary, Miss McGee from Driver D. Lindsey, formerly employee of Mr. W. McKenzie, now serving in France, acknowledging box of contents sent through the club.

Miss Tillie Cotten gave a mouth organ selection. Mr. Perry Bronson played several violin selections. A box was packed for Pte. Arthur Linn, formerly a school pupil of this section, now fighting in France. Red Cross collection amounted to $1.85. Next meeting will be held at Mr. W. W. Dracup's on September 21st.

Address And Presentation

To Mrs. John C. Wilson, retiring organist of Bethel Church, Rawdon Circuit.

Dear Mrs. Wilson—

In reluctantly granting your earnest request to be relieved from the duties and responsibilities of organist in Bethel Church, we desire in some measure to signify our high appreciation of your faithful and efficient services, in that capacity, rendered this congregation for so many years. And while we are deeply conscious that those services, ever freely bestowed in the spirit of love for the Master, and deep solicitude for the prosperity of Zion, can only be repaid by the hand of Him who hath said, "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give unto every one according as his work shall be." Nevertheless we beg that you kindly accept this Cassiopea, Corn and Brass, which we most cordially present, not in the way of reward, but as a slight token of the high esteem and true regard which your patient and untiring labours have won for you in the love of a grateful people. And most sincerely do we hope that your voice may long mingle with ours in those earthly services through which our hearts become attuned to the melodies of heaven.

Signed on behalf of the Bethel Congregation, August 26th, 1917.

LAURA WALLER,
EVA BROADWORTH.

It is understood that October 1st has been named by the Government as Thanksgiving Day.

A COLONY OF BEES.

Its Members, Their Product and the Heat of a Sting.

A colony of bees in summer consists of from 50,000 to 100,000 individuals. Each colony contains a queen, several hundred drones and the balance workers. The latter are neuter or undeveloped females, and they do all the work of the hive, gather their food from the flowers, which consists of honey and pollen. They also gather propolis, a resinous substance used to stop cracks and holes in the hive.

It is not generally known that honey is not thick and syrupy when first gathered. It is called nectar by beekeepers and looks like water. When first gathered it can be shaken from the combs easily.

Sometimes it is necessary to shake bees from a brood comb, and the bees as they fall are so deluged by the watery nectar that they look like the proverbial "drowned rats." This, however, does no harm, as they at once proceed to clean each other, and when bees clean up they do a good job. I have put out a dish from the table that was washed with honey, and in a very short time it was as clean as a lily.

Many persons are very much afraid of the business end of the bee, and those who are not used to bee stings suffer pain when stung. The sensation of a bee sting can be compared to the prick of a needle point in the flesh, and then try to imagine that while just under the skin the needle is heated white hot and held there for about five minutes. Beekeepers will agree that this statement is not overdrawn. Beekeepers working in the fields every day are seldom stung, as they know the habits of the bees and avoid their stings. In time one becomes more or less immune to the poison.—George Shiber in New York Sun.

Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows.

THE DRUG MENACE.

Society Facing an Exceedingly Dangerous Human Element.

In rigorous effort to suppress the illegal sale and use of habit forming drugs the New York police are now arresting annually about 900 persons and securing 700 convictions. Of those fully 75 per cent. have had previous police records, which include every crime in the statutes. This is an official statement, one of sinister portent. It means that law abiding society is facing a human element new and exceedingly dangerous to the state. In fact, that one of the most important duties of the police lies in stamping out this traffic.

The danger is by no means confined to large cities like New York; it is probably growing in towns and villages all over the country. Police investigations have revealed an appalling increase of drug addicts. More than one-half of those confined in the city prison, the Tombs, were victims. Men and women following virtually every business, grade and profession were included. In school children became addicted to the habit of using these drugs.

It is with full knowledge of such enormities that the police are doing everything possible to stop illegal traffic in drugs. Criminals of this class present a problem even more difficult than the old time bank robber and general crook. The police may arrest 1,000 offenders annually, but the problem will not be solved until boys and girls are taught the terrible results which follow upon the use of habit forming drugs. It is hoped that teachers of physics and general science must lend powerful co-operation.—Century Magazine.

POGGY.

My Poggie is a young thing,
Just entered in his teens,
Bare as the day, and always gay,
Fair as the day, and always gay,
My Poggie is a young thing,
And I'm not very old,
Yet well I like to meet him at
The waiking of the fauld.

My Poggie speaks me sweetly,
Whenever we meet alone,
I wish you were to lay me bare,
I wish you were to lay me bare,
My Poggie speaks me sweetly,
To a luv I'm could,
But also sure a my affluits glow
At waiking of the fauld.

My Poggie smiles me kindly Whenever I whisper love,
That I look down on a' the town,
That I look down on a' the town,
My Poggie smiles me kindly
It makes me blith and bauld,
And nothing gives me sic delight.
As waiking of the fauld.

My Poggie sings me sweetly
When on my pipe I play,
By a' the rest it is confout,
By a' the rest it is confout,
My Poggie sings me sweetly,
And in her songs she fauld
With innocence the wale of sense.
At waiking of the fauld.

Alfred Ramsay.

FREQUENT HEADACHES

People with thin blood are much more subject to headaches than full-blooded persons, and the form of anaemia that afflicts growing girls is almost always accompanied by headaches, together with disturbances of the digestive organs.

When you have constant or recurring headaches and pallor of the face, they show that the blood is thin and your efforts should be directed toward building up your blood.

A fair treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will do this effectively, and the rich, red blood made by these pills will remove the headache.

More disturbances to the health are caused by their blood than most people have any idea of. When your blood is impoverished, the nerves suffer from lack of nourishment and you may be troubled with insomnia, neuritis, neuralgia or sciatica. Muscles subject to strain are under-nourished and you may have muscular rheumatism or lumbago. If your blood is thin and you begin to show symptoms of any of these disorders, try building up the blood with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and as the blood is restored to its normal condition every symptom of the trouble will disappear. There are more people who owe their present state of good health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills than to any other medicine, and most of them do not hesitate to say so.

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

FLAGS OF IRELAND.

Prior to 1798 National Color Was Blue.

The universal belief concerning the flag of Ireland is that it has always been "the harp without the crown" im- posed on a field of green, and that green has from time immemorial been Erin's color.

I venture to say that ninety out of every hundred persons will assert, in answer to a query, that the harp on a green background has constituted Ireland's national design these many centuries, this belief obtaining generally among the Irish themselves.

In opposition to this belief it will appear strange when the asseveration is made that Ireland's national color until something more than a century ago was blue.

It may indeed produce a bit of a shock to many who have been wedded to the notion that "the Emerald Isle," "the shamrock so green," "our green land beyond the sea" and other similar expressions were indissolubly and forever connected with the country's national colors.

But, as a matter of fact, the green flag made its appearance in 1793, the year of the uprising, so that as flags go it is comparatively new. Green, you know, is a blend of the orange and the blue, and it is asserted that the green was adopted in 1798 by the United Irishmen to typify the union of north and south, orange being the color affected in the northern part of Ireland and blue in the southern provinces.

In point of antiquity the real Irish flag is the "spear and serpent," which appears in the arms of the O'Sullivan. It is said to commemorate the incident of Geothla Glas, the ancestor of Mil-

It is, who, tradition says, was cured of a snake bite by the rod of Moses. Next to that comes the flag of Plonk MacCunnally's militia, the golden sun- set on a blue ground, and the weight of opinion among all Irish students of research seems to favor this as the true national flag. Indeed, blue was always Ireland's national color until 1798.

Quite a number of other flags have figured in Irish history, and each of them has its line of enthusiastic supporters. Not the least popular among these is the flag exhibiting three golden crowns imposed on a blue ground, which figures at the present day in the arms of the Province of Munster.

This flag was accepted after the Norman invasion in the year 1170 as the ensign of Ireland, the three crowns representing the kingdoms of Desmond, Ormond and Thomond. It was retained until 1547, when Henry VIII. abolished it and substituted the harp. Coming down to more recent times, it is found that the Parliament of Ireland, of which Henry Grattan was the head, did not recognize green, although it did accept the harp. That parliament's flag was a golden harp on a blue ground.

At the time of the Union with England in 1801 a new flag was evolved apparently for the express purpose of incorporating it with what is now known as the union jack, but it does not seem to have caught the popular fancy any more than the act of union.

This was the red saltire on a white ground, which was christened St. Patrick's cross. Apparently it was taken from the arms of Trinity College at Dublin, though how Dublin came by it is a mystery.

The tricolor of green, white and orange—"The orange and green, with the stripe of peace between"—is the recognized flag of the Irish Nationalists, whose aim is complete independence. James T. Doyle, in Baltimore American.

LATEST PLANES ARE MARVELOUS

Can Do With Ease What Was Impossible.

Powerful Motor, Small Wings, the Secret.

The race for improvements in fighting planes between the allies and the central powers has been nip and tuck all the way, writes Will Irwin in the Saturday Evening Post. Late in 1916 the Germans sprang the first well recognized type of what the British call a scout machine. It was the famous Fokker, an exact copy of the French Morane—a return to the monoplane principle, which had been abandoned early in the war. Being able to fire through a propeller, it had supremacy until the French perfected a similar device.

The French then answered with a biplane of greater speed and greater practical agility. That killed the monoplane idea—at least for the time being. The latest machines are all of the biplane type. The new models have come out so fast that a layman has difficulty in keeping up with them.

Even the fastest, most agile machines of a year ago will be out of date this summer. In July, 1916, in the Verdun sector, I watched a squadron of scout machines maneuvering. They landed themselves like a flock of swallows. Yesterday, at an aviation show near the front, I watched two aviators, but lately sent up from school, go through their morning practice. Travelling across the sky at an incredible speed, they seemed to turn in their own length; they rolled over on their axis as a swimmer rolls over in the water; they flipped their noses downward and dived; they brought themselves to level with a sharp twist.

Compared with these swallow machines I watched last year they seemed like humming birds. For the constructors, in planning this new type of machine, made an accidental discovery: an airplane is a motor on wings.

Increase the spread of its wings in proportion to the power of its motor, and while you add to its stability at a low pace and to its lifting power, you take away from its speed. The art of constructing a fast machine consists largely in giving it the smallest practical wing spread. It is the motor kicking with unaided power against the air, which makes it fly. And this kind of machine, meeting with but little obstruction from its own wings, turned out to have a marvelous agility, a miraculous power of assuming unusual positions and getting itself out of them. Looping the loop, that maneuver over which the pioneer aviators debated for so long a time they dared make the attempt, is possible to one of the big wide-spreading observation machines. It must be done with skill and caution, however, else the aviator may wrench off a wing; further, it must be done slowly. That is about the easiest thing to do with a scout machine of the new fast type: its flip is like the jump of a trout at a fly. You can fly it for several seconds upside down; and you can make it roll over and over, like a dog.

A Painter's Retort.

Shortly after Franz Lenbach had painted the portrait of Emperor William I, a privy counselor called on him to express the Emperor's satisfaction. There was only one criticism to make—would the professor be so kind as to paint more distinctly the buttons on the uniform, which were only indicated vaguely? Lenbach looked at him a moment over his glasses and said, "Look here, Mr. Counselor, I paint heads, not buttons (ich mal' nur kopfe, aber keine knopfe!)" Tell his majesty that!

The Emperor when this answer was brought to him laughed heartily.

SOME EGG LORE.

How to Test, How to Beat, How to Boil.

Are the eggs for which you pay 40 cents better than those which cost 20? Much handling makes eggs dirty. Those direct from the farm are full of life. If you see some of the water of its composition has evaporated through the porous shell, you have a stale egg, and the egg is unfit to eat. To test, put in a deep pan of water. First if the egg floats, it is stale. Second, if it floats in the water, it is stale. Third, if it floats in the water, it is stale. Third, if it floats in the water, it is stale.

This test will make you wish each egg could always be bought by the pound, as in some places, instead of by the dozen.

Because the eggshell is porous and readily absorbs impurities from a dirty shell or from the air, it should always be washed before being used. Second test. Hold egg before a candle or gas jet which is a dark back- ground.

Around the yolk of an egg is a thin tissue, which holds the yolk together. When decomposition occurs the yolk breaks this membrane and becomes mixed with the white. Its hold- ing power is lost, and the strong light the yolk can easily be seen as a large dark spot.

If bad, the yolk has broken its mem- brane and this dark spot cannot be noticed.

There is also a tissue around the white of an egg which, in bending the white stiff, must be broken into infinitesimal pieces before the egg will become light and fluffy.

A few grains of salt dropped into the white before beating will cut down the time of beating.

Table for cooking eggs without keep- ing time or temperature:
Two or three eggs, a pint of boiling wa- ter. Three to five eggs, one and one- half pints of boiling water. Five to eight eggs, a quart.

Put the eggs into the water while it is boiling, and let them sit in the dish away from the fire. Fifteen or twenty minutes will be required to cook the eggs. After that time the water will have reached 100 degrees and will do no cooking, but will keep the eggs warm a long time.

CONTINENT OF MARVELS.

Some of South America's "Great- est in the World."

Bring on the superlatives! We write of South America, the continent where are the world's greatest mount- ain ranges, densest forests and largest rivers.

Just for instance, the Amazon river system has over 50,000 miles of navigable waterway, enough to tie the two loops around our planet. It can be navigated for 2,500 miles by ocean steamer, a greater distance than from New York to Panama.

The Rio de la Plata is 120 miles wide at its mouth.

And notwithstanding all Colonel Roosevelt's discoveries South Amer- ica still has the largest unexplored area of any continent.

Almost everybody knows that Brazil is larger than Europe or the con- tinental United States, but the size of the "little" republics is not so well known. Texas could be lost two in "little" Venezuela and still leave room for Kentucky and Tennessee.

Peru could comfortably swallow California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Arizona, Utah and Idaho.

And it is over 2,000 miles from one end of Chile to the other—almost as far as from New York to Glasgow!

Gold is found in every state of South America, and from Potosi alone the famous "peak of silver" in Bolivia, more than $2,000,000,000 in silver has been mined in the last three centuries.—World Outlook.

Ironing Kills the Germs.

One need not worry about receiving infection in clothes sent to a laundry even though they be washed with those of other families in which there may be infectious diseases. Such, in substance, is a report just issued by the United States public health service after an investigation by M. C. Schroeder and S. G. Southerland of the New York department of health. For whatever disease germs are not killed in the washing will be killed in the ironing. In fact, the ironing kills more germs than the washing.

There is, however, danger in hav- ing clothes washed by a laundress at her own home, for, "owing to the close quarters in which the laundress lives, there is possibility of reinfection of the clean linen if communicable diseases are present among the members of the laundress family."

"Undertakers."

In England in 1614 undertakers were men of influence who undertook for a consideration to get such persons re- turned to Parliament as would prove submissive to the royal will of King James I. The three chief undertakers of 1614 were Lord Bacon, Somerset and Neville. Then there were under- takers in Ireland in 1608. They were English and Scotch colonists sent to North Ireland and were each allotted 2,000 acres of land. They were men of capital and undertook to pay a mark a year for every six acres, and to admit no recusant for tenants; hence the name as applied to them. But whether the histories nor the dictio- naries give any reason for calling the men who bury our dead undertakers.

THE STATELY ELK.

It is the Most Beautiful of Our Re- maining Wild Animals.

Now that the buffalo survives only in a few preserves it is the most interesting as it is the most beautiful of our remaining wild animals. In this day of Americanism it would be a fine thing if this typical American animal should come to be known by his Indian name of wapiti. The wapiti is the largest of the red deer family and closely resembles his smaller brother, the European stag. The wapiti is not properly an elk, as the European stag is more closely allied to the American moose.

The wapiti is now numerous only in the states of Wyoming, Idaho and Montana, though nearly 4,000 head are thought to remain in Colorado, and considerable numbers are scattered through western Canada. The Cam- pfire Club of America and other organizations and individuals are working for its preservation. The favorite home of the elk is the Yellowstone National park, where he has no rifle to fear and where cougars, coyotes and timber wolves are kept under control. In the park and its vicinity are probably 50,000 head, distributed in two main herds.

During the summer months the elk live high up in the mountains, generally at an elevation of 8,000 to 11,000 feet. The grassy plateaus offer an ideal summer range. Even on the wooded slopes of the high mountains there are parklike glades where the elk feed in the afternoons come out to feed. It is difficult to imagine a more beautiful sight than is then afforded by these stately and graceful animals. Although their number in the park may sometimes reach as high as 60,000 head, it is rare for visitors to see a single specimen. Visitors are taken in stages around a regular route arranged for viewing the natural phenomena of that great outdoor museum.

The elk dislike to be pursued by tourists with cameras and keep away from the stage routes. If visitors would leave the highways of the park and seek out its byways, either on foot or by pack and saddle trips, they would have a marvelous opportunity to study the great elk, which survives of our mountain wild life—not only the elk, but mountain sheep, deer, beaver and many other animals.

The manufacturing capital of the Southern States is nearly 60 per cent. of that of the entire country in 1899.

The world's consumption of cotton last year amounted to 24,500,000 bales at 500 pounds to the bale.

It has been computed that 25,000 vehicles pass Forty-second street and Fifth avenue, New York, each day.

According to data compiled from various sources by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, the number of strikes and lockouts during the year of 1916 was 3,323, as compared with 1,229 in 1915.

Apart from thousands of lives de- stroyed by fire, the United States sus- tains an annual loss from this cause of at least $300,000,000; a per capita loss nearly ten times as great as that found in the leading countries of Europe.

"BELA"

CHAPTER I.

From within the tepee of Charley Whitefish issued the sounds of a faintly bawled. It was of frequent occurrence in this tepee. Men at the doors of other lodges, engaged in cleaning of their guns, or in other light occupations suitable to the many dignity, shrugged with strong scorn for the man who could not keep his women in order. With the deigns went warning glances toward their own laborious spouses.

Each man's scorn might well have been migrated with thankfulness that he was not cursed with a daughter like Charley's Bela. Bela was a firebrand in the village. Some said she was possessed of a devil; according to others she was a girl born with the heart of a man.

This phenomenon was unique in their experience. And being a simple folk they resented it. Bela refused to accept the common lot of women. It was not enough for her that such and such a thing had always been so in the tribe.

She would not do a woman's tasks (unless she happened to feel like it); she would not hold her tongue in the presence of men. Indeed, she had been known to talk back to the head man himself, and she had had the last word into the bargain.

Not content with her own misbehavior, Bela lost no opportunity of giving at the other women, the hard-working girls, the silent, patient squaws, for submitting to their fathers, brothers and husbands. This naturally enraged all the men.

Charley Whitefish was violently obnoxious to the subject, but he was a poor-spirited creature who dared not take a stick to Bela. It must be said that Bela did not get much sympathy from the women. Most of them hated her with an astonishing bitterness.

As Neenah, loomiam's wife, explained it to Elip Moosa, a visitor in camp: "That girl Bela, she is wild, crazy, I think. She got a bad eye. Her eye dry up when she look. You can't say nothing at all. Her tongue is like a dog-whip. I hate her. I scare for my children when she come around. I think maybe she steal my baby. Because they say wet-its got drink a baby's blood to melt the ice in their brains. I wish she go away. We have no peace here till she go."

"Dow the river they say Bela a very pretty girl," remarked Belip.

"Yah! What good is pretty if you crazy in the head!" retorted Neenah. "She twenty years old and got no husband. Now she never get no husband, because everybody on the lake know she crazy. Two, three years ago many young men come after her. They like her because she light-colored, and got red in her cheeks. Me, I think she ugly like the grass that grows under a log. Many young men come, I tell you, but Bela spit on them and call fools. She think she better than anybody."

"Last fall Charley go up to the head of the lake and say all around what a fine girl he got. There was a young man from the Spirit River country, he say he take her. He come so far he not hear she crazy. Give Charley a horse to bind the bargain. So they come back together. It was a strong young man, and the son of a chief. He wear gold-embroidered vest, and doeskin moccasins, worked with red and blue silk. He is call Beavertail."

"He glad when he see Bela's pale forehead and red cheeks. Men are like that. Nobody here tell him she crazy because all want him take her away. So he speak very nice to her. She show him her teeth back, and speak ugly. She not so shame at all for a woman. She say: 'You think you're a man, eh? I can run faster than you. I can paddle a canoe faster than you. I can shoot straighter than you! Did you ever hear anything like that?'

"By and by Beavertail is mad, and he say he race her with canoe. Everybody go to the lake to see. They want Beavertail to beat her good. The men make bets. They start up by Big Stone Point and paddle to the river. It was like queen's birthday at the settlement. They come down side by side till almost there. Then Bela push ahead. Wa! she beat him easy. She got no sense."

"After, when he come along, she push him canoe with her paddle and turn him in the water. She laugh and paddle away. The men not go pull Beavertail out. That night he steal his horse back from Charley and ride home."

"Everybody tell the story round the lake. She say get a husband now. We never get rid of her, maybe. She is proud, too. She wash herself and comb her hair all the time. Foolishness. Treat us like dirt. She is crazy. We hate her."

Such was the conventional estimate of Bela. In the whole camp this morning, at the sounds of strife issuing from her father's tepee, the only head that was turned with a look of compassion for her was that of old Musquosiss the hunchback.

His tepee was beside the river, a little removed from the others. He sat at the door, sunning himself, smoking, meditating, looking for all the world like a little old wrinkled muskrat squatting on his haunches.

It had not been for Musquosiss, Bela's lot in the world would long ago have become unbearable. Musquosiss was her friend, and he was a person of consequence. The position of his tepee suggested his social status. He was so old all his relations were dead. He remained with the Fish-Enterers because he loved the lake, and could not be happy away from it. For their part they were glad to have him stay; he brought credit to the tribe.

As one marked by God and gifted with superior wisdom, the people were inclined to venerate Musquosiss even to the point of according him supernatural attributes. Musquosiss laughed at their superstitions, and refused to profit by them. This they were unable to understand; was it not bad for business?

But while they resented his laughter, they did not cease to be secretly in awe of him, and ordered Bela to seek his advice. When they came to him Musquosiss offered them sound sense without any supernatural admixture.

In earlier days Musquosiss had journeyed for a while in Prince George, the town of the white man, and there he had picked up much of the white man's strange lore. This he had imparted to Bela—that was why she was crazy, they said.

He had taught Bela to wink Engish. Bela's first-hand observations of the great white race had been limited to half a score of individuals—priests, policemen and traders.

The row in Charley's tepee had started early that morning. Charley, bringing in a couple of skunks from his trap, ordered Bela to skin them and stretch the pelts. She had refused point blank, giving as her reason in the first place that she wanted to go fishing; in the second place, that she didn't like the smell.

Both reasons seemed preposterous to Charley. It was for men to fish while women worked on shore. As for a smell, whoever heard of anybody objecting to such a thing? Wasn't the village full of smells?

Nevertheless, Bela had gone fishing. Bela was a duck for water. Since no one would give her a boat, she had traveled twenty miles on her own account to find a suitable cottonwood tree, and had then cut it down unaided, hollowed, shaped and scraped it, and finally brought it home as good a boat as any in the camp.

Since that time, early and late, the lake had been her favorite haunt. Caribou Lake enjoys an unenviable reputation for weather; Bela thought nothing of crossing the ten miles in any stress.

When she returned from fishing, the skunks were still there, and the quarrel had recommenced. The result was no different. Charley finally issued out of the tepee beaten, and the little carcasses flew out of the door after him, propelled by a vigorous foot. Charley, swinging abroad as a man does who has just been worsted, sought his mates for sympathy.

He took his way to the river bank in the middle of the camp, where a number of the young men were making or repairing boats for the summer fishing just now beginning. They had heard all that had passed in the tepee and while affecting to pay no attention to Charley, were primed for him—showing that men in a crowd are much the same white or red.

Charley was a skinny, anxious-looking little man, withered and blackened as last year's leaves by the winter. His self-conscious braggadocio invited derision.

"Hu!!" cried one. "Here comes woman-Charley. Driven out by the man of the tepee!"

A great laugh greeted this snail. The soul of the little man writhed inside him.

"Did she lay a stick to your back, Charley?"

"She gave him no breakfast till he bring wood."

"Hey, Charley, get a petticoat to cover your legs. My woman maybe give you her old one."

He sat down among them, grinning as a man might grin on the rack. He filled his pipe with a nonchalant air, belied by his shaking hand, and sought to brave it out. They had no mercy on him. They teased each other in outrageous chaffing. Suddenly he turned on them shrilly, "You quiet. Grave rubbish. May you be cursed with a woman-doll like I am. Then we'll see!"

This was what they desired. They stopped work and rolled on the ground in their laughter. They were stimulated to the highest flights of wit. Charley walked away to the river bank and hid himself in the bush. These brutal taunts and buffoonery on his women until all the world turned red before his eyes. For some that thought of a girl had made him a laughing stock. This was none of his blood. He would stand it no longer.

The upshot of all this buffoonery was that he cut himself a staff of willow two fingers thick, and carrying it as inconspicuously as possible, crept back to the village. At the door of his tepee he picked up the two little carcasses and entered. He had avoided the river bank, but they saw him, and saw the stick, and drew near to witness the task.

Within the circle of the tepee Charley's wife, Losels, was mixing dough in a pan. Opposite her, cilla, the cause of all the trouble, knelt on the ground carefully filling the points of her fish-baskets. Fish-hooks were hard to come by.

Charley stopped within the entrance, glaring at her. Bela, looking up, instantly divined from his bloodshot eyes and from the hand he kept behind him, what was in store. Coolly putting her tackle behind her, she rose.

She was taller than her supposed father, full-bodied and round-shouldered as a sculptor's ideal. In a community of waistless, neckless women she was as slender as a young tree, and held her head like a swan.

She kept her mouth close shut like a hardy boy, and her eyes gleamed with a fire of resolution which no other pair of eyes in the camp could match. It was to the point of conscious superiority of her glance that she was hated. One from the outside would have remarked quickly how different she was from the others, but these were thoughtful, mongrel people.

Charley flung the little beasts at her feet. "Skin them," he said, thickly. "Now."

She said nothing—words were a waste of time, but watched warily for his first move.

He repeated his command. Bela saw the end of the stick and smiled. Charley glared at her with a small, of rage, brandishing the stick. She nimbly evaded the blow. From the ground the wife and mother watched motionless with wide eyes.

Bela, laughing, ran in and seized the stick as he attempted to raise it again. To the point of conscious superiority of her glance that she was hated. One from the outside would have remarked quickly how different she was from the others, but these were thoughtful, mongrel people.

I have another husband before that." "Why you never tell me?" murmured Bela, amazed. "So long ago!" Losels replied, with a shrug. "What's the use?"

Bela's tears were ineffectually called in. "Tell me, what kind of man my father?" she eagerly demanded. "He was a white man."

"A white man!" repeated Bela, staring. "There was a white man in the tepee while I sunk in. A deep rose mantled the girl's cheeks. 'What he called?' she asked. 'Walter Forest.' On the Indian woman's tongue it was 'loosater.' 'Real white!' demanded Bela. 'His skin white as a dog's tooth,' answered Losels, 'his hair bright like the sun.' A gleam in the dull eyes she said this, suggested that the stolid squaw was human, too.

"Was he good to you?" "He was good to me. Not like Indian husband. He like me dress up fine. All the time laugh and make jokes. He call me 'Tagger-Loolee.' 'Did he go away?'"

"Losels shook her head. 'Go through the ice with his team.' 'Under the water—my father,' murmured Bela, with a deep excitement. She turned on her mother accusingly. "You have good white husband, and you take Charley after!"

"My mother make me," Losels said, with sad stolidity. Bela wondered on these matters, filled with a deep excitement. Her mother kneaded the dough. "I half a white woman," the girl murmured at last, more to herself than the other. "That is why I strange here."

Again her mother looked at her intently, presaging another disclosure. "Me, my father a white man, too," she said in her abrupt way. "It is forgotten now."

Bela stared at her mother, breathing quickly. "Then I most white!" she whispered, with amazed and brightening eyes. "Now I understand my heart!" she suddenly cried aloud. "Always I love the white people, but I not know. I ask Musquosiss, he me what they do. I love them because they live nice. They not piss like these people. They are my people! All is clear to me!" She rose.

"What you do?" asked Losels, anxiously. "I will go to my people!" cried Bela, looking away as if she envisaged the whole white race. The Indian mother raised her eyes in a swift glance of passionate supplication—but her lips were tight. Bela did not see the look.

"I go talk to Musquosiss," she said. "He tell me all to do." CHAPTER II.

The village of the Fish-Eaters was built in a narrow meadow between a pine grove and the little river. It was a small village of a dozen tepees set up in rough semicircle open to the stream.

This stream (Hah-Wah-Sept) they call it (came down from Jack-Knife Mountains to the north, and after passing the village, rounded a point of the pines, traversed a wide sand-bar and was received into Caribou Lake.

The opposite bank was heavily fringed with willows. Thus the village was snugly hidden between the pines and the willows, and one might have sailed up and down the lake a dozen times without suspecting its existence. In this the Indians followed their ancient instinct. For generations there had been no enemies to hide from.

It was at the end of May; the meadow was like a rug of rich emerald velvet, and the willows were freshly decked in their pale leafage. The whole scene was mantled with the exquisite radiance of the northern summer sun. Children and dogs loafed and rolled in aimless ecstasy, and the old people sat at the tepee openings blinking comfortably.

The conical tepees themselves each with its bundle of sticks at the top and its thread of smoke made no inharmonious note in the scene of nature. Only upon close look was the loveliness a little marred by evidences of the Fish-Eaters' careless housekeeping.

Musquosiss' lodge stood by itself outside the semicircle and a little down stream. The owner was still sitting at the door, an odd little bundle in a bundle of sticks, as he approached.

"You know everything," stated Bela, shrilly. He shrugged. "I just quit and my thoughts speak to me." He dropped the bundle on the ground before him, and rested a minute on his hands. "Without any preamble, should I say?" "My father a white man," Musquosiss betrayed no surprise. "I know that," he replied.

"My mother, father, he white man, too," she went on. He nodded. "Why you never tell me?" she asked, frowning slightly. "I thought you would know," he said. "What's the use? You want to go. Got no place to go. Too much young to go. I think you feel bad if I tell."

She shook her head. "Make me feel good. I know what's the matter with me now. I understand all I was mad for cause I think I got poor miserable father and Charley."

HERBERT C. HOOVER.

Tabloid Biography of the U. S. Food Law Administrator.

Herbert Clark Hoover: Born West Branch, Ia., August 10, 1874. Quaker parents. After death of parents in 1885 sent to Oregon in charge of relatives, residing at Newberg and Salem, Ore., until 1891. Became self-supporting at 13 years of age. Went to Stanford University, California, 1891, graduating 1895 as mining engineer. Employed professionally in New Mexico, Colorado, California and Oregon until 1897, part time with United States Geological survey. In 1897 went to Australia in administrative metallurgical work and mining.

Returned to California in 1899. After few months left for China as an engineering adviser to the Chinese Government. Returned to California, 1900, after outbreak of Boxer rebellion. After a few months left California again for China as manager of industrial works, comprising coal mines and railways, fleet of 20 ships, canals, railroads, 25,000 people. Returned to California in 1901.

Thereafter opened offices in San Francisco, New York and London, visiting all points annually. Employed in administration of large industrial works, embracing railways, metallurgical work, mining, iron and steel, shipping, land and electrical enterprises in California, Colorado, Alaska, Mexico, India, Russia and China, until the war broke out in 1914. Was a trustee of Stanford University, California, and spent much time there, 1901-1914, in affairs of that institution and on conduct of business in that state. Went to London just before war broke out. When the war broke out became engaged in the organization of return of stranded Americans. In October, 1914, organized commission for relief in Belgium, and remained in Europe during the war, with the exception of a return to the United States in the fall of 1915 and the winter of 1917.

The commission for relief of Belgium from October, 1914, until April, 1917, had the import of upwards of 100,000,000 bushels of wheat, rice, beans, peas and other cereals, together with many thousands of tons of meat products; operating its own fleet of from 50 to 70 ships, its own mills, and in addition thereto acquired and redistributed cereals and several other staples in the occupied territory involving between 30,000,000 and 40,000,000 bushels of other cereals and large quantities of meats, etc. The commission for relief in Belgium organized and distributed a ration to 10,000,000 people, directly employing upward of 125,000 people in its operations. The personnel was in a great majority volunteer, and the total overhead expenses of the commission up to April, 1917, were three-eighths of one per cent. The aggregate amount of money expended in imported foodstuffs and through the organization in the purchase of native food supplies was approximately $500,000,000.

Slipper Day in Holland.

There is a curious festival called slipper day celebrated in Holland. Slipper day in the Netherlands is the one day in the year in which the Dutchwoman claims superiority over her husband. On that day she rules him to her heart's content, and he generally obeys good humoredly enough, in that, unless she is one of those ladies not unknown in Holland and in any other country who aspire to complete rule over their unhappy partners throughout the year.

In its cheeres, now practically unobtainable, Switzerland has a first-class annual for bargaining—Springfield Republic.

Do not think that you can approach a man's heart by treading on his toes.—Youth's Companion.

SAVE THE CHILDREN

Mothers who want a sure way of baby's own Tablets in the case of any illness that arises during the hot weather, when children are most liable to suffer from indigestion, and when the mother is most likely to be away from home, do not have any medicine at hand to give promptly. Baby's own Tablets, sure from the first, will prevent their coming on. They are guaranteed by a government analyst to be absolutely harmless even to the newborn babe. They are especially good in summer, when the stomach is weak, and keep the bowels sweet and pure. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

AMRITSAR.

Religious Centre of the Sikh Race, is Interesting.

The city of Amritsar, in British India, is the religious centre of the Sikh race, and as such it enjoys a high degree of interest and distinction. The Sikhs are known all over the British empire, as the last of the native Indian fighting men, who have done loyal service on every battlefield where England has called on her native troops, and they are immensely proud of their record and their fighting ability. They are perhaps the most militant creed and people in the world.

The city of Amritsar was built by the Sikhs, to serve as headquarters of their church. The name itself signifies "The Pool of Immortality," in reference to the great tank in the center of the town. In this tank is an island and on the island stands the Golden Temple of Amritsar, which is to the Sikh what Solomon's temple was to the ancient Jews, and what the Tomb of the Prophet is to the Mohammedan fanatics. The Golden Temple is so-called because of its burnished copper dome, that gleams with a dull flame in the fierce Indian sun. Beneath it, the holy men or gurus of the Sikhs, expound the sacred books. These gurus are old men, and the fighting Sikh save them all devotion, but his real veneration is for the sword.

The origin of the Sikhs is a good indication of the kind of men they are. The creed had its birth in comparatively recent times, when the Punjab was chafing under the heavy heat of the Mogul conquerors. A certain man of pugnacious temper grew weary of the oppression, and decided to raise a small band to fight for freedom. He drew his sword and stood shouting in the market place, calling for volunteers. The people thought he was mad, and feared him, but at last another fighting man, tired of servitude, volunteered.

The first man concealed himself in a secret place, and returned to the market place, after smearing himself with the fresh blood of a sheep. Again he called for volunteers, but the people thought he had killed the first one, and fled. But he was another volunteer. Again he concealed himself, again he smeared himself with blood, again he called for recruits. By this system, he only got those who thought they were going to certain death, and did not fear it. When he had collected a dozen men by this system, he put himself at their head and they set forth to rout the Mogul oppressors.

Thus the Sikhs had their origin in battle, and it battle they have maintained themselves ever since. They furnish to-day some of the most loyal troops in the British empire.

Coin Profiles.

Where a face is used on a piece of money it is always in profile, because the cameo is more readily struck in that manner, and with the full three-quarter face were represented the nose of the gentleman or lady would get damaged in circulation and produce a ridiculous effect.

FOUR-IN-HAND TIES.

An Easy Way to Iron Them After They Have Been Washed.

It is not an impossible task to wash a four-in-hand tie. The difficulty comes in ironing it in a way that its original shape will be restored. Write Emily Parent in the Popular Science Monthly.

To do this it is necessary to proceed carefully. Start by placing the wide end of the tie upon the board with the seam up, then thrust in the finger and take hold of the lining. Grasp the silk cover from over the lining and pull it over half of its length. Then with a hot iron run over the lining to straighten it out.

Put a piece of stiff cardboard to fit into the wide end of the tie and iron enough to reach to the narrow band. The tie in between the lining and the Slip tie in the outer layer. Then turn the material back in proper shape, dampen a clean cloth, lay it over the tie and iron in the usual way.

The cardboard form will prevent the pressure of the iron from causing a kink opposite the seam. When through put the form aside for another use.

Point of the Cape of Good Hope.

Cape point, which terminates the mighty headland known as the Cape of Good Hope, consists of a towering promontory of sandstone, which rises from the sea to an altitude of 810 feet. At the base of this stands a big solitary column which is known as Vasco da Gama's pillar. The lighthouse which here illuminates the meeting place of the Atlantic and Indian oceans is one of the most important and most useful of its kind. It is visible from a distance of thirty-six miles. The cliff scenery is wild and sublime, the rocks are magnificent, and the far-reaching sea, with the fierce surf beating on the iron bound coast, is impressive. In the water directly beneath the cliff sharks are abundant.

Ancients Used Few Adjectives.

The plethora of adjectives in modern literature contrasts with the abstemiousness of the ancients in this respect. A contributor to the Italian review, Minerva, with true to nature, has made a count of substantives and adjectives in the works of Vergil, Dante and Leonardo. In the second book of the "Aeneid," which contains the fall of Troy, there are 1,637 nouns and 580 adjectives. In Dante's "Divina Commedia," out of the 6,215 adjectives which it contains only seventeen are in the superlative. These are facts from which the tyro in literature may well draw a moral.—Christian Science Monitor.

SAGE TEA BEAUTIFIES AND DARKENS HAIR

Don't Stay Gray! It Darkens So Naturally that Nobody can Tell.

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost overnight if you'll get a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old famous Sage Tea Recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray or becoming faded have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

This preparation is a toilet requisite and is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Rural School Fall Fair Patriotic Fund

From the sale of Patriotic Buttons, etc., at the Rural School Fall Fairs last year there was a total net receipt of $2,689.27, of which $200.00 was spent for a motor bus to carry returned soldiers to and from convalescent hospitals to Vocational Training Schools, Hart House University of Toronto, Toronto; and $300.00 given to the Soldier's Aid Commission to assist soldiers' widows and orphans; the balance being carried over to this year.

Card of Thanks

Words entirely fail us to express our deep gratitude for the many expressions of sympathy and helpfulness shown by our friends and neighbors in the bereavement of our dear child. Her great aim in this life was to provoke those with whom she associated to love and good works, and it will be a deep joy to her in "the world to come wherein dwelleth righteousness" to know that her illness, so patiently borne, and death were the means of kindling such a flame of love, and gentle and kindly feelings.

Vision Your Sons, Mothers of Canada!

Vision them at early morning when through the rising mists, there bursts a hurricane of fire---

See your valiant boys---calm, grim, but cheerful, "stand-to-arms" until the Hun's "morning hate" dies away.

Picture them at breakfast, the meal that must bring them the bodily sustenance to carry them through the strain of another day.

Then think what might happen if, one morning, there was no breakfast ---no food, and word went down the lines that Canada had failed them.

Vision all these things, and then---as Women of Canada---Mothers of Men---Answer this Call to Service.

Canada must send to Her Own, and to the Allies Fighting Forces, more wheat, more beef, more bacon, and more of such other foods as are non-perishable and easily exported.

They Must Be Fed

Statistics show that, everyday, in Canada, sufficient food is thrown into garbage cans to feed the entire Canadian Overseas Army.

Travellers have often remarked that many a European family would live well upon the quantity and quality of food wasted in some Canadian homes.

Such waste is shameful at any time; but in these times it is criminal.

Sign The Food Service Pledge

Our only hope is that with these truths before you, and in view of the vital issues at stake, we may count upon your earnest co-operation in stopping this appalling waste; and in substituting other foods for the wheat, beef and bacon that must be sent overseas.

Next week a Food Service Pledge and Window Card will be delivered to you. It is your Dedication to War Service. The Window Card is your Emblem of Honour.

Clever Ideas in AUTUMN MILLINERY!

That will appeal to the Women who desire to be smartly dressed.

The Formal Opening Days truly revealed the fact that our Millinery Artists were not stinting in their efforts to place on show the most attractive assemblage of Smart Hats that we have ever gathered together. Of course New York and other leading Fashion Centres have assisted to this end by sending scores of advanced models that created much favorable comment by the women who appreciate exclusiveness and bewitching style lines in every detail. There is a model here that was designed especially for you and our salesladies will welcome an opportunity to show you.

Ladies' and Misses' FALL SUITS

Champion Fisherman

Mr. H. J. Clark, of Tweed, is the champion fisherman of the season, the honor having fallen to him on Friday afternoon when he landed a 30-pound "mascot". It was certainly a beauty, measuring 4 feet 2 inches from tip to tip, and 20 inches girth. Mr. Clark was alone and it took him about half an hour to land the monster. Evidently encouraged by the achievement of Friday, Mr. Clark wended his way to Stoco Lake again on Tuesday evening and the result was that he exceeded his previous good luck by landing another "mascot" which tipped the beam at 31 pounds. It measured 4 feet 1 inch from tip to tip, and 22 inches girth. —Ontario.

Interesting Letter from Rev. G. E. Simmons

Kaifeng, June 14, 1917

Dear Friends All:

My time has been so fully occupied during school term that I have been unable to write as I would have wished to do concerning our work, but now that we have been forced to discontinue our school on account of the new political troubles threatening China, I take much pleasure in submitting the information required, and in this letter would like to give you some record of the interesting features of the term so summarily closed.

First however let me tell you more explicitly than you will be able to glean from telegrams, about the events that have closed a number of schools and reduced to half, the attendance of others in the city. For two months there had been a deadlock between the Premier, T'wan Chi Jwei, and Parliament evidently because the latter, in which there is a majority of the Kuoh Ming Tang (the Republican party of Sun Yet Sen led by the Cantonese) thought that T'wan's military measures against Germany were carried out under his leadership he would become too powerful. This party protested that it was not opposed to declaring war on Germany, but that it would not permit a division on the question till the Cabinet, whose members had nearly all resigned, was reconstructed under another Premier, T'wan who has also held the portfolio of Minister of War, backed by the Military governors of most of the Provinces refused to give in to his enemies, and so the President, Li Yuan Hong, dismissed him, unofficially it is claimed, as Parliament should have been dissolved in the crisis.

The result is that the Tu Chuns, or Military Governors of nearly all of the Provinces have declared the Independence of their respective Provinces, and armies are said to be enroute for Peking. This time Honan is not a day behind the others in following the lead of Anhwei in revolt. On May 31st, both Civil and Military Governors issued a proclamation to the effect that they had sent telegrams to Peking calling on the President to dismiss Parliament, and recall Premier T'wan to office, and all would be well. Incidentally it may be noted that these Tu Chuns are T'wan's own appointees, and they may have feared dismissal too. The railroads leading to Peking have been seized by the Provinces and soldiers are pouring into this city and congregating at Cheng Chow, but of much news on the situation we are ignorant. There is however always the well assured inference that in times such as this, robber bands will rapidly spring into being in places where soldiers are not, and it was the fear of home-going over lonely roads that sent most of our boys hurrying away home, when trouble became assured. A letter from Mr. Trivett just received informs us that the official in Kweteh is very fearful of the safety of his prefecture.

And now what has been accomplished during the term? From various causes the registration was at a very low ebb at the end of the last school year, and my annual letter home to the Board expressed the fear that we could not add largely to our existing members. We were therefore agreeably surprised to be able to open school in February with sixty boys, among whom were several boys who had previously left us to go to other schools, and sixteen boys all new material. I account for this increase from the fact that together with stiffening up in discipline, I had raised the standard of our curriculum so as to gain recognition by and affiliation with St. John's College in Shanghai, and Boone University in Wuchang. Our graduating students will now be received in either of these institutions without re-examination. Further, Boone has agreed to receive our students on a preferential scale of charges equivalent to their own most favoured class of students. From this generous offer and from the continued support of kind friends and Sunday Schoolers, home I have been able to offer a scholarship for one student proceeding to Boone.

Of academic results for the term I can not speak as our term examination must now be carried over to September. Our work has in the main been good as judged from our monthly examinations. Our present Chinese staff is a strong one and bids fair to be permanent, though so far our Chinese results have left much to be desired, as our boys persistently give their best effort to the English end of the curriculum. On Mr. Williams departure for Canada I had no option but to add one extra man to the English staff. The Bishop has generously given sixteen hours a week pending the return of Rev. G. N. Smith from Peking, which will be for the Autumn term.

The Spiritual tone of the school is distinctly good, and in this we have results that call for profound gratitude to God, especially when we recall the opposition of the years gone by. At the close of the last school year there were thirteen confirmed boys and two baptised boys with thirteen catechumens in the school. Shortly after our Spring re-opening our boys had the privilege of listening to several Life-decision addresses by the Rev. Ding Li Mei of nation wide repute in China. It has been my duty to give nearly all of the religious instruction since my return and for the weeks immediately succeeding Mr. Ding's talks I very continuously and definitely referred to his teaching with the definite view of preparing for decisions. At the end of a period, announced from the first, twenty two boys signed cards, similar to those used in our special Evangelistic Campaign early in the year promising to study the Bible persistently and carefully and to regulate their lives according to the true principles therein outlined.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 20, 1917

Letter from Rev. Geo. Simmons

At the end of April, after a week's special addresses, I made another appeal to this group of boys to again consider the spiritual problem in the light of their study and experience. This appeal was for them to become Catechumens, and on Sunday May 20th nineteen boys publicly promised to renounce all connection with idol worship of all kinds, and to submit to Christian regulation and teaching with a view to Baptism. Among this group were two whom I wish specially to mention—Wang Ping San and Wang En Yung.

The former of these boys is a very earnest student of exemplary life whom for years I have coveted for Christ. I taught him his first English lessons. Before coming to the "Christian's school" however he entered a compact with other boys from his own county on no account to become a Christian. The other boys have since gone from into higher schools Peking, and Ping San is a member of our High school grade. When I called for candidates for the Catechumens he came forward and professed his willingness. En Yung has been a scoffer for several years, many times have I seen a sneer on his face as I preached of Jesus and his Life and Love, and Power to save; he too came willingly and again I thank God for the working of His power in breaking barriers down.

Last Sunday was to have been one of our Banner Sundays of the year for the Catechumens who had been preparing for over a year were to be Baptised. Sickened had taken some of our boys away from school and nine of the remaining ones had been selected but May 31st, brought our "Declaration of Independence"; and the breaking up of our school followed. On the evening of June 1st a group of these boys who were to leave for their (perhaps dangerous) journey to distant homes, came to me and asked to be Baptised before their train started next day. At seven o'clock we assembled in the School Chapel for Morning Service and these nine boys and their sponsors (from among the Catechumens) in the presence of the school group, and Masters, took upon themselves the solemn vows of the impressive Baptismal Service, and became reborn into Christ.

Necessary Farm Equipment

MORE and more the Ford car is looked upon by progressive farmers as necessary farm equipment, the same as the plow, the hay-rake, the drill, the mower, the harrow and other labor and time-saving machinery.

A farmer with a Ford car can dispense with one or two of his horses and make the trips to town, railway station, creamery, or to the neighbours in one-third the time. In fact there is no farm machine made that will save the busy farmer and his busy wife so much valuable time as a Ford. And it's so easy to take care of—far easier than a horse. No bed to make, or hay and oats to get, no harnessing and unharnessing, and no stables to clean. The Ford practically takes care of itself.

Ask any farmer who owns a Ford if he would ever again try to get along without it. His answer will hasten your decision to own one.

BELLVIEW

The annual Thanksgiving Service will be held in St. Marks Church on Sunday next September 23rd at 7.30 p.m.

Quite a few from this vicinity attended the township Convention of the Ontario Sunday School Association held in Cannel Methodist Church on Friday last. Miss Florence McKean, Miss May Fern and Miss Annie Bell who were delegates from St. Marks S. S. gave excellent reports of the convention on Sunday last.

A number of airplanes passed over this place on Wednesday of last week going north.

A still larger number attended the camp meetings at Ivanhoe on Sunday last, some taking the whole day for it.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION

On Thursday September 6th, a very pleasant evening was spent by the parishioners of St. Marks, St. Thomas and St. Lawrence Anglican churches of Rawdon when they gathered at the Foresters Hall Spring Brook to welcome their Rector, Rev. S. E. Morton and Mrs. Morton, who arrived that evening from their wedding tour.

The reception was to have been at the Rectory but owing to the serious illness of one of Mr. Morton's closest neighbors it was thought advisable to hold it farther away.

Mr. N. R. Stout, who was appointed chairman read an address of welcome and good wishes to Mr. and Mrs. Morton and they were presented with a generous purse of money from St. Marks Church, a handsome parlor cabinet, parlor table and picture from St. Thomas Church, and a beautiful cut glass bowl from St. Lawrence Church.

Mr. Morton thanked the parishioners and friends on behalf of himself and Mrs. Morton for the gifts he had received and the kindness shown, and extended to all a hearty invitation to visit them at the rectory.

Music was provided by the Victoria and the ladies served sandwiches, coffee, cake and ice-cream.

Address and Presentation

The following which is taken from a Saskatchewan paper (The Capar Herald) will be read with interest by the many friends of Mr. Earl S. Scott in Stirling and vicinity.

It will be remembered that he was formerly in the Union Bank in this place and was some six years ago transferred to the Capar Branch where he remained until his recent transfer to Saskatoon.

FAREWELL TO E. S. SCOTT

A large number of the members and adherents of the Methodist Church met in the church on Friday evening, June 1st, to bid farewell to Mr. E. S. Scott, prior to his departure for Saskatoon. Mr. Scott was presented with a handsome set of military brushes in leather case, by the members of the young men's class and the choir of the church, as a slight token of their esteem. The presentation was accompanied by the following address:

Capar, Saskatchewan
June 1st, 1917

To Mr. E. S. Scott:

The news of your promotion and consequent removal from our midst has aroused within us mingled feelings of regret and joy; regret that we are to lose from our association one who has woven his life into ours by force of character and sterling worth, endearing yourself to us in so many ways; and joy that the institution you are identified with has recognized your merit by placing you in a more responsible position and opening for you larger opportunities of success and usefulness. In this we congratulate you and wish you every success consistent with honest endeavour which we know you will ever maintain.

Mr. Scott, the community owes you an expression of appreciation. During your sojourn with us you have actively and effectively identified yourself with every literary, social and philanthropic organisation of the community, you have ever been ready to place at the disposal of others your talents, and you have been equal to every task made upon your strength and ability. The choir has been indebted to you; the young men's class and the S. School have utilized your resourcefulness; the official board has felt your value as a member, as have also fraternal and sporting circles, who have found in you an untiring worker and a faithful friend.

This little token of our appreciation does not express our feelings but may serve to remind you that you will not be forgotten and that we hold in our hearts a very warm place for you.

We wish you success and God's blessing and fellowship.

On behalf of the young men's class and the choir of this church.

J. N. Wiley,
N. W. Roberts,
Geo. C. Speers.

In loving memory of Jesse Neal of Bellevue who departed this life September 30th, 1915.

We loved him, yes we loved him,
But Jesus loved him more,
And He has gently called him,
To yonder shining shore.
The golden gates were open,
A gentle voice said, "Come"
And with farewell unspoken,
He calmly entered home.

Death of Andrew Haggerty

Mr. Andrew Haggerty, of Stony Beach was taken suddenly ill on Wednesday, September 5th, and died of heart failure a few hours later. Mr. Haggerty was 68 years of age and was in good health up till the time of his death. He was present helping at the barn raising a few days ago. He was one of the old timers of this district and arrived along with the late Robert Porter from the east twenty-eight years ago. Mr. Haggerty was born near Belleville, Ont., from where he moved to London, Ont., and was married to Miss Marshman of that city. They have a family of six boys and three girls, who are all married except Norman, the youngest member of the family. Three brothers and one sister still survive Mr. Haggerty. They are all in Ontario. Mr. Haggerty was a prominent Oddfellow and was highly respected by everyone who knew him. His loss will be keenly felt by the widow and large family left to mourn his loss. The sympathy of the entire neighborhood is extended to them.

The funeral took place to Stony Beach cemetery and was largely attended by friends and relatives of the deceased.—Penne (Sask.) Herald.

And so it was on a summer day, a brave came to the mother and the father for the marriage. She bound her hair on her, and let her out to the feast, and the brides and the brides and the youths and maidens of the village came to the feast. But Leelinua sighed and wept, and begged that she might go to the feast, and found her a bride. Her mother said, "Yes," and the little Leelinua decked herself with flowers, and filled her with the seeds of the pine trees. Then the darkness fell and Leelinua did not come. The moon arose and shed its light on the sea, and the maiden did not come. The bridegroom and

Monarch of Fabulous Wealth and Power Remains a Myth.

The general opinion about Prester John cannot perhaps be better summed up than in the cataloguing phrase "a fabulous medieval Christian monarch of Asia." There can be little question to-day as to his fabulous character; but the persistence of the legend about him is exceeded in remarkable only by the astonishing number of the variants he has led to believe that the detailed history of Prester John, who occupied such a prominent place in the thought of Europe for nearly three centuries, ruling over those vast tracts of country now once again in dispute, has not some foundation in fact.

the Tiger. Hardly had the excitement occasioned by his story, which is related in detail in the chronicle of Otto, bishop of Freisingen, subsided, when all of Christendom was thrilled with the news that the Emperor Manuel had received a long letter from the great monarch of the East. It was signed "Preshroy Joannes," and the writer who described himself as the greatest king under heaven, declared that seventy-two other kings, reigning over as many kingdoms, were his tributaries, and that within his vast dominions, were to be found all the wonders that men had ever dreamed of. The fabulous beasts and all the fabulous races which had ever been made the subject of story, in his kingdom were to be seen the ruins of the Tower of Babel, the Fountain of Youth, the Sea of Sand and the Stream of Precious Stones.

CADORNA AIMS TO CRUSH THE TEUTON FORCE

Italian Plan in to Win Trieste as Result of the Defeat.

BUSIER AGAIN

Austrians On the Trentino Front Alarmed by Activity.

London Cable.—Authoritative information received here puts it beyond question that the Italian military situation is full of promise of things when the time comes for the next great push.

Gen. Cadorna is pursuing with relentless determination his object of defeating the Austrian field army. All his plans are concentrated to that supreme aim, which he is confident of achieving and which he regards as an essential condition precedent to the accomplishment of Italy's ambitions in this war. His plan is accomplished the fall of Trieste follows as a natural consequence.

But even the possession of Trieste, without defeating decisively the Austrian field army, would fail to satisfy Cadorna's concept of a real Italian victory. By successfully pressing his offensive in San Gabriele, as he expects to do when his plans are completed, the Austrian position on the Hermida, the last defense of Trieste, will be outflanked and then the decisive moment will come between Austria and Italy.

In the last 24 hours the Italians have been more active on the Trentino front, harassing the enemy with raids and strong artillery fire. In a forward movement near Carzano, in the Sugana valley, east of Trent, the Italians captured 200 prisoners. Austro-Hungarian attacks on the Bainsizza plateau continue, but General Cadorna's men have held them for no gains.

BATTLE FOR BAINISIZZA.

C. M. N. Jefferies, special correspondent of the Daily Mail with the Italian army, writes:

"The Sardinians made a most gallant attack, taking over 400 prisoners. But the attack was not, as it might perhaps have been, a mere courageous raid. It was an attack with great moral significance. It was in a way the coming of age of the Italians' Bainsizza force. Even now people in England can hardly guess what the taking of the Bainsizza Plateau really meant. The Austrians thought they held the line strongly and had left the defense of the plateau behind them largely to Nature.

"Here, at least," they reasoned, "there can be no advance. Gen. Cadorna cannot send, and even if he could send he would never succeed in supporting the thousands of men necessary at any advance."

"Cadorna dared the great coup, took them by surprise and flung his thousands forward into the desolate chaos, but who shall ever tell the tension of this month of September? Over 200,000 square yards of ground were gained, but then the ground had to be held. Something like half an army corps was put at road-making, and the men on the Bainsizza Plateau have been holding on grimly.

"To-day nearly 70 miles of splendid roads have been made and the aspect of the plateau is changing. The Bainsizza army has become a self-sufficient force, and yesterday's attack signalled this.

"The Sardinians were not chosen for it without reason. They have, dating from ancient days of the Kingdom of Sardinia, a personal devotion to the House of Savoy unequalled in Italy, and they threw themselves into battle for the King like chivalry. They were soldiers for an hour, and then stalkers and hunters for many hours more.

"In that first hour the warriors by a surprising assault on the Austrian first trench line and then began to clear their machine-guns over the ground thus won in another further twist down of the Italian forces toward the Valley of Chiapovano, the possession of which should expose Monte San Gabriele on the east. The Austrians, who know the danger of the mountain, gathered large reinforcements from the quiet Russian front and are pouring them into Ternova Forest to protect that side of the mountain. The possibility of all the Austrian forces being thrown against Italy has been reckoned with."

ITALIAN REPORT.

Rome Cable.—The official report from Italian headquarters Wednesday reads:

"Yesterday in several sections of the Trentino front we caused the enemy alarm, inflicted losses on him and damaged his defensive works by the activity of our reconnoitering parties and the concentration of our fire. In the direction of Carzano, in the Sugana Valley, one of our parties succeeded in going beyond the enemy line, capturing about two hundred prisoners."

"On the Bainsizza plateau local enemy attacks were vigorously repulsed. On Sunday the enemy blew up a big mine in front of our positions on the line of Mount Cengio, Monte Piazzi, and Monte Cengio. The vigilance and promptness of our defenders frustrated the enemy's plans."

PLENTY OF "GAS"

For the Allies, Says Standard Oil Head.

Atlantic City, N. J., Cable.—There is not the slightest danger of a deficiency in the supply either of crude oil or its products, kerosene and gasoline, for the use of the United States or its allies in the war, in the opinion of C. C. Bedford, of New York, President of the Standard Oil Company, of New Jersey. Mr. Bedford expressed that conviction in an address he delivered here today before the war convention of the American Chamber of Commerce.

"America," said Mr. Bedford, "is producing more than enough oil that will be needed for those purposes."

"But," he added, "our Government should receive the first call upon all petroleum produced, either for itself, as it may designate, for the use of our allies in their conduct of the war."

While the oil refining capacity of the country, Mr. Bedford stated, is greater than the present demand, the United States is consuming crude oil at the rate of over 330,000,000 barrels a year, while the annual production in this country amounts to 312,000,000 barrels. There is a surplus of 18,000,000 barrels on July 1 last, however, 164,599,942 barrels of petroleum.

SIX DROWNED

When Barge Foundered in Lake Ontario.

Kingston Ont., Report says.—That there had been another terrible lake tragedy, and that possibly six or more lives had been lost on Lake Ontario, where the startling news that was received in the city this forenoon.

The barge Hiawatha, of the Montreal Transportation Company, foundered about 10 miles above the Gallop Island lights and 30 miles from Kingston about 3 o'clock this morning. The Hiawatha was being towed to Kingston by the tug Magnolia.

This evening the only known survivor of a total of seven or eight on board was Captain Albene Lalonde, who was picked up by the steamer McKittie and taken to Oswego. Captain Lalonde had been floating for three hours on one of the hatches.

The tug Magnolia and the barge Hilda, which also had in tow, coal-laden, are safe.

DRIVE HUNS BACK ON RIGA FRONT

Lett Regiments of Russia Won Victory.

Great Snow Storms in Caucasus Zone.

Petrograd Cable.—The Russians yesterday on the Riga front repulsed an attack by the Germans with great losses to the invaders, according to the statement issued today by the Russian War Office. The Rumanians were compelled to abandon enemy positions that they had occupied in the region of Oena. The next of the statement follows:

"Northern, Western and South-western fronts: Yesterday, in the direction of Riga, the enemy's infantry conducted an offensive in the region east of Lemberg. In a daring counter-attack by Letts, with the energetic co-operation of our artillery, the enemy was driven back and suffered great losses. In other sectors on these fronts there were fruitless attacks.

"Rumanian front: In the region of Oena the enemy counter-attacked Tuesday, forcing the Rumanians to abandon a sector of enemy positions that they had occupied. In the region south of Grossetti the Rumanians took prisoner two officers and 33 men. Yesterday nothing of material consequence occurred on this front.

"Caucasian front: East of Van our troops have been engaged in battle with the band of Kurds. The snow in places is four feet deep in the mountain theatre. In the region southwest of Kalik and southeast of Erzincan a snowstorm is raging, accompanied by a freezing temperature.

300,000 TROOPS CHINA'S OFFER

Willing to Place That Many at the Front.

Peking Cable.—Announcement made in Government circles that the Chinese Cabinet, provided the Entente Powers, approved, is willing to send 300,000 soldiers to France in compliance with the French request.

An appeal has been made to the United States to aid China, as the Entente Allied Powers were helped, financially, to equip her troops.

JAPAN IS AGREEABLE

Tokio Cable.—The Chinese Government has sounded Japan on the proposed despatch of Chinese troops to Europe and the indications are that Japan will offer no opposition to such action on the part of China. Commenting on the advocacy of abroad of Japan's participation in the land fighting, the semi-official Times declares that as Japan is not directly menaced by Germany no sufficient reason exists to send troops and the Allies should be satisfied with Japan's naval and other assistance.

NEUTRALS SEE WAR NEAR END

Conference at Stockholm On Joint Action

To Save Interests Now and After War.

Washington Report.—With the expressed belief that the war would soon be over, representatives of the Scandinavian countries at a conference at Stockholm in July, recommended that the neutrals should take common action to save their interests, both now and after the war.

This information has been brought to Washington in despatches which tell of an official memorandum issued by the Swedish Government, in which it was pointed out that neutrals had the same interest in a lasting peace as the belligerents and in the establishment of an international judicial regime, and proposed that the neutrals arrive at a mutual agreement concerning their rights.

Among the subjects discussed at the conference were the treatment of submarines, dirigibles and aeroplanes, the disposition by the warring powers of neutral prizes, the rights of asylum for prizes, the establishment and use of blacklists, the commercial policies of neutrals during and after the war and the adjustment of economic affairs.

It is understood that these conferences were the outgrowth of a Swedish proposal made at a meeting at Christiania, Norway, in March, 1915, when the Presidents of the Council and Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the Scandinavian countries were discussing the policies of neutrals during the war. The questions were not taken up formally until this year, when the Stockholm meeting was held.

JAP-CHINESE ROW.

Town in China Seized by Mikado's Troops.

Peking Cable.—A clash between Chinese and Japanese soldiers and policemen has occurred along the Yalu River over the question of lumber interests. Two Chinese and one Japanese were killed and many were wounded. Japanese troops have crossed into Manchuria and seized the Chinese town of Tashan, which they are holding pending an investigation.

The Chinese Government said that the trouble was started by the employees of a lumber company and not by Chinese soldiers, and denies all responsibility. The Japanese officials declare that Chinese soldiers incited the trouble.

The wild pigeon has been exterminated and it looks as though the dove of peace might have gone the same route.

WON A MILE OF GROUND UPON EIGHT-MILE FRONT

British Drive of Yesterday Completely Successful, Says Haig.

Many Strong Positions Taken—Few Lost Heavily in Prisoners.

Berlin Cable.—The report from headquarters this evening on the British attack says:

"The battle in Flanders, which opened at daybreak on a wide front, is still in full swing on the British front from Langemark to Hollebeke. In the foremost part of our defensive zone bitter and fluctuating fighting has taken place since morning."

London Cable.—Field Marshal Haig's official report says that North Canadian and Australian battalions penetrated the German positions in the center to a depth of over a mile and captured the whole of their objectives. These included Hamlet, Veldhoek and the western portion of Polygon wood. Further north, Zevenhoek was captured, and also a few guns.

The text of the report follows:

"We attacked at 5.40 this morning east of Ypres on a front of about eight miles between the Ypres-Comines railroad and the Ypres-Stalen railway. Great success attended our troops, and positions of considerable military importance have been won. Heavy casualties were inflicted on the enemy."

TANKS ASSISTED.

London Cable.—Telegraphing today from British Headquarters in Flanders, Haig's correspondent says: "The day's attack has been another fine success for British arms. Our troops penetrated to a depth of a mile, which is a wonderful achievement, considering the ground advanced over. The troops reached the Zennebeke-Gheluvelt line, and also advanced beyond the central parallel of Polygon wood. We are now bombarding the Germans, who are massing for a counter-attack."

"It is believed that the number of prisoners will reach four figures. Every shell-hole yielded about a

AMERICAN DRIVE EARLY SUMMER

Pershing Plans for Great Offensive Then.

More Troops Overseas Than is Believed.

Washington Report.—American troops will launch a big drive against the Germans in France some time next summer, but American troops will be on active duty in the trenches and actually in the fighting long before that date—probably before Christmas.

While War Department officials are necessarily reticent as to discussing the prospective American offensive, it is known that Major-General Pershing is preparing his army for a big drive next summer.

Meanwhile American troops will occupy small portions of the front-line trenches for training purposes and be under fire. They will engage in trench raids and take part in repulsing German assaults.

While not even an estimate as to the number of American troops in France can with propriety be given, it is permissible to say they number more than the public suspects. When Mr. Baker, Secretary of War, sent estimates to Congress today for an additional $287,116,000 for the army this fiscal year he stated that the War Department was proceeding upon the basis of an army in the field, partly in this country and partly in France, of 2,300,000 men before next July.

MINE TO SHIP IN ONE MOVE

British Builders Have Great Advantage

And Use It Ably to Beat the Hun.

Glasgow Cable.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press)—The shipbuilders of Great Britain, who soon will be turning out virtually nothing else but standard ships and war vessels, have one advantage over the shipbuilders of the United States that will be hard to overcome. They have nearly all their materials at their back doors.

From the decks of ships in one of the yards in the north of England, for instance, everything used in the construction of the vessels is within sight. Iron is extracted from the hills that look to be almost across the street. Coal comes from the same place. On the other side of the yard are great coke ovens, smelters, furnaces and rolling mills. Plates and steel forms may be carried from the mill to the ship under construction in carts drawn by horses. A single company extracts the ore, produces it with its own fuel, and sends it away from its own plant as finished ships ready for the sea. There are many such examples here in the north. The success of more than one of the shipbuilding concerns may be partially traced to the proximity of materials used.

So great is the supply at the disposal of the shipbuilders that in many cases they have entered into the manufacture of other things than ships. One yard, which owns a great rolling mill, turns out, in addition to steel for its own tremendous needs, something over 3,000 tons weekly of great steel forms which are shipped away to be made into projectiles. Another yard has turned over some of its buildings and shops to the actual making of projectiles from steel taken from its own plant. Still another is engaged almost solely in the production of standard ships, and thereby has created quantities of its equipment to make "steel for the Germans."

Another had a large stretch of land in the rear of its place which the war was used mostly as a slag dump and a storage yard for steel. All this has been cleared away, and now the site is covered by a big airplane factory. Needless to say, this plant is so located that the Germans never could locate it, even if they did know where it was, they never could damage it.

The shipbuilders of Britain are intensely interested in what the United States is going to do toward increasing the shipping tonnage of the world; and they are anxious to do everything possible to assist in the plans. Only one thing did they have to suggest; they were unanimously agreed that under no consideration should workers in the yards be permitted to join the armed forces of Great Britain. When the shipbuilders' concerns encouraged their employees to enlist, but now and for some time past, with assistance of the Government, former employees are being released from the army and the navy to return to their work. A shipbuilder or a man with a knowledge of shipbuilding is worth ten times as much to his country in a shipyard, company officials say, as he is in the armed forces.

The builders of ships for Britain have all the material they need and gradually they are getting a sufficient number of men to do the work that only men can do. Female workers are all very well, they say, but a woman cannot handle an automatic riveter or swing a sledge.

LENS GARRISON FAGER TO QUIT

(By Stewart Lyon.)

Canadian Army Headquarters in France. Cable.—Press reports upon the defense of Lens is unrelenting. Posts have again been pushed out into "No Man's Land" in the region southeast of St. Laurent. The Germans are being literally squeezed out of Lens, and prisoners declare the garrison would welcome the order to evacuate. Enemy orders are still to hold on at all costs, but there is reason to believe the cost is becoming too great, since the occupation by us of the northern suburbs permits the projection of gas into the town from the west as well as from the south and north.

REPLY TO POPE.

Teutons' Not In, Allies' Must Come Later.

Rome, Cable.—Cardinal Gasparri, the Papal Secretary of State, tonight declared that the reply of the Central Powers to Pope Benedict's peace proposals had not yet been received at the Vatican. This is taken to prove that the statement recently published to the effect that the reply had left Berlin on Saturday is untrue.

Cardinal Gasparri believes that the reply of the central powers was held up when Emperor William went to Riga, and that it will reach the Vatican until next week. The reply of the Entente Allies to the Pope's peace proposals must necessarily arrive after that of the central powers, because Great Britain, before the completion of the reply, must wait for some information of the Vatican, which in turn applied for it to the central powers. The Vatican, in turn, must wait for explanations asked for would be contained in their own reply to the Papal letter. Of these explanations, therefore, the answer to the Entente Allies, or at least that of Great Britain, will depend.

PEACE CONFERENCE IN BERNE.

Copenhagen, Cable.—Count Michael Knudsen, president of the Hungarian Independence party, according to a Budapest dispatch published at a meeting yesterday that he would act for an early peace between the warring countries. He said he had been invited to participate in a peace conference at Berne on October 15, and may leave for Switzerland tonight. The violent attacks which probably would be directed against him.

SUNK BY INFERNAL MACHINE.

London, Cable.—The British steamer Plover has been sunk by an explosion in her forward hold while near Cape Breton, N. S. The crew was saved. The Plover, of 4700 gross tons, was bound from Melbourne, Australia, to London.

A Reuter despatch from Melbourne said the captain of the Plover reported that the explosion was caused by an infernal machine, according to his belief.

SOLDIER CHAUFFEURS EXEMPT.

Toronto, Report.—Hon. F. G. Macdougall, Minister of Public Works, announced yesterday that the Government had decided to grant free registration to all returned soldiers who choose the profession of a chauffeur. It was also expected that the exemption would be granted to all drivers of a motor vehicle. A license is granted will also admit the usual fee of $1.00 in the case of men returned from the front.

HARD BATTLE AT MANY SPOTS IN THE ADVANCE

But British Were Not to Be Kept Back by the Germans.

VERY IMPORTANT

Were the Gains Made—No Counters Yet, but Huns Preparing.

London, Cable.—British troops are reported to have penetrated the German positions in their offensive on the Flanders front as far as the Zonnebeke-Gheluvelt line, Haig's correspondent at British headquarters telegraphs. At the time the correspondent's report was despatched the Germans had launched no counter-attacks. They were massing in certain places, however, where the British guns were bombarding them. The British penetration has reached the depth of a mile, "which, considering the character of the ground, is a wonderful achievement," the despatch adds. It characterized the result of to-day's attack as a "fine success."

(By R. T. Small, Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press.)

With the British Armies in France and Belgium. Cable.—The British offensive against the German positions on the Ypres front, which began at 5.40 o'clock, was a most successful one. The British advance was preceded by a barrage of greater depth than ever before witnessed. Five distinct barrages, in fact, were dropped ahead of the men as they began their journey into the infernal terrain. The tremendous amount of burning steel did its work well, and troops pushed forward rapidly toward their objectives.

Fair weather lately had improved the ground somewhat, but the mud still lies deep over wide stretches of it. A light rain, however, has covered with water-filled shell holes, tangled barbed wire and shattered trees. The German defenses consisted largely of concrete redoubts scattered in profusion over the entire country and from these they have been able to pour a withering stream of bullets into the ranks of the advancing troops. Every little elevation also held its machine gun emplacements, and all the woods were literally choked with rapid-fires.

The British encountered hard fighting at Gheluvelt, but the magnificent artillery preparation had done much to make the first stage of their drive easier. The past week must have been one of misery for the German troops lying out in this section, pouring a stream of high explosive shells into their territory, and every now and then the British have put down a barrage which swept the land like a broom. It is known that many German batteries have been silenced in the past few days.

The Germans know that an attack was coming, but it appears that they were unaware of the exact locality. At least until the time for the offensive arrived. A light rain fell last night, but it cleared this morning and the visibility is improving.

SMOKE BOX PLAN SAVES VESSELS

London Cable.—The Press Association hears on high naval authority that the new defensive measures against submarine warfare are meeting with success, justifying the hope of a further reduction in the losses, and says it can be stated on official authority that the results of the methods adopted in the past month give cause for growing confidence.

According to an Admiralty statement dozens of ships have been saved by the smoke-box plan, which the Admiralty during the past few months has supplied a majority of British merchantmen.

ARMY NEEDS

MISUNDERSTOOD

Popular Misconceptions as to C. E. F. are Being Cleared Up.

Ottawa, September 26th—Serious misunderstandings with regard to the Military Service Act are being cleared up as a result of the educational campaign now being conducted by the Military Service Council. This non-partisan body is now established here and its activities cover the Dominion from coast to coast.

It has been found out that the majority of people had an idea that men selected for service under the Military Service Act would be paid at the rate of a few cents a day, this being part of the popular conception of "conscription." As a matter of fact, of course, selected men will receive exactly the same pay as those who have volunteered, with all the incidental benefits from the various funds.

Again there was an idea widespread that all the men who have gone overseas are fighting troops, ready to enter the trenches at a moment's notice. This idea was at the root of much honest disapproval of the Military Service Act, which was held to be unnecessary. As a matter of fact, again, there are a hundred and one different and essential branches of the service behind the lines for which men are constantly needed. Besides, only men in the highest physical condition are permitted to go to the front line trenches. To understand this actual situation is to appreciate that the existence of the considerable number of men in reserve may not mean—and in this case, does not mean—the existence of adequate reinforcements fit and ready to join particular units when urgently needed to save the military situation.

River Valley W. I.

River Valley W. I. held their last meeting at the home of Mrs. Edgar Morrow Sept 6th with attendance of 22. The Roll Call was answered by giving helpful hints. There was no time for a program, so the program will be furnished by the same ladies, namely: Mrs. Edgar Morrow, Miss Fannie Hensman, Mrs. Frank Irvine and Mrs. Ben Hatfield. Collection amounted to $2.10. Meeting closed by singing National Anthem. Our next meeting will be held at Mrs. Earl Morrow's Oct. 4. The following shipment was packed and sent to Belleville for overseas, 11 hospital shirts, 6 suits of pyjamas, 6 pairs of socks and 3 pairs of bed socks.

Get Behind the Wheel of a Ford and Drive

TRY it just once! Ask your friend to let you "pilot" his car on an open stretch. You'll like it, and will be surprised how easily the Ford is handled and driven.

If you have never felt the thrill of driving your own car, there is something good in store for you. It is vastly different from just riding—being a passenger. And especially so if you drive a Ford.

Young boys, girls, women and even grand fathers—thousands of them—are driving Ford cars and enjoying it. A Ford stops and starts in traffic with exceptional ease and smoothness, while on country roads and hills its strength and power show to advantage.

Buy a Ford and you will want to be behind "the wheel" constantly.

Second Base Play.
Second base is called the "pivot position of the infield." This is because most of the plays center around second base. Many double plays read "short to second to first; third to second to first; second to short to first to second to first," and so on. Records show teams strong on double plays are usually teams well up in the race. Generally speaking, ability to make double plays speaks well for a team's defense. A good defense means few runs for the opposition, provided the pitching is of the proper kind. Since second base is the pivot position much of the team's success depends upon the way that base is played. If the shortstop and second baseman work smoothly it usually has the effect of balancing the rest of the team. A club that is constantly musing up plays around the second sack never causes much trouble for the opposition.—Billy Evans in New York World

Scandinavian Politeness.
Two points which attract the attention of travelers in Sweden are the punctilious honesty and truthfulness of the inhabitants. When asking for places at a theater, for instance, the ticket clerk never fails to inform the applicant if owing to a crowded state of the house a better position would be secured with a cheaper ticket than the one asked for. Again, when parcels are taken by steamer from Stockholm to country places in the neighborhood they are just placed on to the quay, where they frequently remain half a day without being claimed. It never seems to occur to any one that they could possibly be taken by any body but their rightful owners. On a canal trip of any length a little book lies in the saloon of the steamer, in which each passenger keeps his own account of the number of meals, coffees, etc., he takes during the journey.

The Clever Brahman.
Speaking of the great power the Brahmans in India possess in localizing thought, a prominent Brahman once said: "We would consider a game of chess as played in this country were child's play. An ordinary Brahman chess player could carry on three or four games at a time without inconvenience. The usual game played by the Brahmans consists in checkmating with one pawn designated when the play begins. I have seen a man perform a long problem in multiplication and division, at the same time noting the various sounds and discussions going on about him in the room. I have seen a man compose a triple recitative in Sanskrit in a given meter, at the same time having three well versed men trying to overthrow him in his argument on religion."

SALTS IF BACKACHE AND KIDNEYS HURT

Drink lots of water and stop eating meat for a while if your Bladder troubles you.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and laggard. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sour, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water seals and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

Letter from Gr. C.W. Hoard

Somewhere in France
September 16, 1917

Dear Mother and All—

I suppose you have just gone and worried your heads badly off because you haven't heard from me lately, but I just couldn't find time to write sooner. We only stayed in the camp place two days and that was sufficient. It rained like the mischief and we slept anywhere. Rusty and I got in an old gun pit and outside of lots of rain running in on us and a few rats holding a people chase over our heads, we were fine. We have a very fair place here as long as it doesn't rain. We are short of men and while it is not real hard work, we have awfully long hours. I have worked about 70 hours out of the last 84.

I've had three trips up the line and they're not as bad as you would imagine from what you read about it. I really like to go up. We get a nice load of ammunition and jog along, past long lines of ingoing infantry, smashed up houses and villages, shell holes, trenches and wire entanglements with out-land and scattered among all are our own guns by the hundreds. They just fire occasionally to keep the Huns wakened up but you can never tell where they are coming from next. I certainly wouldn't want to be over driving in Fritz's army it must be a terror.

Two of my trips up have been fine, not a shell came over at us but the other one made up for them. They had a nice little stretch of road registered and sure hurried us along, but they didn't get any body. It was my first time under real shell fire and I didn't mind it so much.

Rusty and I were discussing it afterwards and really it was just like the pictures you often see. Horses on the dead gallop, and the gun limbers flying across shell holes and bounding at an astonishing rate, the spare gunners were hanging on some, the riders were plying the whip and spurs, a riderless horse with harness flying, galloped by and behind burst shell after shell. It was sure short and exciting but quite sufficient for me.

Well I haven't time for much more as my nearly feeding up time and then I must get to bed. I am nearly dead for sleep. Don't worry about me and I'll write as often as possible. I've had no mail since we left the general base so you see I am rather behind the times.

Love to all

POISONOUS BEANS

The attention of the Department of Health has been directed by the United States Government, to the fact that a variety of bean known as the Burmah White, or Rangoon bean, and laboring under the scientific name of "Phaseolus lunatus," has been sold in large quantities in the United States and Canada.

This bean has been planted by the acre and in no case has it come up. Furthermore it is poisonous. Analyses of samples taken in Toronto and analyzed in our laboratory show it to contain .028 per cent. prussic acid, and cases are on record, in Holland for example, where people have died from eating it.

The Rangoon bean is a small, yellowish bean, with marked lines radiating from the small eye on the concave surface. These radiating lines and its yellow color serve to distinguish it from the small white bean.

Its importation has been recently stopped by the Government as an injurious article of food.

We understand that this variety of bean has not been used by canners to be made into pork and beans, so that there would be no danger to fear from that source.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the matter of the Estate of The Late JOHN HENRY WRIGHT, Deceased.

NOTICE is hereby given that all persons having any claim or demand against John Henry Wright, late of the Village of Stirling, in the County of Hastings, farmer, deceased, who died on or about the Second day of September 1917, at the Village of Stirling, are required to send by post pre-paid or deliver to Dr. Geo. W. Faulkner, of the said Village of Stirling, the Executor of the last Will of the said deceased, their names and addresses and full particulars in writing of their claims and statements of their accounts, and the nature of the securities, if any, held by them.

AND TAKE NOTICE that after the Twentieth day of October, 1917, I will proceed to distribute the assets of the said deceased among the persons entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which I shall then have had notice, and that I will not be liable for the said assets or any part thereof to any person of whose claim I shall not then have received notice.

DATED at Stirling the 14th day of September, A. D. 1917.

GEO. W. FAULKNER,
Executor.

These Men Will Help You Decide

Are you liable to be selected for service under the Military Service Act?

The answer to this question is being made readily available for you. Remember that the first class to be called includes only men between the ages of 20 and 34, both inclusive, who are unmarried or widowers without children, those married after July 6, 1917, being deemed single for the purposes of the Act.

Medical Boards are now being established throughout Canada. These Boards will examine, free of charge and obligation, all men who wish to be examined as to their physical fitness for military service. They will tell you in a very short time whether your physical condition absolves you from the call or makes you liable for selection.

It is important that you obtain this information as soon as possible. A certificate of unfitness from a Medical Board will secure for you freedom from responsibility under the Military Service Act from any Exemption Tribunal. A certificate of fitness will not preclude an appeal for exemption on any ground.

In order that you may be able to plan your future with certainty, visit a Medical Board as soon as possible and find out if you are liable to be selected. Your family and your employer are interested as well as yourself.

Stirling Fall Fair Bigger and Better Than Ever

The fair this year was one of the most successful ever held here. The weather was ideal and the attendance constituted a new record. All the neighboring towns and villages were well represented especially Belleville, and even visitors from Prince Edward County came to Stirling fair.

The Directors and those in charge of various departments boosted the fair and worked faithfully for its success. If every villager and farmer could be induced to take the same interest and lend support to our fair and co-operate with the Directors, Stirling could easily have one of the best fair in the county. Too little outside publicity is given the average fair.

There was an excellent exhibit of cheese the finest ever shown here, thirty five of the finest quality, all white cheese. Mr. Chas. Linn, Dairy Instructor boosted this department and it was through his efforts that the large number of cheese were shown.

The factories represented were as follows:—

West Huntingdon, Evergreen, Shawbrook, Stirling, Enterprise, Harold, Spring Brook, Maple Leaf, Plum Grove, Marmora and Moira.

Eggs, honey, butter, home-made bread, pies, cakes, preserves and pickles, etc. competing for prizes. The home-made bread, pies and cake were generously tested by the public, which caused annoyance to the exhibitors as there was little left for some of them to take home. If a railing was put along the table it would put a stop to "sampling" the good things.

Just a word of praise, which is well deserved for Rawdon Red Cross Aid Exhibit. They had a splendid showing of numerous articles such as quilts, surgeons gowns, kimonas, hospital shirts, sleeveless coats, trench caps and mitts, socks, knee caps, pyjamas, suits, aprons, kit bags, house wives, etc.

Rawdon Red Cross Workers lunch booth on the grounds did a good business. Hot sausage, sandwiches and a very tempting array of home-made cooking drew crowds all day. Rawdon Township is noted for "good cooks" and judging by the way this booth was patronized their efforts were most successful.

There was a good display of fancy work in the main building.

The Agricultural Exhibit from Ottawa Experimental Farm was very interesting. A model up-to-date Piggery was shown and the representative gladly answered questions and supplied literature to those interested in the exhibit.

Mr. T. H. McKee had a fine showing of Harness, Rugs, Club Bags, etc.

The Maxwell Car Co. were showing some handsome touring cars and trucks. Mr. Jos. Phillips is agent for Stirling. The McLaughlin Co. also had a good exhibit.

There was a good collection of cut flowers and plants.

The fruit was not up to the average this year owing to weather conditions.

The poultry exhibit was one of the best ever shown in the county, consisting of 75 pens. This dept. was ably managed by Mr. Clinton McFee who determined to make success of it which he did, assisted by Mr. Mitchell.

The ladies of Stirling Red Cross Aid sold tickets on a handsome quilt donated by Mrs. Chas. Mosher. The quilt is on exhibition in J. S. Morton's window.

The exhibit of horses and cattle were not as good as usual.

During the afternoon a game of Basket Ball Madoc vs. Stirling High School girls the score 30-32 in favor of Madoc. A return match will be played in Madoc in the near future. The line up was as follows:—

Stirling	Madoc
M. Snarr	Centre
V. Hubbell	M. O'Hara
K. Maloney	M. Mettee
A. Morton	R. Connor
B. Conter	Defence
D. Alger	McClay
K. Sills	O. Wickware
	Forward
	M. Donnell
	J. Jones

The play "Red Acre Farm" in the Opera House in the evening was put on by the Stirling Dramatic Society. It was presented some time ago by the same Society and was so popular that it was by special request, given Fair night. The house was packed and the players certainly made a hit with the audience.

NOTES OF THE FAIR

Never were such a number of autos on the grounds and lined up outside, when the long procession passed through the streets it reminded one of a main thoroughfare in the city.

Foxboro band supplied music during the day.

A Jardiniere containing cut flowers was taken (by mistake?) from the main building.

The windows of the various stores presented an attractive appearance Fair Day and many of them were artistically decorated.

Out of town visitors noticed the well kept lawns and the general neatness of the Village.

HYMENEAL

ROBERTSON—McADAM

A quiet wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. David McAdam, when their only daughter, Jennie Pearl was united in marriage to Mr. David Arthur Robertson of Fenelon Falls by Rev. S. E. Dixon.

Previous to the wedding a large number of friends, about one hundred and fifty presented Miss McAdam with a shower of many useful and beautiful presents for which she expressed her sincere appreciation. An address was read in which reference was made to the faithful and efficient service Miss McAdam had rendered in the choir, Sunday School and Epworth League and as a Public School teacher for the past six years.

Mr. and Mrs. Robertson will reside in Peterboro. Their many friends wish them a long, happy and successful married life.

The Late W. H. Hubbell

Deep sorrow and regret were experienced by all who knew W. H. Hubbell when the unexpected message of his death was heard on Sunday evening Sept. 23rd. It was not generally known that he had been seriously ill as he had been around attending to business until the previous Tuesday. He had been ailing for some time and after going to bed sank rapidly. Although Mr. Hubbell had resided in Smith's Falls for less than two years, he had a host of friends, won by his genial disposition, kindly manner and sterling worth. He was a man it was an honor to call a friend and a pleasure to converse with—honorable, upright, public spirited and true Christian. His wife and family have the sympathy of the whole community in the hour of their great sorrow.

The funeral took place on September 26th, from the family residence at 110 Elmyr street, to the Public Cemetery under Masonic auspices and was largely attended, citizens from every walk in life accepting the opportunity of paying a last tribute of respect. Rev. G. W. McCall, pastor of the Methodist church, conducted the service at the house. The floral tributes were profuse and very beautiful.

The late William Henry Hubbell was 54 years of age, born in Rawdon township, Hastings county, the son of the late Levi Hubbell. When a young man he learned the milling trade at Allan's Mills, Seymour township, going from there to Stirling, and then to Frankford. At the latter place he met Miss Annie Read, who became his wife. A few years afterwards they moved to Marmora where Mr. Hubbell started business for himself and built up a large and successful trade for his mill in the seven years he was there. He took an active interest in public matters, serving as reeve of Marmora for several years and warden of the county. He was a Liberal in politics and was a candidate in the last Dominion election. He leaves to mourn his loss a large family, one son, Lorne, who is with the Forestry Battalion at Burfield Camp, and six daughters, Beryl, Ruby, Bessie, Grace and Carol at home and Hazel in Toronto. Two sisters and one brother survive, Mrs. (Rev. E. T. W. Puffer in Illinois, Mrs. W. E. T. Barton of Cobalt, and J. A. Hubbell of Portland, Ore.—Smith's Falls News.

River Valley W. I.

River Valley W. I. held their last meeting at the home of Mrs. Edgar Morrow Sept. 6th with attendance of 22. The Roll Call was answered by giving helpful hints. There was no time for a program, so the program will be furnished by the same ladies, namely: Mrs. Edgar Morrow, Miss Fannie Heaman, Mrs. Frank Irvine and Mrs. Ben Hatfield. Collection amounted to $2.10. Meeting closed by singing National Anthem. Our next meeting will be held at Mrs. Earl Morrow's Oct. 4. The following shipment was packed and sent to Belleville for overseas, 11 hospital shirts, 6 suits of pyjamas, 6 pairs of socks and 3 pairs of bed socks.

Elect of The Earth

Kipling called Canada "Our Lady of the Snows" but the story which corresponds tell of her war record prove that when her pride, her loyalty and her affection are engaged Canada is the Venus of the nations. Every nation should read the record of the sacrifices and the heroism of Canadians. Before the war certain brainless Americans talked of annexing Canada and of making it share in the benefits of a Republican government. Until we can lift ourselves to the same level as this high minded people the best thing that we could do would be to get ourselves annexed to Canada. We hope that the letters of our correspondent will cause our hearts to beat with admiration and will stimulate us to a generous emulation. For the next generation at least to be a Canadian will be equivalent to being one of the elect of the earth.—Baltimore Sun

NEW GERMAN FATHERLAND PARTY FIRM FOR WORLD DOMINATION

Tirpitz, at Opening Meeting Backs Outrages. Demands War Indemnity.

Copenhagen cable says: The new German Fatherland party held its first open meeting in Berlin last night, and the crowd in Philharmonic Hall was so enormous that an overflow meeting was held nearby. No government officials attended either meeting. Duke Johann Albrecht of Mecklenburg-Schwerin opened both meetings, and Admiral von Tirpitz was the principal speaker at each.

Admiral von Tirpitz pointed out that the submarine warfare is Germany's legal right, and that Belgium now is a desert. He declared that Germany must do her utmost in preventing England from becoming Belgium's protector. He declared that without a heavy war indemnity meant Germany's de-capitalism. Admiral von Tirpitz was greeted enthusiastically by the audiences.

Among the speakers was Dr. von Wolfgang Kapp. The Reichsische Westfälische Zeitung, of Essen, recently announced the formation of a new "patriotic party." The leaders of which are Duke Johann Albrecht, of Tirpitz, and Dr. von Wolfgang Kapp. The party's initial proclamation declared hostility to the Reichstag's peace resolution and added that the party was non-political and would be dissolved on the day peace is signed.

TROOPS NEVER COLD OR WET

In the British Campaign in Palestine.

Water is Scarce and Scorpions Busy.

With British Forces in Palestine, cable says: The various stages of the British campaign which has now brought them into Palestine are marked by the stations on the wonderful new railway across the Sinai Desert. Just the names of these stations tell how the Turks have been driven back step by step—Romani, Katia, El Arish and Jafa, marking the successive phases of their retirement.

The country in which the army now is operating is on the fringe of the desert which divides Egypt from the same of Palestine. So far as army observation goes, it does not flow with either milk or honey; if it would only flow with water, the army would ask no more of it.

It has been a battlefield from time immemorial, a Flanders of the East. Modern Gaza is said not to be on the same site as the ancient city, with whose gates Samson made so free. It looks a pleasant enough town, but is a very unhealthy spot in which to live. The privileged traveler alights at the last station of the desert railway in the midst of a country of rolling downs, not unlike some parts of England or of the Central West. Much barley is grown here.

Inland the country is flatter and beyond the Turkish line is a range of hills stretching away to Beersheba in the east. The wadis, or water courses, are the most distinctive feature. The most important of these is the Ghuzza, which varies in width from about thirty yards to full half a mile.

Nearly every part of the British Empire is represented on the beach at bathing time—men from every county of England, Scotchmen, Irishmen, Welshmen, New Zealanders, Indians and Egyptians of all types. The scene is an unforgettable one, and the swim is always followed by a delicious lunch of figs and olives, fresh from the trees.

The fly nuisance is the army's greatest affliction. Drastic sanitary measures have now done a great deal to diminish the evil. Nothing, however, can save the soldiers from the great discomfort, and which continually blows into eyes, nose and mouth.

A good many men have been bitten by scorpions, which though not serious is no joke, especially if the offender is one of the large black variety. Tarantulas also are fairly common, but they run away whenever possible and only bite if driven into a corner.

On the whole, it is not a bad country for campaigning. The soldier need never be cold and never can be wet.

NO "SHOCK TROOPS."

Russia Will Abolish Such Battalions.

Petrograd cable says: The military section of the Soldiers' and Workers' Delegates has voted in favor of a motion demanding the dissolution of "shock" battalions. The reason given for this action is that the reason given to this action is that it is inadmissible that there should be in the army groups of privileged soldiers who arrogate to themselves the right to die for the liberty of all soldiers; second, that "shock" battalions place the Russian army in the position of an army which refuses to defend liberty, and third, that "shock" battalions diminish the capacity of the army by creating on one side a category of heroes and on the other a mass of envious soldiers.

FRENCH PRAISE FOR CANADIANS

Boulogne Paper Calls Them
Ideal Soldiers

Of All Types, but United for Service.

A Paris cable says: French correspondents with the British troops have been lavish in their praise of the Canadians and their fighting at Louve, one of the most important of the French provincial papers is Le Tri-gramme, published at Boulogne, and the following literal translation, without comment, of an article on Aug. 25, speaks for itself.

"The Canadians at the present time completely hold the limelight in the theatre of war. It is these picked troops that have been given the incomparable, the glorious and difficult task of retaking Lens—Lens, where each house is a fortress, and its slag heaps bristling with machine guns and trenches which the enemy only manage to hold by continual reinforcement."

"This Canadian army, although only raised during the war, is curious to study for several reasons. Recruited exclusively by voluntary methods, it is composed of various elements, curiously representing the world crusade against the abhorred Germans."

"One meets trappers, colonialists, hunters, men who have lived full lives of adventure and peaceful merchants of Montreal. There at battalions that speak only the true French of the eighteenth century. Some have names like 'Gros Rene,' others 'Oeil De Faucon,' and all these various elements are assimilated in the great British army, respecter of the traditions of others."

"These trappers, these hunters, these woodsmen, trained to stand the limit of fatigue by their hard life, are the ideal soldiers. They keep themselves in condition, even when they are in rest, by their games and sports, which they practise with fury, but with method. Football and baseball, which they excel in, makes them grenade throwers of the finest class. They can jump in their competitions five feet six inches, and when the time comes they can do the same in combat. They have not abandoned their national game of lacrosse where these talents are necessary."

"There is one part of the Canadian army which is made up of foresters who are actually working in England and France with their own machinery. They can, it is well known, cut down a forest in the twinkling of an eye (clin d'oeil). You have to admire the marvellous cutting, while you sigh for your poor trees, sacrificed in this way for the country's cause. It would take several columns of this paper to relate the splendid deeds of these adventurous and heroic men."

GERMAN TERMS AS TO BELGIUM

Will Evacuate On Certain Conditions,

Including Right to Develop Commerce.

London cable says: Germany has agreed to evacuate Belgium on certain conditions, it is declared in a German official statement, according to a despatch from Bern today, given out by the Wireless Press.

Germany, it is stipulated, must have the right to develop her economic enterprises freely in Belgium, especially in Antwerp.

The proposal was made in a supplementary note to the Vatican, repeating to the neutral in Rome the demand. It was in the form of a verbal communication made by Foreign Secretary Kuehlmann to the Papal Nuncio at Munich, wherein the Foreign Secretary specified the conditions under which Germany was willing to conclude peace on the basis of the evacuation of Belgium.

The verbal note to the Papal Nuncio said Germany would contribute a share of the compensation to be paid to Belgium for war damages. Belgium would be required, it said, to give a guarantee that any such menace as that which threatened Germany in 1914 would in future be excluded.

Belgium must undertake to maintain administrative separation of the Flanders and Walloon districts introduced by Germany, the verbal note says, because this would correspond to the wishes of a majority of the Belgian people, and because Germany desires such separation on account of racial sympathy.

A semi-official communication in the new German press in explanation of the new German proposals says: Germany is intentionally avoiding stating more clearly the conditions thus outlined. These conditions are said to be compatible with the dignity of Belgium. Germany avoided mentioning the question of the throne, because Germany, the communication says, will agree to any Government in Belgium which accepts the conditions set forth. The principal question how the guarantees enumerated can be formulated.

CANADIAN RIFLE MEETING HELD BACK OF THE LINES

Event Has Lasted Several Days During Lull On Their Front.

CROP REPORTS OF THE WEEK

Grain Yield Not Up to Expectations.

Good Acreage of Fall Wheat Already In.

Toronto report: In a summary of weekly crop reports made by district representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture, it is stated that threshing of grain is turning out well, although the yield is hardly in keeping with the showing of straw, nor up to the earlier high expectations of the growers. Oats are relatively plumper in the grain than wheat.

A good acreage of fall wheat is already in, but some later sowing is yet to be done. A portion of the winter rye has been sown, but more will be got in up to as late as the first week in October.

Both husking and silo corn have not copped as well as usual, and the crop generally will be below the average. The frost of the 10th of September has caused a number of farmers to fill their silos with rather immature corn.

There has been less rot and scab among potatoes than was anticipated, but the drought of the past few weeks has been stopping growth of late varieties.

Finished cattle and turnips and other field roots are looking above the average, but the present drought is beginning to try them.

Pastures are described as being in from fair to good condition. The second crop of clover is turning out only fair for seed.

Finished cattle and lambs are hard to find, but there is a fair supply of hogs in sight, and prices are holding up well. All classes of live stock are healthy.

Milk has decreased with falling pastures, according to a majority of reports, while others claim that the flow is keeping up well for the season.

Fodder supplies for the winter on the whole will be fully sufficient, but while there will be an abundance of hay and straw, corn will be scarcer than usual.

Owing to favorable weather for outdoor work, the labor stringency is not being felt so keenly as was expected, and should a fair share of open hands be available, farmers generally will be able to complete the acreage of plowing and other fall work intended. The light orchard yields also have relieved a number of pickers and packers of fruit for other farm work. Silo filling is progressing well.

One representative reports that farm tractors have accounted for a considerably larger acreage of wheat having been sown this fall, and adds that there is no doubt that the tractors will be kept busy until the frost makes plowing impossible.

ARGENTINA IS SOLID FOR WAR

200,000 March in Parade
Through the Capital

In Quickly Organized Demonstration.

Buenos Aires cable says: The greatest demonstration that Buenos Aires has ever seen took place yesterday as an evidence of the almost unanimous feeling of the people against Germany. There were 200,000 marchers in line, who proceeded through the streets, led by a commission of Uruguayan Senators and deputies, chanting the national anthem, and demanding a rupture with Germany. This vast number did not include the thousands that lined the thoroughfares as spectators. The populace threw flowers and tiny flags from balconies and cheered the Uruguayan congressmen wildly for their presence and evidence of solidarity of Uruguay with the Argentine Republic.

All business was absolutely suspended, and the stores were closed and shuttered. The demonstration was organized in 24 hours, indicating the unanimity of public opinion with respect to Argentina's relations with Germany.

Serious disorders occurred in various parts of the Capital to-day as the result of an anti-German manifestation and strike agitations. As an outcome of the strike, and street cars by strikers of sympathizers an inspector was killed.

PERU'S ULTIMATUM.

Huns Must Give Satisfaction for Sinking.

Lima Peru, Cable—The Government has instructed the Peruvian Minister at Berlin to demand that satisfaction be given within eight days for the sinking of the Peruvian ship, the Albatross. If the demand is not met diplomatic relations will be broken off.

The Lorton was sunk inside Spanish waters last February by a German submarine. Peru declared the sinking to be unjustifiable and insisted on payment of an indemnity by Germany. The German Government refused to submit the case to a Prize Court.

ent of the Canadian Press.)

Canadian Army Headquarters in cable says: The Canadian rifle meeting, which has been in progress for several days, ended to-day. The winners in the grand aggregate, in various snap shooting and rapid-firing competitions, were: Officers and sergeants, Major Morris, Ontario, 81; Sergeant Sissons, Ontario, 71; Sergeant Marshall, British Columbia, 71; Lieutenant Downie, Alberta, and Sergeant Boyd, equal at 68. Corporals and privates: Private Morrison, Alberta, 75; Private Fancher, Alberta, 72; Privates White and Lunn, Alberta, equal, 71.

Another Alberta, Sergeant Wright, won the prize for rapid shooting, with a score of 41, five more than the next competitor. In this match 5 rounds had to be fired at a moving target of a man in one minute. The rifle had to be twice re-loaded during the minute, with clips of five cartridges. In the match between the privates, Private Grant, of an Ontario battalion, obtained 41, against 39 by the second man.

In the sniping competition, open to all ranks, the sport was very popular. At a range of 200 yards, five rounds were fired at a head exposed for four seconds, with intervals of three seconds, anywhere along a trench front of forty yards, for a shield given to the winner as the best Canadian sniper. Private Harries, of an Ontario battalion, had to shoot off a tie against Private Briery, of British Columbia. Harries won. The others who found places among the first six were: Privates Digue, Ontario; Ingalls, Alberta; McLaren, Quebec; Manderson, Ontario, and Hall, Manitoba, tied for sixth place.

The battalion challenge cup was won by the Light Horse team, with Ontario and Alberta battalions as second and third. Alberta had four battalion teams among the first ten and only one other province, Ontario, had two.

In the platoon competitions, Alberta also made an excellent record, securing, with the first team the remarkable score of 87 hits in one of the figures exposed for ten minutes to twenty-eight advancing riflemen, who began firing at 300 yards, and continued until they reached 100 yards from the figure.

NEUTRAL SHIPS TO AID ALLIES

U. S. Heads Expects Many in Service Soon.

Making Headway With Norway, Holland.

Washington report—It was stated to-day that an agreement might be reached shortly by the export administration board and the State Department for placing a large part of the neutral tonnage into active service. The administrative board is observing strict secrecy in regard to whatever progress is being made with both Norway and Holland. More than 1,500,000 tons of neutral shipping is being tied up, its use made unavailable to either America or the Allies, on account of Germany's submarine activities. The use of this tonnage is badly needed by the powers at war with Germany for war needs, or to replace their shipping which could be employed in the war trades.

Official figures on the amount of tonnage available for the Allies are not obtainable, but careful estimates have placed the total amount at about 23,000,000 tons, including neutral tonnage used by them. These figures are near the danger point, according to experts, but there is a confident expectation that at an early date at least 1,000,000 more tons will be furnished by Japan and the neutral countries, possibly excepting Sweden, and that sooner or later Japan and the neutrals together will increase those figures to 2,000,000 tons.

Whether the neutral tonnage will be employed in coastline shipping and the South American and Pacific trades or be required to transport war supplies, has not yet been disclosed.

GEESSE SAVED BRITISH FORCE

Flight at Night Warned the Commander.

And 200 German Raiders Met Doom.

With British Forces in Scotland, cable says: (Correspondence)—This is the story of how the geese of Kilduff saved the warning and saved a British detachment.

When the Bulgars left their native mountains and came down into the plains, their march was noted by a certain famous river and a historic lake. A British company was holding the Upper Lake, for it was divided into two parts connected by the river. The company was charged with responsibility for the upper lake and five miles of the connecting stream. As the Bulgars came down the stream, the British company was alerted by the noise of the water, and a strong feeling of comparative safety pervaded the British camp.

Then, one evening the Gracely of the river set out from the camp on his bicycle to visit two outposts up the river nearly two miles from the camp. It was very dark. As he neared the sentry, he heard the movement of wings, and distinguished flock after flock of geese flying from their night rest among the reeds.

"Looks odd," he remarked to the sentry. Then to a sergeant, "I'll take one man, sergeant, and we'll cycle down the path and have a look."

The path ran a quarter of a mile along the marsh and then died an abrupt death in a stifling fence of reeds. The officer and his orderly dismounted and listened. They could discern over in the swamp a long line of men in single file.

Back at the picket post, the orderly sent a man to warn the camp, while he remained behind to keep the enemy raiders under observation.

The raiders were two hundred strong, under command of a German officer. They kept to the path until just before it came into a clearing. Then they halted and prepared to attack. They got into a loose sort of order and moved on quickly. At that moment the British officer fired four shots. Immediately a light over the British camp appeared. The glare was dazzling. There was a moment's silence and then a roar of fire. It was a complete surprise. The raiders were bunched close, and must have had fifty casualties in the first fusillade. They made no attempt to resist, but flung everything away and made for the maize fields.

The first person picked up was the German officer in charge of the enterprise, who had been hit in the thigh. ## Intestinal Troubles of Poultry

Poultry breeders will agree with Dr. A. B. Wickware, Assistant Pathologist to the Health of Animals Branch, Ottawa, that there is nothing more vexing in their pursuit than the problem of how best to deal with the intestinal parasites that infest fowl. Dr. Wickware has spent several years investigating the cause and cure of these pests and has embodied the result of his researches in a bulletin entitled "Intestinal Parasites of Poultry, Their Prevention and Treatment" that can be had free on application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. The doctor first of all describes the disease and methods of identification and then prescribes remedies by which it can be brought under control. When on the evidence of the Veterinary Director General it is stated that the annual loss to the poultry industry of the country from preventable causes amounts in value to $5,000,000, it will be recognized how important and valuable the researches are that have been conducted and the knowledge derived therefrom that is embodied in this bulletin. Three elaborate full page plates minutely illustrating the parasites at various stages help greatly to identification of the troubles and to appreciation of their seriousness.

British Red Cross Appeal

Toronto, Sept 28th, 1917

Mr. R. P. Coulter,
Reeve, Village of Stirling.

Dear Sir:

The British Red Cross has appealed to us once more for assistance in carrying out its beneficent work for our fighting forces. The need for this appeal is amply substantiated by the audited financial reports which have been supplied to us.

The total expenditure of the British Red Cross for the first year of the war (to October 20th, 1915) was approximately $8,500,000. For the second year of the war (to October 20th, 1916) it was slightly over $9,000,000 a year. Today it is approximately $300,000 a week, or approximately $16,000,000 a year. These figures give force to the statement of the Chairman of the Executive. "If Canada fails us in October, we must curtail many of our activities", for the Province of Ontario contributed in 1915—$1,515,000, and in 1916—$1,680,000. The real appeal to us this year is, therefore contained in one sentence, THIS GREAT WORK MUST GO ON.

The plain fact is that Ontario's generous contribution in 1915 and 1916 enabled the British Red Cross to extend its activities so that it can truly be said that never in the history of the world have the measures to protect the health of the fighting forces of any nation been so effective, and never have the preparations been so complete for bringing prompt and efficient relief to men when wounded, and for placing them under the best possible hospital conditions for the saving of life. As a result tens of thousands of our casualties have been able to return to the lines as efficient fighting men, and at least as many have been able to return to their friends whose lives would have been sacrificed without the care of the Red Cross. But, more than that, the condition of our prisoners in Germany is alleviated by the Red Cross in as far as the German Government will permit, and disabled men are helped in many ways to become useful, self-supporting citizens.

When one remembers the millions of men affected, and also the fact that the British Red Cross is the only institution which carries voluntary aid to the sick and wounded of the British forces on land and sea, in every region of the war, it is obvious why this special "Our Day" appeal, on October 18th, concerns all classes of British subjects, whether living in the British Isles, in the Dominions and colonies beyond the seas, or in foreign countries.

We feel that to lay these facts before you is all that is required to secure from your municipality the most generous response which you have ever given to the call of the Motherland for assistance in its Red Cross work.

We believe that every citizen in Ontario has a right to have these facts brought before him, and we would urge upon you the organization of some plan to secure voluntary contributions even if you make a substantial municipal grant in addition to these. In no case, unless indeed it be that of our own Canadian Patriotic Fund, is there a need of anything like the magnitude of the British Red Cross.

Every local branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society will gladly assist in answering this call of the greatest Red Cross agency in the world, but we should greatly regret if your loyal citizens would allow those who are helping the Canadian Red Cross Society to do its work or be responsible for the success of this appeal.

Kindly take the matter up at the very first opportunity and let us know at the earliest possible moment what you are doing to make this appeal the success it ought to be.

The organization of this appeal for the Province of Ontario has been again put in the hands of the Organization of Resources Committee, and all requests for information should be addressed to that Committee. Further, the money will be handled here, as in former years, and the accounts will be audited by the Provincial Auditor.

The enclosed letters from Their Excellencies, the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire, and His Honour, Sir John Hendrie, should be sufficient warrant to you to do everything you can to help.

Yours faithfully,
ALBERT H. ABBOTT,
Secretary.

Complete Service to Ford Owners Everywhere

COURTEOUS attention to your needs wherever you may travel is something you appreciate, and being a Ford owner you can get it. You are always "among friends".

There are more than 700 Ford Dealer Service Stations throughout Canada. These are always within easy reach of Ford owners—for gasoline, oil, tires, repairs, accessories, expert advice or motor adjustments.

The cost of Ford Service is as remarkably low as the cost of the car itself. Nineteen of the most called for parts cost only $5.40. Just compare this with the cost of spare parts for other cars and you will realize the advantage of owning a Ford.

Bill Smith a country shopkeeper went to the city to buy goods. They were sent immediately, and reached home before he did. When the boxes were delivered, Mrs. Smith, who was keeping the shop, uttered a scream, seized a hatchet, and began frantically to open the largest one, "What's the matter, Sarah?" said one of the bystanders who had watched her in amazement. Pale and faint Mrs. Smith pointed to the inscription on the box. It read: "Bill inside."

The crop of barn fire throughout Ontario is far too abundant, according to the reports which are being filed with the Provincial Fire Marshall. Mr. Huston stated yesterday that the barn fire reported during August represented a loss of a quarter of a million dollars and during the last few weeks the money losses have been considerably increased by reason of the fact that in many cases the entire storable portion of the year's crops have gone up in flames, owing to spontaneous combustion in the mows, where insufficiently dried crops have heated to the point of ignition during the frequent warm spells which have occurred since Mapping the United States.

Beginning nearly forty years ago to construct accurate topographic and geologic maps of both the known and the unexplored regions of the United States, the United States geological survey has speedily progressed with this part of its work until topographic maps of 40 per cent. of the country are now published, besides maps for large areas in Alaska and Hawaii. Extensive areas have also been covered by geologic maps, and all the work from beginning to the present day is ready to the printing of the finished map is done by this government bureau. Other activities of the survey are the classification of public lands, the annual collection of mineral statistics of the United States and investigations of the nation's natural resources. It is the publication of scientific and technical reports containing over 20,000 pages annually.

During the last thirty years over $15,000,000 has been spent by the Geological survey in geologic and topographic mapping.

GREAT ACTIVITY BACK OF LINES

Men in Trenches Need Behind Them Steady Work of Many Units

Ottawa, October 8th.—Since the press gives most publicity to the soldiers who do the actual fighting, the public is apt to lose the sense of proportion with regard to the Canadian forces overseas. Few laymen realize, for instance, that there are men behind the lines of the Canadian forces who are engaged in no less than twenty-five distinct branches of the service, each one essential for the welfare and upkeep of the soldiers actually in the trenches.

Behind the lines there are, for instance, reserve infantry battalions and other reinforcements, forestry corps, railway troops, entrenching battalions, labor battalions, railroad supply detachments, salvage companies, field butchers, field bakeries, depot units of supply, reserve parks, casualty clearing stations, hospitals, both stationary and general, depots and laboratories, dental corps, mobile veterinary sections and veterinary hospitals, ordnance corps, army pay corps, training establishments, headquarters, depots, offices, camps, etc.

All these various units require constant attention and supplies, besides reinforcements of manpower. If they are allowed to weaken, the effect is soon evident at the front, where the enemy watches for any chance to strike a vital blow.

Stirling W. I.

The regular meeting of the W. I. was held in the Library October 4th, with an attendance of twenty.

The collecting and packing of waste paper was arranged for. This will be called for at the various homes this week or next.

The ladies are asked also to contribute rags as they will be collected and sold.

Food Pledge cards were discussed and arrangements made for their distribution. It was decided to hold a "Soldiers Shower" at an early date.

Business discussions having taken so much time the programme was laid over.

Programme Com., for November will be Mrs. Faulkner and Mrs. S. Nolan.

HYMENEAL

BAILEY—ELLIOTT

A very pretty wedding took place in the Methodist Church, Stirling, on Wednesday, October 10th, when Edna, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Elliott was married to Mr. Wilmot Bailey son of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Bailey, Rawdon Tp.

The church was beautifully decorated by Mrs. C. F. Wait and Miss Alma Watts for the occasion, with yellow "dums and ferns. The bride looking very sweet and winsome in a most becoming tailored suit of French Broadcloth, Burgundy shade, wearing white Fox fur and a smart velvet hat with sprays of velvet roses and silver trimming, entered the church with her father. Her bouquet was of delicate pink bride roses tied with satin streamers. She was attended by her sister, Miss Hazel Elliott who wore a pretty gown of Oxford grey broadcloth and large velvet hat to match. She carried a bouquet of deep pink roses. Mr. Ewart Bailey, brother of the groom acted as best man.

The ceremony in the presence of a large number of friends and acquaintances, was performed by Rev. Mr. Howard assisted by Rev. H. Neal of Toronto University. Mr. G. G. Thrasher and Mr. Harold Martin acted as ushers. Mrs. McLennan of Peterboro played the wedding march and during the signing of the register Mrs. King of Peterboro soloist of Trinity Methodist Church, sang with great expression "Love's Coronation". Owing to the absence at the front of the elder brother of the bride, the guests were confined to the immediate members of the family. After the ceremony they motored to the home of the bride's parents where they were entertained at luncheon.

The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful Columbia Gramophone, to the bridesmaid an onyx and pearl ring, and a sari pin to the best man.

The bride was the recipient of a large number of handsome gifts, including several substantial cheques, (one from her brother, Harold overseas).

A Bible was given them by the Church and presented by the recording steward, Mr. T. G. Chute.

The bridal party motored to Belleville where Mr. and Mrs. Bailey took the train to spend a honeymoon in Toronto and other Western points.

They have the best wishes of their many friends for their future happiness.

JOHNSTON—MEYERS

A very interesting event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. Meyers on Wednesday morning, October 10th, when their only daughter, Lela May was united in marriage to Mr. Jas. N. Johnston. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. D. P. Knox.

The bride entered the drawing room, leaning on the arm of her father to the strains of the wedding march played by her cousin, Miss Hazel Sandercock of Sidney, and took her place beneath an arch of ferns and roses. The bride was attired in a gown of cream bridal satin and wore a veil caught with orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of white roses and was unattended.

After the ceremony and congratulations a wedding breakfast was served, only immediate friends being present.

Lack of time prevented the usual toasts but the Rev. Knox in a few well chosen words spoke of the esteem in which the young couple were held and all heads were then bowed while God's blessing was implored to rest upon them and go with them through a long and happy life.

The bride then donned her wedding suit of navy blue serge with hat to match and they were motored to Trenton where they took the train for Ottawa. On their return they will reside in our vicinity.

The groom's gift to the bride was a silver tea service and to the pianist an emerald brooch.

The bride received many beautiful presents, among them being a handsome mission table and chairs to match from her father and mother, and an Aladdin Lamp from the groom's parents.

The Greatest Foe Disaster

On Sunday the Tribune printed an article discussing the casualty lists of the war on their military side. But there is another and even more illuminating aspect to this discussion of losses during the conflict—that which bears upon the lists of battle. It is an examination of this phase which demonstrates the extent of the disaster to Germany of the present war.

The German permanent losses—that is, the number of Germans killed, crippled and permanently removed from the battle line—amounted for the first three years of war to 4,000,000. The figures are not those of the French general staff, but there is no reason to question them, as the sources of information of all general staffs permit them to know the losses of their forces and their own losses serve as a guide. At the moment of the German advance, including the younger men who would reach military age before the end of 1918, a little more than 11,000,000. This figure represents the fit, not the aggregate male population.

For three years, then, the German loss has been rather more than a third of her able-bodied males—36 per cent. to be exact. If the German permanent loss for the current year should be what it was in each of the first two years—that is, 1,500,000 (the Russian collapse lessened it last year, because it not only reduced casualties suffered from Russian armies, but slowed down the Allied offensive)—aggregate permanent loss of the Germans for four years would be 5,500,000—that is, 50 per cent. of their man power.

Now, in the first three years the British loss was somewhat around a million; it was less rather than more. This represents a 12 per cent. loss in a military population of 7,500,000. In this is just a third of the German loss. In other words the blood tax upon British manhood has not been a third what it has been upon the Germans in the first three years of war. Now, suppose the British should lose another million next year—an extreme estimate. The total loss would then be 2,000,000, or just over a quarter of the man power of Britain.

If you say that four years of war will cost Germany half of her able-bodied men, that it will remove them permanently from industry, while it removes only a quarter of the man power of her greatest commercial rival, you will state the probable truth, and you will indicate the real extent of German disaster. The British situation is, too, improved by the fact that Britain has nearly 15,000,000 whites in her colonies, which means a further population of able-bodied males of 2,500,000 in the empire, less the colonial casualties, which has not been a third what the half-million mark in permanent losses.

At the present time Germany holds no British territory, while Britain holds a million square miles of German colonies. Britain has four German prisoners to one British held in Germany. Granted that the war restored the geographical conditions of 1914, the two great commercial rivals would face each other in far different posture than before the war. Of Germany's great wealth-producing population of males, half would be gone, as against a quarter for the British. Add this to the lost markets in enemy countries and, by contrast, the improved British position in countries now become allies, and there is a measure of the inevitable British victory.

Germany has only one other great commercial rival—the United States—and we shall end the fourth year of the war with a casualty list, at the greatest conceivable point, of not above a hundred thousand. This is less than 1 per cent., against 50 for the Germans.

The Germans have been able, by using their prisoners and by turning the populations in occupied districts into slaves, to put a far larger percentage of their male population upon the firing line than their western opponents. This has enabled them to hold out, and still maintain them to hold out, but it means a vastly greater permanent loss in German man. All Americans recall that the South with its negro slave population, was able to mobilize almost its entire manhood in the civil war, but this manhood was ultimately well nigh destroyed, and the South has hardly recovered in half a century.

The real defeat of Germany must be measured by the death lists, by the numbers permanently removed from industry. Another year of war will mean not less than 50 per cent., and there is no certainty that next year will be the last year of the contest. New York Tribune.

PRESERVING PEARS.

Here is an Excellent Old-Time Pennsylvania Recipe.

One and one half pound of pears to one pound of sugar.
Put the pears, cut them in half.
Put enough water on the sugar to cover it and boil it for 15 minutes.
Then put in the pears and boil them for three hours before they are cooked.
Cut up lemons in thin slices and add in the proportion of two lemons to nine pounds of pears. Put up in air-tight jars.

This is an excellent method of using up the many rather tasteless pears that abound in the fall.

BAKED PEARS.

Peel ripe pears. Cut in half. Pack in layers in a stoneware jar. Sprinkle each layer with sugar, adding now and then a pinch of grated nutmeg. In the bottom of the jar place a small cup of water to prevent burning. Fit on a close cover and sit in a moderate oven and bake three hours. Leave unopened in the oven over night. Very good eaten cold with cream.

TO PRESERVE PEACHES WHOLE.

Make a syrup of five pounds of sugar and five cups of water and bring it to the boil. When boiling put in ten or twelve pounds of peaches—not pared. Boil slowly for 20 minutes. Fill the jars with the fruit and then pour over them the boiling hot syrup. Overfill the jars, close quickly.

WEAK BOYS AND GIRLS

It is a mistake to think that anaemia is only a girl's complaint. Girls probably show the effect of weak, watery blood more plainly than boys. Delayed development, pale faces, headaches, palpitation, and a feeling of listlessness call attention to weak blood in the case of girls. But many boys in their teens grow thin and "weedy" and have pimples on the face, showing that they have not enough blood. The anaemic boy is just as likely to become a victim of consumption as the pale, breathless girl with her headaches and worn-out look. Let the boy in this condition catch cold and he will lose his strength and his health becomes precarious.

To prevent serious disaster to those of the rising generation, let both boys and girls be given the new rich blood which Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are famous the world over for making. When giving these pills watch how soon the appetite returns and how the languid girl or the weak boy becomes full of activity and high spirits. Remember that the boy has to develop, too. If he is to make a strong, hearty man, give both the boys and girls a full development through the new, rich blood Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make. You will then see active boys and girls, instead of weakly children, around you. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all medicine leaders or may be obtained by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Surprises in Chinese.

"Some people," said an American consul to China, "live as long as twenty years in China and never learn more than a dozen Chinese expressions. But not so, my little girl. She used to meet me each evening with some new Chinese expression which she had learned during the day. Now the Chinese language, like the Japanese, is full of honorifics, and I fondly imagined one evening, when my little girl greeted me with some new expression, that she was saying something like this, 'How comes the honorable personage, my father.'"

"To verify my guess I asked a little Chinese boy to translate. At first he was rather backward, but I urged him until he finally said, 'How comes the honorable personage, my father.'"

"Your excellency, your daughter says, 'How comes the old wooden headed bottle.' Yes, there are some surprises in Chinese."

A Sheaf of Maxims.

The end of reading (as of everything else we do) should be self-improvement.

Though you think all the world's a stage, learn to act well your part. Education which does not promote conduct bears within it a mortal stain.

It takes time and pains to learn what it is most profitable to do. The spirit and love of dogmatism characterize the imperfectly educated.

Live thy religion; then, shalt thou not need argue or dispute about it. We begin with studying how to learn and learn with learning how to study. Principle is more than knowledge; a loving heart is better than much gold.

If to be just like others is your aim, you are predestined to be inferior. To do our work well, we must believe in the worth of the work we are to do.

Our self-respect is largely due to the love we get in childhood and youth. In the best of poetry is found the richest expression of deepest thought.—Archbishop Spalding.

GENERAL CADORNA.

Distinguished Record of Italian Army's Chief of Staff.

General Luigi Cadorna, the chief of the general staff of the Italian army, whose recent successes against the Austrians have made him one of the great outstanding figures of the war, reached his 67th birthday anniversary this week. It was in an old mansion at Pallanza that the now famous commander first saw the light of day on Sept. 4, 1850. His family belongs to the oldest Italian aristocracy and has long been celebrated in a military way. His father, who was a count, was a brilliant general, led the Italians against the Austrians in the war of 1848, and had the honor of heading the troops which restored Rome to Italy in 1870.

At the age of ten the Gen. Cadorna of to-day entered the Cadet School of Milan, where he is said to have distinguished himself for his intelligence and vivacity of character. After several years of hard study he passed to the Military College at Turin, and from there entered the Italian army. He was graduated from the military college at the age of eighteen, standing first in his class, and began his active military career as a second lieutenant to the general staff. With this grade he entered upon a course of instruction at the Staff College and while a keen student of everything bearing on military matters, he spent his spare time in reading history and philosophy. During his term at the Staff College he served in both the infantry and the artillery.

Upon leaving the college he was appointed to the staff of the division of Florence, which was then commanded by his father. He was made a captain in 1875 and a major in 1883. During the ensuing ten years, until he attained the rank of colonel in 1892, there took place several important manoeuvres, in which Major Cadorna took a prominent part. It was during this period, also, that he acquired the exact knowledge of Italy's northern frontiers, which has proved him in his good stead during the present conflict. It is true his father, while in command of the army corps at Turin, had given some attention to these studies and had imparted the results to his son, but the latter has acquired such a perfect knowledge of all that pertained to the defence of the frontier as to amaze all of his colleagues in the army, being able to place with exactness every valley, pass, road and other strategic position, without even a reference to books or maps.

After serving six years as colonel of the famous Tenth Corps of Bersaglieri, Cadorna was raised to the rank of major-general. At the time of his promotion he wrote an excellent pamphlet on tactics for the officers of his brigade. The book soon became known to all of the Italian military commanders and was much sought after, for it was recognized as embracing the fundamental rules for infantry training. In its later editions this pamphlet is acknowledged as an authority, and when General Cadorna became chief of the general staff of the army, soon after the outbreak of the present war, he had the satisfaction of seeing his little book, although written sixteen years ago, universally regarded as the best work on the subject.

General Cadorna has published several other military works all of which are characterized by a clearness and lucidity which denote the great military knowledge of the writer.

The general has a reputation not only as a brilliant tactician, but as a able leader of men, in whom the soldiers have the fullest and most complete confidence. He has a tall and elegant figure, with an ease in his movement that indicates the practiced horseman, and the quick eye of the soldier born to command.

Coupled with a keen and acute intelligence, Cadorna possesses a strong and tenacious character, to such an extent as to make his preconceptions inviolable in his results, in spite of all difficulties and obstacles.

Substitute for Alcohol.

The need of some stimulus has so far been a persistent force in the development of society and the instinct for association in a common place of meeting under exhilarating conditions is a part of man's nature. Alcohol drinks and the public house have proved to be easy accessible means to meet these ends. Where these social requirements have been overlooked or neglected, the enforcement of prohibitory laws against the saloon has been extremely difficult. Where they have been met, or substantially ministered to by other agencies, alcoholic excesses have been materially reduced.

It has long since been noticed that countries using liberally such infusions as tea, coffee or cocoa have been able to combat more successfully the excessive use of alcoholic liquors. It is, therefore, significant that the recent meeting of the National Coffee Roasters' association announcement was made that the consumption of coffee had largely increased in those states which have in recent years gone into the prohibition column. The association considered the advisability of establishing coffee houses in the more thickly populated cities of the country in competition with the saloons.

The development of tea, coffee and cocoa houses, in connection with which might be found other accessories of social intercourse, would satisfy reasonably well some of these human cravings which operate powerfully in society and are not met by the moving picture shows, the recreational centres, the open forum, etc.—Independent.

The Larger Vote.

Last election night the leading bon-vivant of a certain town proceeded joyously and faithfully to go in for strong drink on a larger scale than was for his own best interests. His travels then took him to the headquarters of the republican country committee, where he sat and listened to the election returns. All night long he heard the precinct figures counted off—many for Hank Hicks and so many for Bill Jones for this or that office.

Then he started homeward, steering his course along a street that was rough, as it seemed to him, like a sea. As one great billow pushed him against the plate-glass front of a restaurant, he glanced in at the signs that gave the prices of various food dishes offered in that caravansary. He read:

"Pork and apple sauce, 25. Ham and eggs, 35."
"Hurrah for ham and eggs," he shouted, as he continued on his way.—Everybody's Magazine.

GIRL ON THE FARM.

Why Not Give Her Some Attention as Well as the Boy?

In recent years the problem of keeping the boy on the farm has been thought serious enough to arouse considerable discussion.

The farmer has been told that he should provide the most modern agricultural machinery in order to obviate the hard labor of farming and of scientific agriculture, that he should send his boys to a good school, keep the boys interested, that he should send a certain portion of the farm for the boy and permit him to keep the profit from his operation, and he has been told many other things, in all of which the importance of the boy to the farm was emphasized and plain suggested to make his lot a little easier and more promising. The county agent has interested himself in the problem by organizing boys' corn growing and other agricultural contests.

But how about keeping the girl on the farm? The girl does not ordinarily do the heavy field work, but her services in "home-making, cooking and mending as well as in butter-making, milking, caring for garden and chickens, which tasks usually fall to her lot, are surely valuable enough to warrant the greatest consideration. Any discussion of the problem of keeping the girl on the farm is infrequent.—Indianapolis News.

Seven Bells.

Everybody who knows anything about nautical matters understands the methods of keeping time at sea—eight bells every eight hours. From 6 to 8 in the evening is the second dogwatch. On British ships seven bells (half past 7) of the second dogwatch are never struck. All other ships, even the American, strike these bells. During the Napoleonic wars there was a great mutiny in the British navy. The crews of the fleets lying at Spithead and the Nore agreed to rise en masse and against their officers. The signal upon which seven bells of the second dogwatch. The mutiny actually began at the arranged time, but failed, the ringleaders being executed. Ever since then seven bells of the second dogwatch has never been struck on British ships, naval or mercantile.

Enoch Arden.

"Briefly stated," we explained, "the story of Enoch Arden was about as follows: He went to sea and was shipwrecked on an inhabited island where he remained for several years. When at last he was rescued Mr. Arden put out for home with considerable rapidity, only to find that during his absence Mrs. Arden had married again. What do you suppose his subsequent action?"

"Hard to figure," replied Mr. Gap Johnson, of Rumpus Ridge, Ark., who had listened with deep interest to the recital. "You can't tell which way a toad will jump when you poke him, and folks is just peculiar. Probably he took a shot at his wife's second husband or else borrowed enough money off him to get back to his uninhabited island and I wouldn't bet a nickel on either horn of what-d'ye-call it!"

Modified Swear Words.

When Laura first went to school she associated with some older children, who taught her to say things she had never heard at home. The little girl's mother, who took her to task for saying "naughty words," was surprised and somewhat gratified to hear Laura exclaim: "Darn it—I mean blame it all!"

Minard's Liniment Co., Limited.

Gentlemen,—Last winter I received great benefit from the use of MINARD'S LINIMENT in a severe attack of La Grippe, and I have frequently proved it to be very effective in cases of inflammation.

A Fresh Water Manatee.

The New York Zoological society now has on exhibition at the aquarium in New York city the first freshwater manatee of the Upper Amazon that has ever been shown in this country. The specimen is only five feet long, and therefore is considerably smaller than the thousand-pound brackish-water manatees from Florida that were brought to the aquarium several years ago. Two other characteristics that distinguish it from other manatees are the small flippers and the white breast. Like other manatees it turns on its back when the pool is drawn off for cleaning until the water again becomes deep enough to float it. The manatee is often called the sea cow because of its fondness for grass. At any rate it is a sort of grass that grows in the water. Its principal diet at the aquarium is eel-grass and a loaf of bread a day. The Amazon manatee is much more active than its Florida cousin, and often swims rapidly round its pool. It is also very peckish and will come to the edge of the pool any time to have its back rubbed.—Youth's Companion.

Restaurants are now employing the artist who sliced the meat for the sandwich to cut the pie.—Toledo Blade.

Real Lace Aprons and Hats Made with Floral Prettiness.

The latest of summer frocks have been...
To make nicely-flavored butter with the butter-milk well worked out, add a tablespoonful of clear honey to every three pounds of butter. The presence of the honey cannot be recognized, yet the taste of the butter is improved by it.

Worth Knowing.

To prevent ants getting into a refrigerator or on a table, set the legs of such pieces of furniture on small squares of sticky fly paper.
To keep the fingernails clean when polishing the stove put and underneath the edge and under the nails, and the blacking will not disfigure them.
To dry a one-piece frock and have it keep its shape, slip it on a wooden coat hanger that you have first covered with a couple of folds of old muslin.
To remove marks on paint made by scratching matches thereon, rub them with a cut lemon.

"Firebrand River."

The Colorado River was reached by two of the early Spanish explorers from Mexico in 1540. One of the explorers was Melchior Diaz, who came across country and went only a short distance above Yuma, and the other was Hernando de Alarcon, who came in boats from Western Mexico. Owing to the custom of the natives of carrying firebrands in winter with which to warm themselves, Diaz named the stream Rio del Tizon (Firebrand River), a name more distinctive than the present one, which often causes considerable confusion because no part of the river is in the State of Colorado.—Santa Fe Guide Book, Superintendent of Documents.

Excusable.

In a confidential little talk to a group of medical students an eminent physician took up the extremely important matter of correct diagnosis of the maximum fee.

"The best rewards," he said, "come, of course, to the established specialist. For instance, I charge $25 for a call at the residence, $10 for an office consultation, and $5 for a telephone consultation."

There was an appreciative and envious silence, and then a voice from the back of the amphitheatre, slightly thickened spoke.

"Doc," it said, "how much do you charge a fellow for passing you on the street?"—New York Evening Post.

Guest Dessert.

Hopes Women Will Adopt This Habit As Well As Men

Glass of hot water each morning helps us look and feel clean, sweet, fresh.

Happy, bright, alert—vigorous and vivacious—a good clear skin; a natural, rosy complexion and freedom from illness are assured only by clean, healthy blood. If only every woman and likewise every man could realize the wonders of the morning inside bath, what a gratifying change would take place.

Instead of the thousands of sickly, anaemic-looking men, women and girls with pasty or muddy complexions; instead of the multitudes of "nerve wrecks," "rundowns," "brain fags" and pessimists we should see a virile, optimistic throng of rosy-cheeked people everywhere.

An inside bath is had by drinking each morning before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour fermentations and poisons, thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Those subject to sick headache, biliousness, nasty breath, rheumatism, colds; and particularly those who have a pallid, sallow complexion and who are constipated very often, are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store which will cost but a trifle but is sufficient to demonstrate the quick and remarkable change in both health and appearance awaiting those who practice internal sanitation. We must remember that inside cleanliness is more important than outside, because the skin does not absorb impurities to contaminate the blood, while the pores in the thirty feet of bowels do.

Necessary Farm Equipment

MORE and more the Ford car is looked upon by progressive farmers as necessary farm equipment, the same as the plow, the hay-rake, the drill, the mower, the harrow and other labor and time-saving machinery.

A farmer with a Ford car can dispense with one or two of his horses and make the trips to town, railway station, creamery, or to the neighbours in one-third the time. In fact there is no farm machine made that will save the busy farmer and his busy wife so much valuable time as a Ford. And it's so easy to take care of—far easier than a horse. No bed to make, or hay and oats to get, no harnessing and unharnessing, and no stables to clean. The Ford practically takes care of itself.

Ask any farmer who owns a Ford if he would ever again try to get along without it. His answer will hasten your decision to own one.

Things of the Past.

Betty had been punished. Her aunt did not know that, and when she came into the room and found Betty sitting disconsolately before the window she said: "Why, look at our little Betty. She looks ready to cry. What is go ing to happen, I wonder?"

Betty looked up and then said sol emnly, "It has happened."—Exchange

Exercise Promoter.

"You say my husband needs exer cise, but he won't take any, and I don't know how to make him," said a woman plaintively. "Is there any way in which we can force him to exer cise?"

"Did you ever try on windy days making him wear a hat that will be sure to blow off?" asked the doctor.—Buffalo Express.

Oh, That's Different.

"Who was that chap who just said 'Hello' to you?"

"That's the man who does most of my bill collecting."

"He wasn't very respectful, consider ing that you are his boss."

"Who said I was his boss? That fel low is employed by my creditors."—Exchange.

No Increment?

It was the first anniversary of the Pnoodies' wedding day, and the good wife had prepared a special dinner in honor of the occasion.

"Priscilla," said Pnoodies after the feasting was over, "that was the best meal I ever ate. You are worth your weight in gold."

"A year ago today, Claude," Mrs. Pnoodies answered, "you told me I was worth my weight in diamonds."

"Did I? Well, dear, this is your first annual — er — revaluation." — Chicago Tribune.

Throne Jewels.

In the "gold pantry" at Windsor en suite, one of England's chief royal palaces, is the gold tiger's head taken from Tipu Sahib's throne in 1789. It is life size, and the teeth and eyes are of rock crystal. Another relic captured at the same time is the jeweled bird called the mma, shaped like a pigeon, with a peacock tail. The feathers blaze with precious stones, and a great emerald hangs from its breast. Ac cording to an old Indian legend, who ever owns this bird will rule India.

KINDNESS.

When we consider the results it brings I wonder why it is we are not all kinder than we are. How easily it is done! How in stantaneously it acts! How in fallibly it is remembered!—Drummond.

Pay Will Be The Same

Men selected under the Military Service Act will receive the same pay as those now on active service receive. Pay will start from the time a man reports for duty. Money from the Patriotic Fund and Separation Allowance will also be available for selected men.

Canadian soldiers are well paid. The fact that wages in Canada are generally higher than those paid in Europe is recognized in the system of remuneration for men on active service. Clothing and all equipment in addition to food is also supplied to the Canadian soldier, leaving him with no expense except personal incidentals.

The rate of pay for men in the Canadian Expeditionary Force, other than commissioned officers, is as follows:

	Pay	Field Allowance
Warrant Officers	$2.00	30 cts.
Regimental Sergt.-Major, if not a Warrant Officer	1.85	20 "
Quartermaster-Sergeants	1.40	20 "
Orderly Room Clerks	1.50	20 "
Orderly Room Sergeants	1.50	20 "
Pay Sergeants	1.50	20 "
Squad, Batt., or Co. Sergt.-Major	1.60	20 "
Colour-Sergeant or Staff-Sergeant	1.60	20 "
Squad, Batt., or Co. Q.M.S.	1.50	20 "
Sergeants	1.35	15 "
Lance-Sergeants	1.15	15 "
Corporals	1.10	10 "
Lance-Corporals	1.05	10 "
Bombardiers, or Second Corporals	1.05	10 "
Trumpeters, Buglers, and Drummers	1.00	10 "
Privates, Gunners, Drivers	1.00	10 "
Sappers, Batmen, etc.	1.00	10 "

As in the case of those already gone overseas, Separation Allowances will be available for those dependent for livelihood upon selected men. The Separation Allowance is $20.00 per month for the rank and file, $25.00 for sergeants and staff-sergeants and $30.00 for warrant officers. The experience is that many men can afford to assign half their pay to dependents, in addition.

A considerable number of men who have enlisted in the Canadian forces have found themselves better off under the army rate of pay, which is granted in addition to board, lodging, clothing, equipment, transportation, etc., than they were while in civilian positions. Their wants are provided for, and they receive a steady addition to the bank account each month.

Issued by The Military Service Council.

"BELA"

"I don't care what you think," she retorted.

"Tell me one thing," said Jack. "What did you come here for first off?"

"Yes, I tell you what I came for," the girl said with a direct look. "I want to see what white men like. My father, my white man, I never see him. I think good man, good to women. So I think all white men good to women. I think no harm, I come here. I play trick for to make fun and be friends. Now I know of white men not like my father. Now I look out for myself."

Big Jack had the grace to cowl shamefacedly and look away. "You're dead right, sister. We got in wrong. I'm sorry. These other fellows, they're sorry, too. We made it up together to tell you we were sorry. Give us a chance to show you we ain't no dumb rotten."

The girl dimpled like a white woman. No walked look then.

"All right," she said. "I come to-morrow early. I be your friend."

When the girl, who was usually sowed off in her dugout from the mouth of the creek. The wind helped carry her in the direction she wanted to go, and the view of rain hid her might be looking out from the shack.

Her Indian up-bringing had taught her to disregard bodily comfort. Streaming like a mermaid, she crouched in her canoe, paddling with the regularity of a machine.

In two hours she had reached the other shore. By this time it had cleared, and the late sun was sending long, golden rays down the lake.

She found a scene if industry in the village, for the fishing had started in earnest. The women were splitting and cleaning the fish on racks, and hanging the fish on racks to cure. In the smoke of the fires, no surprise was elicited by her arrival. Bela had always gone and come as she chose.

Outside Charley's tepee she found her mother, Loseta's eyes lighted up at the sight of her, but she said nothing. She followed her into the tepee and unexpectedly seized and kissed her. They were mutually embarrassed. Bela had not learned to kiss among the tribe. Charley came in scowling.

"The fish are running," he said. "Every body is working now. If you not work you get no fish."

"Keep your fish," said Bela.

In that tepee she was mum as to her adventures. Having changed her clothes in her own little bower in the pines, she sought out Muskoosis and told him her story.

Muskoosis was a little sore. He listened, smoking calmly and tending his share of the fish hanging in the smoke. Meanwhile the sun went down in troubled crimson splendor over the pines, presaging more squalls.

When she came to the end he said sententiously: "You foolish go alone. You want a man."

Bela was mum.

"What you want of me now?" he asked.

"Grease for the wound," said Bela.

"A little red for myself," said Bela. "All right. I give you. You got back?"

"To-night."

"I go with you," suggested Muskoosis.

Bela shook her head a little sullenly.

She had good reasons, but it was difficult to explain them.

"I got go alone," she said.

"All right," replied Muskoosis, hurriedly. "Why you want talk to me?"

Bela glanced at him appealingly.

"You speak me good words," she said. "You much my friend. But I go alone. I can't tell it good. When I alone I keep myself much secret like you tell me. They not see me come and go; think I got magic. They scare of me."

"All right," repeated Muskoosis. "I lak sleep in my tepee. What you got to do when you go back?"

"When the bishop come I got marry the cook," said Bela, calmly.

"I'm," grunted Muskoosis. "Is he the biggest?"

"No," answered Bela. "He little. I watch him. He got strongest eyes."

"So?"

"He is a pretty man," she said, suddenly lowering her head. "He make me want him bad. His eyes lak the sky at tam wild roses come. Fair bright like milk skin. He has kindness for women lak my father got."

"I'm-m!" growled Muskoosis. "You talk lak white woman."

"Tell me how to get him," said Bela, simply.

Muskoosis affected scorn. "We! All tam ask me what to do. Then go do what you lak, anyhow."

"You have good words," she put in meekly.

"Tell you before," grumbled Muskoosis. "Don't let him see you want him or he never want you."

"I think he not want me much," said Bela, dejectedly. "Not lak at 'er men?"

"Wait a while," encouraged Muskoosis. "Hard wood slow to catch, but burn longer. I tell you again—keep your mouth shut. Don't let anything out. If 'er men think you want the cook, they kill him my be. White man sometime crazy like that. You must all sum mask friends with all. Ask much question. Watch them well. When you know their ways, you know what to do. I am by maybe you get your man to leave the others. Then it is easy."

"I do all you tell me," promised Bela.

"Come home to-morrow night," he said.

She rebelled at this. "No. I lak stay there. I can't be paddling over every day. Too far."

"Are you a fool?" asked Muskoosis, exasperated. "Where you going stay at night?"

"I got little cache by the creek," she replied. "They no good in the bush. Can't see nothing. I fool them all I lak. They never find me."

"It's a dangerous game," advised Muskoosis. "It's a dangerous game."

"I got my little gun," she returned, tapping her breast. "They plenty scare of me now."

As soon as he cleared up Young Joe casually remarked that he guessed he'd wash his shirt and let it dry before the fire while he slept. Big Jack and Shand both allowed that it was a good idea, and presently the three of them were squatting together by the creek, sousing their garments in the icy water.

Later Jack and Joe made a dicker to cut each other's hair. Shand, hearing of this, was obliged to part with a necktie to get Jack to cut his also. A general shave ended the ablutions. This was remarkable, for Joe had shaved only the day before.

The fellow hadn't ought to let himself get careless up in the bush," he opined.

There was a great beating and shaking of clothes, and a combined cleaning of the shack. Sam made a broom out of willow branches. Jack cut some poles out of which he designed to make a chair after supper.

"She's got to have something to sit in when she's watching beside Husky's bed like," he said.

It did not occur to him that Bela had probably never before in her life sat in a chair.

"You are damned lucky to get her to nurse you after you brought it on yourself," Joe said to Husky.

Husky was now looking forward to her return no less than the others. He had taken a turn for the better, and no longer thought of dying.

After supper a high degree of amity prevailed in the shack. Joe and Shand helped with the chair, and then they all planned to make a table next day.

"Shand, lend a hand with this piece while I drive a nail, will you?" requested Jack, politely.

"Sure thing! Say, this is going to be out of sight! You certainly have a good knack of making things, Jack."

"Oh, so-so. I ought to have a flat piece to put on the seat."

"I'll go out to the stable and see if I can find a box-cover."

"You stay here. I'll go," said Joe. Sam, washing the dishes, harkened to this, and smiled a little grimly to himself, wondering how long it would last.

They retired early. The bed was given up to Husky, and the other four rolled up in their blankets across the room like a row of mummies. Calm brooded over the shack throughout the night.

Sam had not had so much time as the others to make himself presentable the night before, so he got up extra early for that purpose, issuing out of the shack with soap, towel, razor, and glass, the first thing he beheld on rounding the shack was Bela.

She was kneeling on a piece of wood to protect her knees from the wet ground, tearing and rolling some pieces of cotton for bandages.

She was dressed differently to-day—all in buckskin.

The newly risen sun was behind her, shooting misty beams across a lake of mother-of-pearl. The artist, latent in every man, arrested Sam, forcing him to wonder and admire.

Bela looked up calmly. "I waitin' till me men get up," she remarked.

"I'll call them," he offered, making a move to turn.

"Let them sleep," commanded Bela.

"It is early."

Sam became uncomfortably conscious of his unkempt condition. "You caught me unawares," he said. "I haven't washed up yet."

She glanced at him sidelong. That he knew it, he did not appear at all gathered at a disadvantage with his fair hair tousled and his shirt open at the throat.

"I don't care," she said, with a child's air of unconcern.

Presently she caught sight of the razor. "You got hair grow on your chin, too? That is funny thing. O'er day I watch the curly head one scrape his face. He not see me. What for you want hair scrape your face?"

Sam blushed. "Oh, it looks like a hobo if you don't," he stammered.

She repeated the word with a comical face. "What is hobo?"

"Oh, a tramp, a loafer, a bum."

"I on'erstan," she said. "We got hobbos, too. My mother's 'oshan is a hobo."

She looked at his chin again. "Bish-hop Lajalness, not scrape his chin," she stated. "Got long hair, so. He is fine man."

Sam, not knowing exactly what to say, remained silent. He found it difficult to accommodate himself to a conversational Bela. She was much changed in the morning light from the inscrutable figure of the firsides. Ten times more human and charming, it is true, but that account the most disconcerting to a young man without experience of the sex. Moreover, her beauty took his breath away. Bela watches his blushes with interest.

"Can't make your face hot?" she asked. "There is no fire."

He could not but believe she was making fun of him. "Ahh! cut it out!" he growled.

"White man funny," said Bela, rolling her strips of cotton.

"Funny!" repeated Sam. "How about you? Hanged if you're not the strangest thing I ever came across."

Obviously this did not displease her. She merely shrugged.

He forgot some of her self-consciousness in his curiosity. "Where do you come from?" he asked, drawing nearer. "Where do you go to?"

"You wonderful creature!" his eyes added.

"No magic," she said, calmly. "I just do it."

"Why wouldn't you tell them how you got out night before last?"

"Maybe I want to get out again."

"Will you tell me?"

She glanced at him provokingly through her lashes. "Will I tell you? You just go tell your partners."

"You're no partners of mine," said Sam, bitterly. "I should think you could see that. I'm just their cook. I work for my grub. They don't let me forget it, either."

"Why you come to this country?" asked Bela.

"I want a piece of land the same as they do. But I've got to work to earn an outfit before I can settle."

"When you get your land what you do then?" she asked.

"Build a house, raise crops."

"White man all want land to dig," said Bela, wonderingly.

"You've got to have land," explained Sam, eagerly. "You've got to have something of your own. Outside, a poor man has no chance nowadays but to slave away his best years working for a rich man."

Bela studied his face, trying to grasp these ideas so new to her.

"He woked you get out of the shack?" Sam asked her again.

"I tell you," she said, abruptly. "I climb the chimney."

"By George!" he exclaimed, admiringly.

"It was easy. But I get all black. I am all day cleaning myself after."

"You're a wonder!" he cried.

"Travelling about alone and all. Are all the girls up here like you?"

"No," replied Bela, quaintly. "There is nobody lak me. I am Bela."

"Where do you live?"

"She looked at him again through her lashes. "Maybe I tell you when I know you better."

"Tell me now," he pleaded.

She shook her head.

Sam frowned. "There's generally no good behind a mystery," he remarked.

"Maybe," said Bela. "But I not goin' tell all I know."

There was something highly extraordinary to a young man in her cool, smiling air. He stood looking at her, feeling oddly flat and baffled.

Suddenly she turned her head to listen. "They gettin' up now," she said quietly. "Go and wash."

"Can't I speak to you if I am the cook?" he demanded.

"Go and wash," she repeated. "I don't want no more trouble."

Sam shrugged and walked stiffly away. He had plenty to occupy his mind while he shaved. His sensations were much mixed. The artist, latent in every man, arrested Sam, forcing him to wonder and admire.

Bela looked up calmly. "I waitin' till me men get up," she remarked.

"I'll call them," he offered, making a move to turn.

"Let them sleep," commanded Bela.

tery that enshrouded her. However, the invigorating touch of cold water brought about a reaction. Violently scrubbing himself with a towel, he came to a sudden stop and addressed himself after this fashion:

"Steady, old man! You're heading in the wrong direction. You've got to get a toe-hold here. You can look at a girl. She's a sight too good-looking. You can't think about it straight. Forget it! Anyway, a girl like that, she'd naturally pick a man like Big Jack or Shand. No use storing up trouble for yourself. Put it out of mind. Look the other way. Harden yourself."

Young Joe swung his heavy shoulders around. Seeling Bela alone, he could scarcely credit his good fortune. He approached her, grinning and fawning in his extreme desire to please.

"Hello! You're an early bird," he said.

Bela looked at him in her most inscrutable way.

"How!" she said, offering him her hand according to the etiquette of the country.

Joe fondled it clumsily. "Say! the sight of you is good for sore eyes!" he cried, leering into her face. "Hanged if you ain't better looking than the sunrise."

Bela determinedly freed her hand. "Poo! talk!" she said loftily.

"Wake the 'er men and let us eat."

"Aw, don't be in such a rush," pleaded Joe. "I want to talk to you. I won't likely get another chance."

"What you want say?" she asked.

"More foolishness, I think."

"Aw, give a fellow a chance," begged Joe.

"Well, say it," she commanded.

Joe's feeling was genuine enough. The conqueror of the sex found himself at a loss for words.

"The—the sight of you sort of ties a man's tongue," he stammered. "I can't say it right."

"Wonder! I never thought there was anything like you up here. I could stop here all day just taking you in!"

"I couldn't," said Bela, coolly. "I too 'ongry. Wake the 'er men and go wash."

Joe stared at her, scowling, trying to discover if he was being made game of.

"Ahh," he growled, "you might give me a chance to make good."

"I will cook breakfast," said Bela.

"I bring some nice whitefish."

"To the deuce with breakfast!" cried Joe. "I spoke you fair. You're only trying to put me off!"

"If you don't wake the men," said Bela coolly, "I will."

Her eyes were as clear as the lake waters. He felt before them. He went sullenly back and shouted in the door of the shack.

CHAPTER VII.

The day started well, with Big Jack, Shand, and Joe all on their good behavior. But it was too good to last. Watching Bela's graceful movements before the fire, and eating the delicious food she put before them, the same thoughts passed through each man's mind.

What a treasure to enrich the cabin of a lonely pioneer! What would hard work and discouragement matter if a man had that to welcome him home at the end of the day? How could a man endure to live alone, having known such a woman? How could he hope to succeed without her help?

Each seeing the same thoughts revealed in the faces of his companions, realized that two men stood between him and his desire, and the baleful fires of jealousy were lighted again.

Each afraid one of the others might steal a march on him, watched his mates like a detective. The consequence was that each hating each other, they nevertheless stuck together like burrs.

They followed Bela round in company like dogs contending for scraps, ready upon no occasion at all to bare their teeth and snarl at each other.

Bela, perceiving her power, was being only a humbly woman, naturally abused it a little. To see white men whom all her life she had revered, cringing for her favor, went to her head a little.

She made them fetch and carry for her like women. She would have said that this situation was reversed from that of her first appearance in the shack.

"Bring me sewing," she said. "I not lak do nothing."

A variety of damaged garments was pressed upon her.

"I sew one for each man," she said. Having made Husky comfortable, she took her work out into the sunshine. Jack, Shand and Joe lounged in front of her, each waiting his turn covertly, each privately making up his mind to secure that charming sewing-machine for his own household, whatever the cost.

"Ain't you got nothing to do?" asked Bela coolly.

"This is a holiday," replied Jack. "The stable is dirty," she persisted. "That's Shand's job," said Joe.

"Well, I ain't goin' to leave you two here," growled Shand. "There's plenty of other work, if it comes to that."

"All go clean the stable," commanded Bela. "I lak a clean stable."

"Now go cut plenty wood, so I can cook good," she ordered, when they came back. "I want pine or birch. No poplar."

Oape Horn a Lighthouse.

Probably the most desolate and dreary spot in the world is inhabited by white men in the lighthouse that is maintained by the Argentine government at Cape Horn. This is claimed to be the southernmost lighthouse in the world.

Schemes Fail to Beat Draft

With it together in the "Rollies" tells an amusing story of a young man who, wishing to be exempt from military draft, went to the dentist and had all his teeth extracted, only to have the examining physician reject him because of flat feet.

Kogon's story of course serves its purpose. It makes the audience laugh and that is why it was originated, but there have been numerous instances during the recent examination of the drafted men where subterfuge has been used in an effort to cheat Uncle Sam. These stories are just beginning to gain circulation and they give us insight into the difficulties with which the examining physicians had to contend before a full quota was made up. Some of the schemes employed were crude, no doubt, but still the physicians were kept on the alert.

Take the case of the young man who feigned deafness in order to "beat" the draft. It happened in Harlem, and the schemer came near getting away with it, too, but in his anxiety to be up and away he exposed his hand.

"Do you claim exemption?" inquired one of the physicians of the man being examined. The latter pretended not to hear, and the physician repeated it in a louder tone.

"Sure, I'm deaf," replied the schemer.

"Been that way long?" inquired the physician.

Again the young man pretended not to hear and the physician repeated the question, only louder.

"All my life, I guess," answered the schemer.

Noting the schemer appeared anxious to get away, the physician grew suspicious, so he decided to take the schemer by surprise, figuring that unless the schemer really was deaf he would be deceived by the ruse.

"Oh, well, if you are deaf you won't make a good soldier. Get your hat, you're exempt," said the physician in a low tone that only a man with good hearing could understand.

These were welcome words to the schemer, who, forgetting all about the subterfuge he was employing, grabbed for his hat and was about to go when the physician said: "I don't think your hearing is so badly impaired after all. I guess we can pass you." And he was passed.

Nowhere on the East Side a drafted man would be able to get away by pretending that his eyesight was poor. He had the physicians fooled, too, for a time. Maybe he would have beaten the draft if he had kept his wits, but he didn't and he is going to serve his country when his time comes.

The examining physicians weren't able to tell by the usual methods whether this man was deceiving them or not, so they hatched up a little scheme which proved his undoing. While one monopolized the attention of the schemer, the other physician tossed a marked $5 bill on the floor in a corner where the schemer would see it if his eyesight was just fair. Then they left the room.

It is easy to surmise what happened, for when they returned the $5 bill had vanished. The schemer was not so clever as he seemed to have overcome his cunning. It required some pressing by the physicians to convince the schemer that the bill had been placed there for his undoing.

"I suppose you're very anxious to become a soldier and fight for your country," said a physician on the first shift at a subsequent examination.

"You look good and I'll pass you. Do you claim exemption?"

"Well, I should say I do," replied the robust young man, in an injured tone. "I wouldn't make a good fighter. I'm sick, I am."

"You're sick?" inquired the physician. "You surprise me. What's the trouble?"

"I'm nervous, doctor," replied the young man.

"You're nervous? What's your occupation?"

"I'm a prizefighter."

"Well, go over and win a few prizes knocking out the enemy and I think your nervousness will wear off. Passed."—New York Sun.

CUTICURA HEALS ITCHING BURNING

Rash On This Little Baby Over Face and Head. Quite Disfigured.

"When my baby was four months old she had a rash all over her face and head, and was quite disfigured. Her skin was inflamed and sore, and itched and burned and the rash later developed into large red eruptions, making her cry and fretful. The doctors could not get any sleep."

"My husband bought a box of Cuticura Ointment and a cake of Soap and used two lines of Ointment with two cakes of Soap and the rash was cured. (Signed) Mrs. A. Down, 1040 Gertrude St., Verdun, Montreal, Que., March 2, 1914.

Prevent pimples and other eruptions on the face by using Cuticura Soap and Ointment often.

GRAPE TARTLETS

Line some patty pans with rich pastry, brush with white of egg and chill. Wash and stem some well-flavored grapes, simmer gently a few minutes, rub through a sieve to separate the pulp from the skins and seeds and sweeten to taste. Then add one pint of pulp add the juice of a half a lemon and a rounding tablespoonful each of butter and flour. Stir until the butter is melted, pour over the well-beaten yolks of two eggs, fill into the pastry shells and bake. When done cover with a meringue made of the whites of the eggs and bake until delicately browned.

PEACH AND GRAPE SHERBETS.

For sherbets this month peaches and grapes will be found best. Dissolve one cupful of sugar in one pint of water, boil for three minutes and put away in a jar. To prepare the pulp of peaches or grape juice and freeze. When half frozen add the white of one egg whipped to a meringue with one tablespoonful of powdered sugar, finish the freezing, then pack and set aside for a couple of hours to ripen. Then add one pint of grape juice, bruise the fruit and set over the fire until scalding hot, then turn into a cheesecloth bag and let the juice drip out.

GRAPE NECTAR.

Take the juices of two lemons and one orange, one pint of grape juice, one small cupful of sugar and a pint of water. Serve iced cold. If served from punchbowl, add lemon and orange slices to the appearance.

AN INVALID DRINK.

Put in the bottom of a wineglass two small cupfuls of grape juice; add to this the beaten white of one egg and a little chopped ice; sprinkle sugar over the top and serve. This is often served in sanitariums.

GRAPE PUNCH.

Boil together one pound of sugar and half a pint of water until it spins a thread; take from the fire, and when cool add the juice of six lemons and a quart of grape juice. Stand aside over night. Serve with plain water, Apollinaris or soda water.

BOHEMIAN CREAM.

One pint of thick cream, one pint grape juice jelly; stir together; put in cups and set on ice. Serve with lady fingers.

GRAPE SHERBET.

For eight persons mix one pint of grape juice (unfermented), juice of lemon and one heaping tablespoonful of gelatine, dissolved in boiling water; freeze quickly; add beaten white of one egg just before finish.

GRAPE ICE CREAM.

One quart of unfermented grape juice, one quart of cream, one pint of sugar and the juice of one lemon.

SYLLABUB.

One quart of fresh cream, whites of four eggs, one glass of grape juice, two small cupfuls of powdered sugar; whip half the sugar with the cream; add grape juice with the eggs; mix well; add grape juice and pour over sweetened strawberries and pineapples, or oranges and bananas. Serve cold.

Cheese Soup.

Save the ham water. Add the vegetable odds and ends. Add a marrow bone from the butcher's. A bit of thickening and seasoning. The results—a nutritious luncheon.

Eating for Health and Strength

calls for intelligent food selection. It is easy to keep in top-notch vigor of mind and body at low cost if you know Shredded Wheat Biscuit. It is 100 per cent. whole wheat—nothing wasted, nothing thrown away—contains more real body-building nutriment than meat, eggs or potatoes and costs much less. Full of nutriment, tasty and toothsome. Most people like the nutty aroma of the baked wheat, especially when served with hot milk. Delicious with sliced peaches, bananas and other fresh fruits.

Tenders for Pulpwood Limit

Tenders will be received by the undersigned up to and including the seventh day of December next for the right to cut pulpwood and pine timber on a certain area situate in the vicinity of the Knapikasing River in the District of Timiskaming and Algoma.

Tenderers are to offer a flat rate per cord for all classes of pulpwood, whether spruce or other woods. The successful tenderer shall be required to pay for the Red and White Pine on the limit a flat rate of $10 per thousand feet board measure.

The successful tenderer shall also be required to erect a mill or mills on or near the territory, and to manufacture the wood into pulp and paper in the Province of Ontario, in accordance with the terms and conditions of sale which can be had on application to the Department.

Parties making tender will be required to deposit with their tender a marked cheque payable to the Honourable the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario, for Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000), which amount will be forfeited in the event of their not entering into agreement to carry out conditions, etc. The said Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000) will be held by the Department until such time as the terms and conditions of the agreement to be entered into have been complied with and the said mills erected, equipped and in operation. The said sum may then be applied in such amounts and at such times as the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines may direct in payment of amounts for the use of or any other obligation due the Crown until the whole sum has been applied.

The highest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

For particulars as to description of territory, capital to be invested, etc., apply to the undersigned.

EAT LESS AND TAKE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts before breakfast if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you.

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out. They weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine.

This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

RIVER VALLEY

Jack Frost certainly made things shine around these parts on Thanksgiving eve just an example of what old winter will bring to us pretty soon.

Miss Pearl Hickson spent Thanksgiving Day under the parental roof and is visiting other friends and relatives for a few days.

Mr. Guy Boulton returned home from Toronto on Monday where he had been employed in a factory.

Our Ball Service was quite well attended last Sunday and proved a good success both in the management and finances. We were pleased to have Mr. Howard with us and assist us in the good work.

A good attendance was present at the regular meeting of the W. I. held in Mrs. Earl Morrow's home last Thursday afternoon. A discussion was held on the subject of "How to make pie crusts and their fillings". Some splendid ideas were gleaned from the different opinions of the members. The overdone Xmas boxes for the boys were brought in for shipment at Belleville. A dainty lunch was served by the hostess and the meeting was brought to a close in the usual manner.

Regret to report Mr. Wm. Heagman has been on the sick list for some time through La Grippe. We hope for him a speedy recovery.

Gathering in garden produce and preserving is the custom of the day at present.

A bright baby boy was welcomed into the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Richard, son, Tuesday the 10th inst. Congratulations.

Some young lads from here took in a barrel of hay last Friday and report a heavy time for all of the disagreeable weather.

Mr. Roy Richardson and Mr. R. MacMillan both of Toronto, spent the holiday with the former's parents, Mr. Thos. Richardson and returned to their duties Wednesday morning.

GRANDMA USED SAGE TEA TO DARKEN HAIR

She mixed Sulphur with it to Restore Color, Gloss, Youthfulness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, streaked or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a 50-cent bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use. This is the old time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite and is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Sir ARTHUR STANLEY, Chairman, Executive Committee, British Red Cross.

It now costs $300,000.00 a week to carry on the work of the British Red Cross, or $16,000,000.00 a year.

Every minute of the day and night it costs $30 to minister to the sick and wounded and dying.

Last year Ontario's magnificent contribution paid for the entire work of the British Red Cross for nearly six weeks.

This year, in view of the greater need, it is earnestly and confidently hoped that Ontario's contributions will be as great proportionately as the magnificent offering of last year.

There are many duties and obligations which as Large Distributors of Reliable Merchandise we owe our patrons, but in this day of continual rising prices on all necessities and the lowering of quality to keep prices down we considered it our paramount duty to guard against inferior merchandise entering the Ritchie Store and to use our vast purchasing power to keep the prices down as near to the former level as possible. We have kept the prices down but not at the expense of quality! Our buyers went right to the source of supply many months in advance of our actual selling needs and first of all were assured that the goods were of the High Ritchie Standard and then secured the most advantageous prices that huge cash purchases and large quantities would permit. That of course applies to the many classes of merchandise which prevailing fashions do not materially effect. This store is the home of all that is new and authentic in Fashion, tendencies, New York, dictates the styles seen at Ritchie's and much of the Ladies' Wearing Apparel, is imported direct from that Fashion Centre, and even these are priced quite moderately.

We do not and no reliable or progressive business house would not make the assertion that pre-war prices prevail as that would be out of the question, but we do claim for the Ritchie prices that they are as low, if not lower than to be found elsewhere for the same High Standard of Merchandise—our prices will stand comparison on this point and we invite it. Shop at Ritchie's and Save. Absolute satisfaction Must go With Every Purchase Made at the Ritchie Store otherwise your money cheerfully refunded.

Letter from Garnet Bailey

Bransholt, September 10, 1917.

Dear Mother and Father—

Over a year has worn around since I came here to Bransholt before. So much has happened since then I can hardly realize it is only a year and that so many experiences could be crowded into a space of time so short.

My mind seems to go back ages to the night we left here and cheers and hand-shakes for the train at Liphook en route for Southampton. What a crazy lot we were, wild at the thoughts of getting away to France to have a crack at Fritz. Everybody told everybody else what he was going to do with him when he got there. Some would take prisoners and some wouldn't, one chap thought that if he could kill ten of them he would have done his bit. One fellow didn't know if he would like to kill any of them exactly but what he would like would be to get a few to take home to tie up in his back garden to amuse him self with in the morning knocking them about. I smile now when I think of the silly things we said. No one thought about not getting back himself. We were going over march to Berlin and away home, I guess without losing any of our friends. Well I was one of the last of the originals to leave the battalion and can safely say that none of us have yet seen Berlin or are much nearer home either. But these are things we were to learn later, we had no room for anything but what we were going to do when we got chasing him. At Southampton we passed a train load of wounded Germans who were being sent to England for treatment, prisoners of course. They were the first Germans we had seen. How we hissed them, shook our fists at them through the windows and jeered them about "Old Billie" and the war. Since then I have shook hands with several Germans who I have met on the battle field and found to be men, kind hearted and brave. I would like to tell you more about some Germans I worked with, among both their wounded and ours on the Somme and who I will never forget for the deeds of kindness they did to friend and foe alike, some time I may tell you. But to come back to the story, at Southampton we were packed into a dirty little collier and set out for Le Harve, no lights could be shown on deck or no singing or loud talking could be carried on. We slept in rows and in heaps, some lying, some lying down. Those who could stretch out were fortunate we were so tightly packed, but we were happy, going to France I could hardly keep from shouting for joy and I guess every one felt the same.

Daylight found us alongside the wharf at Harve and we saw our first sight of France. French women were clattering about in their wooden shoes selling long loaves of bread to the boys who were along the rail and could reach it. Dirty little children with bare feet shouted to us from everywhere. Big clumsy looking waggon drawn by splendid big horses clattered about on the cobbles of the street. Finally we landed and forming up marched towards the station. Crowds of people rushed from every where to see us pass. Windows were raised all along the street from which women thrust their heads their flags or their children or all three. Old men and little children followed us along the streets shouting "Les Canadiens" and trying to touch our hands or equipment or our clothing. It was a sight I shall never forget. A little curly haired lad of about six years of age got me by the hand and clung to me till we got on the train, I wanted to talk to him but could only smile and give him some Canadian buttons and some little trinkets I had. I couldn't have given him anything that would have pleased him more than those buttons. When I got in the railway car carriage I saw him shouting to some other boys as proud as could be over them.

When the train started we got our heads out of the windows to see all our comrades of France as we went along. I will not stop to describe the country we went through, more than to say it was too beautiful for words to do it justice, but we will hurry along to Steinford a little town in Belgium where we landed after spending nearly two days on the train. It was Sunday when we landed so we had the opportunity to see the Belgian people of the place on their way to church. We laughed and joked a good deal about their dress and their ideas of what was becoming in shape and colour.

We rested here all day and Monday starting out for a town about ten miles from Ypres on Tuesday morning. We marched all day reaching Ransinghurst about twelve that night. I never was so tired and footsore in my life before, but that was nothing, we were not on our way to Steinford the day.

After three days rest we marched into the trenches called the M and N's just in front of the village of Verstratt not far from the famous Dikie Bush road. I will not relate all that went on during the two months we were around Ypres. The weather was fine and the Huns fairly quiet so life was not too bad. A few little instances occurred here that might be of interest to you but trench life is a subject we all prefer to avoid. From Ypres we went to the Somme and there our troubles commenced in earnest. Our objective was the village of Pys about two miles from Corselet to the left of Bapome. The weather was so bad and the mud so deep we had to wait till nearly winter when we could attack. On the eleventh of November my birthday, at twelve o'clock at night all Hell broke loose and we started over about half a mile of shell torn No man's land for the long fought for Regina trench. We got the trench alright but it was morning when I realized what it had cost us. All night long I groped about in the darkness guided from one poor chap to another by his groans, bandaging up their wounds and doing what I could to make them comfortable until stretcher parties should arrive to carry them out. When German shells were landing all around my mate, Harold and myself, time and time again we gripped each other hand thinking our time had come but though we were thrown to the ground, buried in mud and tossed about in general neither of us got a scratch. When morning broke the firing ceased and we were able to look about that field of carnage. Oh God! I tried hard to forget that sight but it is to me. All day long we worked, bandaging and arranging the stretcher parties to get the worst cases out first. By four o'clock in the afternoon the ground was all cleared and our next duty was to the dead. With heavy hearts we buried them where they fell, it was impossible to carry them out. The boys we had laughed and joked with only a few hours before, mangled and torn past recognition. Yes we were beginning to realize that this was war. When this sad duty was finished and our work for the time completed we discovered we were hungry and had nothing to eat. No man's land is a poor place you know to look for food and a poor place to eat too, when you realize that the Germans only a few yards away are watching you and covering you all the time with their rifles. Yes this was a birthday, the best one I ever spent or ever will spend if I live to be a thousand. I was satisfied that for once in my life I had done something worth while. We were both cooked with mud soaked with blood and black as coals with burnt powder. When I looked Harold over I could not help but laugh even though I may have looked worse. "Well any way," he said, "if I die to-night I have lived a lifetime."

From the Somme we went to Vimy Ridge where we spent the winter in the mud and frost. I could hardly believe that men could stand such hardships and keep cheerful.

The Vimy Ridge battle was another experience that now I am safely through it I would not have missed for anything. I am not exaggerating it a bit when I say that there was scarcely a shell hole on the top of that long ridge that was not filled with water, dyed as red as could be with the blood of the Canadians who fell there.

My work at the Vimy battle was the same as it had been at the Somme, though made doubly dangerous by a bunch of snipers who kept hammering at us all the time.

From Vimy Ridge we advanced about five miles to the outskirts of the city of Lens where I was gassed on June 1st.

This not by any means a detailed account of where we have been and what we have done, it would take a large book to hold a satisfactory story of all that took place, but this will give you some idea of what we have been doing since leaving Bransholt here over a year ago.

I returned here after two weeks furlough in Scotland to do from six weeks to six months physical drill as the case may require to finish my convalescing and put me in shape for the work in France again.

I will write again very soon.

Your loving son,

GARNET

Succumbed To His Injuries

Mr. Ernest Phillips, who was scalded by falling in a tank of boiling water at the Box and Basket Factory where he was employed as engineer, succumbed to his injuries on Sunday, October 14th.

The funeral service was held at his late residence at 2 p.m. on Wednesday. The interment took place in Stirling cemetery.

He leaves a widow and family of three children, two girls and one boy aged 14, 10 and 3 years of age, who have the deepest sympathy of the community in their sad bereavement. The deceased came here about two years ago and up to the time of his accident was employed as fireman in the Box factory.

Letter of Condolence

Rawdon Circuit, 1917

To Mrs. Wm. Pollock,

Harold, Ont., R. R. No. 2

Dear Mrs. Pollock—

At the regular meeting of the Quarterly Official Board of the Rawdon Circuit held in the Bethel Church, August 13th, 1917. It was moved and Sec. and unanimously resolved that the heartfelt sympathy of this Board be extended to you and your deeply sorrowing family in this hour of sad bereavement which has come to you through the death of your esteemed husband, Bro. Wm. Pollock.

As we present the above resolution we realize that the death of Bro. Pollock, which occurred on the third of July last, has deprived the home of an affectionate husband and father, the community of a kind and obliging neighbour, the church of an active and useful member and has created a vacancy in our Quarterly Official Board, which it will be very difficult to fill. And as we call to remembrance his many years of faithful service rendered in connection with the Quarterly Board, the Sunday School, Epworth League and other positions of trust and responsibility in the church and in the community. We do deeply sorrow with you because of this sudden closing up of an active and useful life. But in such an hour how like balm upon the wounded heart comes the Heavenly assurance "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth, You shall the Spirit that they may rest from their labours and their works do follow them." Signed on behalf of the Quarterly Board.

JAMES SCOTT, Rec. Steward

Was It The Cow's Fault?

Supposing that you keep a cow giving five thousand pounds of milk in a year, for which you receive seventy dollars cash, how much profit does that cow make? This is not a riddle, but simply a query that every dairyman should be in a position to answer. Leaving aside the "higher accounting" side of revenue and expenses per cow, those persistent items of rent, interest, taxes, depreciation etc., and taking only income from milk or fat, and cost of feed, are you then in a position to say definitely that each cow you keep does make a good clear profit above feed cost?

Whether the feed is valued at forty or eighty dollars, whether the income is fifty or one hundred and twenty dollars, is there such profit that a fair return is made to you for the labour expended?

For if revenue and expense just balance showing no margin of profit at all, there must surely be something wrong, your labour has to be paid for.

Milk and feed record forms may be had free on application to the Dairy Commissioner, Ottawa, so that the profit made by each cow may be ascertained. Perhaps some cows would show profit if fed better some won't. Many men in all provinces on the cow testing register at Ottawa show thirty and sixty dollars clear profit per cow above feed cost. You may have made more than that; if you made less, was it entirely the cow's fault?

"BELA"

With Sam the case was a little different. When Bela addressed him it was with perhaps a heightened arrogance, but for the most part he managed to keep out of her way.

Not that he was indifferent; far from it. This new aspect of her ex-posed him. He thought. The idea of taming her was delicious, seductive. "I could do it," he told himself, sneering at the obsequiousness of Big Jack et al.

Meanwhile he attended strictly to his own duties.

Sam, when he chose, had command of a face as wooden as Bela's. More than once Bela, when she was unobserved, flashed a hurt and angry look at his indifferent back in the distance.

For several hours during the afternoon Sam disappeared altogether. During his absence Bela had an immense time at Bela's hands.

With all her haughty airs she did not relax any of her care of Husky. The others envied him his wound. Hour by hour he was visibly growing better. The fever had left him. He had gotten over his fear of Bela.

Now, by a twisted course of reasoning, characteristic of him, he adopted a proprietary air toward her. She was his, he seemed to say, because forsooth, he had been shot by her. This, it need not be said, was highly offensive to the other men.

In the middle of the afternoon, Bela, desiring a pall of water, Jack and Shand fell into a wrangle over who should get it. The fact that each felt he was making a fool of himself did not lessen the bitterness of the dispute.

Joe attempted to take advantage of it by sneaking out of the door with another pall. He was intercepted, and the argument took on a three-cornered aspect. Another endless, futile jawing-match resulted. Each was restrained from striking a blow by the knowledge that the other two would instantly combine against him.

Bela finally got the water herself, and ordering the three of them out, side, bolted the door after them. The last sound they heard was Husky's triumphant laugh from the bed, whereupon they patched up their differences, and joined in cursing him, and exchanging the hope he might yet die of his wound.

They were not allowed inside again until Sam returned and the supper was started. Their tempers had not improved any, and the situation grew steadily worse. Throughout the meal a sullen silence prevailed.

Bela maintained the air of a haughty mistress of an unruly school. They all deferred to her uneasily, except Sam, who kept himself strictly to himself. His face was as blank of expression as a wax-work.

As soon as Bela finished eating she rose.

"I go now," she said, coolly. "Come back to-morrow."

Three of the faces fell absurdly. Sam did not look up. A tiny flash in Bela's dark eyes showed that she observed the difference. She moved toward the door. Involuntarily Young Joe started to rise.

"Sit down," snarled Jack and Shand simultaneously.

Bela went.

Left to themselves, none of the men were disposed to sleep. Husky, like sick men generally, his fibers were relaxed, and his tongue loosened.

"I feel fine to-night," he announced at large.

"A hell of a lot we care!" muttered Joe.

"It's great to feel your strength coming back," Husky went on unabashed. "She's a wonderful fine nurse. Takes care of me like a baby. I'd trust myself to her sooner than the highest-priced doctor in the city."

"You sung a different tune yesterday morning," sneered Joe.

"Lord! You're a fool, Husky!" added Shand.

"Ah! You're only jealous!" returned Husky. "You wish you were me. I bet. She's got rare good sense, too. You fellows with your quarreling and all, you don't know her. This afternoon when she put you out we had a real good talk. You ought to have heard the questions she asked. About the city and everything. Like a child,

"Ah, go ahead, and cut in short!" muttered Shand.

"Yesterday," Jack resumed, "it may have seemed as if we acted like a parcel of unlicked schoolboys. I own I am sorry for my part in it. But I don't see how I could have done different. A man can't let another man get ahead of him when there's a woman in the case. It can't go on with the four of us here, and nobody knowing where he stands. So I proposed that we end it this morning by putting it up to you."

The other men were moving impatiently.

"Ah, cut out the preliminaries!" growled Joe.

Jack was direct enough when he got ready to be. "Are you married?" he asked Bela, pointing blankly at her. "Bela was a stranger to the tremors and blushes imposed upon civilized women at such a crisis. "No," she said, with her inscrutable face.

"Do you want to be?"

She shrugged with fine carelessness. "I suppose I got get 'osban' some tam."

"Well, take your pick of the four of us," said Jack. "I ain't sayin' we're prize specimens, mind you. But you'll hardly do better at that up here. Anyhow, look us over."

She proceeded to do so. Under her glance each man bore himself according to his nature. Her eyes showed no change as they moved along the line. None of them could tell what thoughts lay behind that direct, calm glance. Having inspected each one, her eyes returned to Jack as if inviting him to speak further.

"Husky speaks first, according to arrangement," said Jack, waving his hand.

Husky's speech was moist, incoherent and plaintive.

"They fixed this up when I was asleep," he stuttered. "Spring it on me unawares. Me just out of a sick-bed, not being no slicked up nor nothin'. Tain't fair! I ain't had no chance to think of anything to say. Made me speak first, too. How do I know what they're going to say after me? Tain't fair! I'm as good as any man here when I got my strength. Don't you listen to anything they say. Take it from me, I'm your friend. A know me. I'm a loving man. A woman can do anything with me if she handles me right. I won't you then fair, and now they want to get back on it. That shows you what they are. Don't you listen to them. You and me, we had our scrap, and now it's all right, ain't it? Look at what I suffered for you!"

There was a lot more of this. The other men became impatient. Finally Jack stepped forward.

"Time!" he said. "You're beginning all over. It's my turn now."

Husky subsided.

"Now I speak for myself," said Jack. "You let the voice of what men call a good sport—cheerful, determined, wary, not unduly confident. I am the oldest man here, but not an old man yet by a long shot. I am boss of this outfit. I got it right."

Joe angrily interrupted him. "Hold on there! You ain't proved the best man yet."

"Shut your head!" growled Shand. "Your turn is coming."

"Forty per cent. of this outfit belongs to me," Jack went on. "That's got twice as much property as any man here. I can make a good home for you. A girl has got to think of that. But that ain't all of it, neither. You got to take me with it, ain't yeh? Well, I'm old enough to realize how lucky I'd be if I got you. I'd treat you good. Wherever you come from, you're a wonderful woman. You taught me a lesson. I'm man enough to own it. I say I take off my hat to shaky, he was now sitting on the edge of his bed. Sam still slept in the corner.

From the character of the silence that greeted her, Bela instantly apprehended that something was in the wind.

"What for you get up so early?" she demanded.

"Bela, we got something to say to you," Big Jack began portentously.

"More talk!" asked Bela.

"This is serious."

"Well, say it."

"Let's go outside," said Joe, nervously. "It's suffocating in here."

Filling out of the shack, they stood against the wall in a row—Big Jack, Black Shand, Husky and Young Joe. Bela stood off a little way, watching them warily.

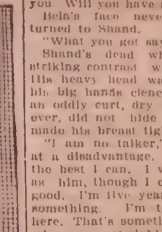

Had a great deal the look of a spelling bee with a teacher who meant to stand no nonsense. But each of the men was taking it very seriously. Each was pale, tight-lipped, and bright-eyed with excitement, except Husky, whose eyes were harassed, and whose mouth kept opening and shutting.

"Tain't fair! Tain't fair!" he kept muttering. "Look at me, the state I'm in, and you want say!"

"Well, what you want say?" demanded Bela.

Big Jack stood up straight and brought his heels together. He had been a soldier in his time. He felt that it was a great moment. An honest business gave him dignity.

"I got to open this matter," he said, "before each man speaks for himself." He glanced at his companions. "If any man here thinks he can explain it better, let him speak out."

CURING TIRED FEET.

This is the age of tired feet. It is also the age of pavements. And tired feet are largely the result of walking on hard pavements. Yet, curiously enough, pavements were invented primarily to make it more comfortable on his feet more comfortable.

The outer side of the foot is of stronger construction than the inner and will remain so even with prolonged usage. The pavement, if the foot is kept in a proper position while walking. But the outer portion takes the strain of the outer portions of the foot, and thus the muscles are weakened eventually through lack of natural exercise. The best way to correct this and at the same time correct the tendency to falling arches is by cultivating the habit of walking and standing with the feet held parallel. This is particularly helpful to persons who are chilled to stand for prolonged periods at their work.

In addition there are two simple exercises which will strengthen the foot muscles and ward off the tendency to fatigue if practiced for a few moments each day. One of these consists in resting in a such as possible—walking club footed—and walking about the room for one minute several times each day. This position puts the strain on the muscles of the outside of the foot, thus toning them up and strengthening them. The strain will be apparent to any one the first time he tries the exaggerated form of pigeon foot locomotion. But the ultimate result will be a pronounced strengthening and straightening of the feet, with a tendency to assume unconsciously a natural position in walking and standing.

The second exercise consists in throwing the weight of the body on to the outside of the feet by standing with the legs crossed and the feet held parallel. This position should be assumed for several minutes each day and is often found very restful to persons obliged to stand in cramped quarters. By bending the knees and walking about the room with the feet still in this position, alternating with first one foot and then the other in the lead, the outside foot muscles may be strengthened very rapidly.

If either one or both of these exercises are practiced for one minute periods three or four times each day the foot muscles will be toned up to resist fatigue and the tendency to falling arches that follows almost invariably. — Los Angeles Times.

The Public Makes the Market.

The public makes the stock market. The impression that a few operators can advance or lower prices as they please is a sadly mistaken one. If this could be done by a dozen men, or by a hundred, or a thousand, there would be no need of a stock market, for these gentlemen could combine and enrich themselves beyond the dreams of avarice.

No: the stock market is made by the public. When the public is scared and refuses to buy the market languishes, business halts, and uncertainty prevails. When the public is badly scared it becomes panic stricken and unloaded by wholesale, and all must take their losses, big and little operators alike.

I do not mean to say that large operations are not able to influence the market to a certain degree and under favorable conditions, but they cannot do this to the extent that most persons imagine. They make their money by operating skillfully on the edge of the market, whether the bull or the bear side.—Jasper in Leslie's.

Exemption Forms

Already in Demand

Postoffices Ready to Hand Out Exemption and Service Papers

In view of the proclamation issued by the Government on Saturday, all Class One men are a part of the Canadian army. They are subject to military law, and are considered to be on leave of absence, without pay, until they are called to the colors. The details of the proclamation have already been thoroughly announced but for the information of any who may be uncertain, attention may be called to the fact that all men who feel they are entitled to exemption must make their proper claims through their local postmaster or personally not later than November 10, or they lose the privilege of a tribunal hearing. Up to November 8 exemption applications will be available at all postoffices all over Canada, while for those who delay matters to the last minute there is a leeway of three days, November 8, 9 and 10, on which men who do not wish to make written application for exemption may make their personal appearance before their nearest tribunal. Men who delay to make personal or written application by the 10th become a part of the active army, no matter how just their claims might ordinarily be. November 10 is also the time limit fixed within which all men who do not apply for exemption must report for military service, on report forms which will also be available at the post-offices.

Those who fail to follow one course or the other, or have their case looked after by an employer or relative entitled to do so, will place themselves liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, with hard labor, and will at the same time, if required, be compelled to serve immediately on the Canadian Expeditionary Force. The tribunals will commence their sittings on November 8, the first three days to be devoted mainly to those who apply in person. The assurance is also given that those who act quickly, either in getting their medical examinations, or in reporting for service or applying for exemption, will not be called out before the last man, as no men are to be called before December 10.—Mail and Empire

Get Behind the Wheel of a Ford and Drive

TRY it just once! Ask your friend to let you "pilot" his car on an open stretch. You'll like it, and will be surprised how easily the Ford is handled and driven.

If you have never felt the thrill of driving your own car, there is something good in store for you. It is vastly different from just riding—being a passenger. And especially so if you drive a Ford.

Young boys, girls, women and even grandfathers—thousands of them—are driving Ford cars and enjoying it. A Ford stops and starts in traffic with exceptional ease and smoothness, while on country roads and hills its strength and power show to advantage.

Buy a Ford and you will want to be behind "the wheel" constantly.

Here is an article of unusual interest barring the experience of an American correspondent both above and below the waters of the Mediterranean.
The article, abridged here, is by Nuboth Hedin, and is reprinted from the Brooklyn Eagle.

Toulon, Sept. 8.
Hydroplanes and submarines are the newest craft in naval warfare, and through the courtesy of the French Marine Department I have had the unusual opportunity of making a submarine and a hydroplane flight over the Mediterranean. The only similar impression is that of the surface in the fish tanks of an aquarium when looked at through the glass in front. I also now understand better why the fish do not bite at any old hook, but sinker and line down to them. To be sure, all water is not so transparent as that of the Mediterranean, but it has to be very dirty to be opaque. In the Atlantic off the coast of France, the submarine cruiser said it is light green, and in the English Channel it is of a grayish-yellow hue. The Andromache had made the voyage from Brest to Toulon through the Straits of Gibraltar, all alone.

IN THE AIR.
My first air flight took place in a hydroplane off the coast of the French Riviera, near St. Raphael, where the French navy has an excellent naval school, and a special officer of which is to train men who have already been in the water. I was standing on the deck of a submarine coming into the harbor at Toulon, that I decided to ask for a trip over the Mediterranean as well as under it. The next morning I was less confident, but when the opportunity came during the afternoon I could not resist.

"Get into the togs," said the amiable commander of the school, and out of a basket brought on the beach by an attendant I was dressed in a pair of leather trousers, a sweater, a canvas jacket, a wooden hood, a leather helmet, sheepskin-lined gloves and a pair of goggles, all of which was put on the outside of my ordinary clothes.
I then felt more qualified to dive than to fly. A pair of waterproof boots would have completed the costume admirably. By the time I was ready I felt like a cross between a trained bear and a rag doll.

The hydroplanes had been launched while I dressed, and a small motorboat acted as a tender. When I was once on board it ran in front of the "hydro" and took it in tow, while I made the transfer. The sea was pitchy and it was not without difficulty that I made the leap from the power boat to the hydro-plane, handicapped as I was in my unaccustomed trappings. I started for the seat next to the pilot, but he motioned me to a circular hole in the prow.

A sailor comes across from the motorboat, starts the two-winged propeller in back, setting the engine off,
"crack-crack-crack," and leaps over the transfer.

The above facts can be verified by writing to him, to the parish priest or any of his neighbors.

A. COTE, Merchant,
St. Isidore, Que., May 12th, '98.

my head, back to the power boat, which is already moving forward fast, towing the "hydro." The rope holding the two together is then released, the motorboat veers off sharply to the left, and ahead rushes the hydroplane toward the open sea.

So far it is very pleasant. The engines crackle more and more violently, enough to burst my ear drums, and I am, as protection, the wooden hood and the leather helmet. The slender-winged boat glides over the water faster and faster. I look ahead and I feel no temptation to look back. We cut the waves diagonally, and then at right angles. The feam flies about us. The engine in back becomes more and more vociferous, until the series of its cylinders become one continuous roar. We cut through the water with a zip.

longer. There is but one motion. It is forward, and the wind driving against us, is forcing me against the back of my seat. The floor under my feet feels as solid as though founded on bedrock. There is no waving.

But here we turn. The boat tips over so slightly, but feeling it very suddenly, I over a great deal more I once more grip the edges of the deck with my sheepskin-gloved hands.
I hold tight. My heart jumps, and my breath comes short. Long northwest happens. The curve is made. I relax, and look about.

We have turned toward the land. I see under us the Rhodanus, colored town of Saint Raphael, its gardens in bloom. In the outskirts of the town
I see dark green groves of orange trees, surrounding red-roofed villages; here and there a naked rock, and further from the shore the fresh plowed earth of the vineyards, the market gardens and still higher up toward the mountain range that protects this strip of paradise by the sea several dark green groups of long-necked scrub pine, with here and there a graceful parasol pine, suggesting Japan.

Anent Autumn Colors.
There is Pekin blue.
And bracken brown.
Not to mention Mohawk red.
And duck blue is another shade.
Cuban brown is still another newcomer.
Autumn greens are still called Russian and myrtle.

STRONG PEOPLE NEEDED
The need for people to be healthy is urgent. Those whom illness has put outside the ranks of robust men and women feel their position keenly.
They are handicapped in every walk of life and weak men and nerve-worn women need more earnestly than ever to put their health right and become active and strong. Many who began "patching" months ago are ill now as on the day they began vainly tinkering with common drugs. Every ailing man and woman should remember that the ills of debility, nerve exhaustion, indigestion, sleeplessness, neuralgia and depression come from a faulty blood supply. Worry, over-work or other causes have impoverished the blood and led the life-stream impure.
The nerves thereby are starving and the whole system is languishing for new blood. In this condition many thousands have won back strong nerves and new health and strength through the rich blood Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually makes. In a weak or bloodless condition it is not only a waste of time and money, but also a further menace to your health.

Oh, tenderly despen the woodland glooms.
And merrily away the breeches!
Drooping delicately the yellow blossoms,
And the silver rehearsal new speeches.
The crimson high till they brush
the sky.
Pale catkins the yellow birch luncheon.
But the tree I love all the greenwood above
Is the maple of sunny branches.

Let who will cling of the hawthorn in spring,
Or the late-leaved linden in summer,
There's a word may be for the locust tree.
That delicate, strange newcomer:
But the maple it glows with the tint of the rose.
When pale are the spring-time regions,
And the towers of flame from afar proclaim
The advance of winter's legions.
And a greener shade there never was made.

Than the summer canopy sifted.
And many a day as beneath it I lay
Him my memory backward drifted
To a pleasant lane I may walk not again.
Leading over a fresh, green hill, Where a maple stood just clear of the wood—
And oh, to be near it still!

Others' Affairs.
Unless You Have Real Tact Don't Try to Be Third Party.

Have you a reputation of being a third party where two persons are sincerely trying to manage their own affairs? It is only the most tactful sort of persons who can successfully play the role of third party without doing more harm than good.
Don't try to fix things up between quarreling lovers unless you are absolutely sure that you can trust your tact and intuition to do the right and only thing. Don't intervene in the affairs of a newly-established household. Let the young people work things out for themselves. Don't try to bring up other people's children. They won't thank you. Nobody thanks the meddler, no matter how well intentioned she may be.

Now, to the humane soul who hates to see things go wrong when a word or two will apparently set them right, this withholding of interest seems most selfish. But it really isn't. It is the most considerate thing you can do sometimes to shut your eyes and let things take their natural course. They will right themselves in time, and you will not jeopardize your friendship by good-natured meddling.

It is better to stand aside than to get mixed up in a thing which is other people's troubles. Nobody loves a meddler.—Pittsburg Press.

Why Red Cross Workers Go Insane.
Dressy Old Lady—No, dearie, I've not begun knitting for the soldiers yet, but I may in the fall. Wool work is kinder sticky for warm weather.

Chairman of Down-State Auxiliary
—"I don't approve of making socks.
We should leave something for the government to do."
Pompous Gentleman (bearing sample of khaki yarn)—Kindly match this accurately. My little girl needs more for her sweater." R. C. W. (in apologetic tones)—"We're so sorry, we're out of just that shade, but she can wear a bit of this. The soldiers need a bit of a bit." P. G. (haughtily)—
"The soldiers may not be particular, but my daughter is. The sweater is for herself!"

Another Husband (buying wool for wife)—My wife would never consent to knit on Sundays. She wouldn't be caught up that way. Besides, we always motor to the country for a picnic on Sundays.

Beautiful Blonde (clad in harmony with her knee-high white kid boots)—
I might be willing to knit you a scarf, but my daughter is. The sweater is
for herself!"

Ample Lady (glowing with benevolence)—No, I'm not doing any of this sort of work. You see, I've done my bit for the war. (Dramatic pause.) I gave $5 to the Red Cross war fund.
At clearing time woman bursts in with huge package of yarn. "I want to return all this light gray yarn, because the pattern says you don't want any more socks." (Entire corps of workers faint, and the first aid is summoned.)—Chicago Tribune.

erly a colonel in the French army brave man and a dashing officer. During one of the hottest engagements of a terrible year of war, noting that his troops were bending forward under a galling fire to escape the bullets of the enemy while he alone maintained an erect position, he exclaimed,

"Since when, I should like to know, has much politeness been shown to the enemy?" The sarcasm took immediate effect, for the soldiers returned forward and carried everything before them.

HEAT OF THE SUN.

Its Source of Supply is a Puzzling Problem to Science.

Probably the most puzzling problem we have in connection with the sun is to account for its tremendous output of heat, which we are told has varied no more than a few tenths of a degree in 50,000,000 years, the period generally given by geologists for the duration of life upon this globe. If we accept the theory most generally advanced in the past that the sun was formerly a vast nebula extending at least as far as the planet Neptune and that its heat was maintained by slow contractions, computation shows us that only 25,000,000 times the present output would be maintained from this source—that is, if the heat were supplied by contraction alone it would have lasted only half as long as life has been known to exist upon the earth.

It is plainly impossible, and though contraction undoubtedly supplies part of the solar heat, there must be some other source of supply as well.
The discovery of radio-activity in recent years may have much to do with explaining this mystery.

It is interesting to consider that if the sun were composed of coal and its heat were kept up by the process of combustion, more than at ton of coal would be required per square foot of surface per hour to supply the present output of heat. The sun would be entirely burned up in 5,000 years if made of coal.—New York Sun.

OUR UNPAID LABORERS.
Birds Do Great Work. Yet We Do Not Properly Protect Them.

One form of national waste which is far more serious than the American people realize is a result of the deplorable neglect to conserve bird life in this barren and ungrateful country.

Ornithologists and other intelligent observers of nature who have made a study of the subject say that insects destroy one-tenth of the products of agriculture in the United States. More than 100,000 kinds of insects have been enumerated in the fields, orchards, meadows, pastures, vineyards, gardens and woods of this country.

Nearly all birds destroy insect life.
The federal department of agriculture has examined the stomachs of forty kinds of birds to determine accurately what they consume. It was found that among the birds which most effectively aid the farmers are phoebes, king-birds, catbirds, swallows, brown thrashers, rose breasted grosbeaks, house wrens, vireos, native sparrows, cuckoos, orioles, warblers, shrikes, logskippers, crows, and the crow blackbird, which have reared under suspicion so long, do more good than harm to the farmers.—Chicago News.

Minard's Liniment Cures Colds, Etc.

Animals Attack the Lungs.
Watch any flesh-eating animal when it is attacking its prey, or watch two animals having a fight to the death.
You will notice one remarkable fact, and that is that they strike for the lungs. Most people, of course, are well aware where their own lungs are, but they haven't the slightest idea about any other lungs. Animals instinctively know, however, the position of the lungs of almost every other animal. When a tiger or a lion attacks a man it does its best to get just below the shoulder blades. If it strikes without warning, you will always find that it powerful paws have torn right through to the lungs. A cat has just the same instinct. Watch it stalk a mouse, and you will see how cleverly it manoeuvres so as to get behind the unfortunate bird and pounce on its back, where the lungs are.—London Graphic.

White of an Egg.

The white of an egg is made up of cells filled with albumen. By beating the white these cells are ruptured and oxygen from the air is inhaled, which gives the white and light appearance of beaten eggs. The white of a fresh egg will not become as much as a stale egg. The white of a stale egg will not be as light and as easily dispersed as the white of a fresh egg. The white of a stale egg will not be as valuable.
The importance of having the egg in cold, pure air is readily seen.—Exchange.

STEAM ROLLER IS RIGHT WORD FOR HAIG'S DRIVE

Major-Gen. Maurice's Review of War Week is Optimistic.

GERMAN YARNS

Not as Many British Engaged as Huns Claim Are Lost.

A London cable says: Major General Frederick B. Maurice, chief director of military operations at the War Office, in his weekly talk to-day with the Associated Press, after an optimistic review of the past week's work on the British front in Flanders, said: "We have every right to be confident when we see what our men have done. But the fighting is hard and we do not think the present series of battles in Flanders is going to end the war. There is a great deal more hard fighting before us. I would say that the importance of getting the American troops here quickly, as possible and in the greatest possible numbers is not being diminished."

"The word 'steam-roller,' which was so often used in the early days of the war in connection with the Russian army, is exactly the right word to characterize the British advance in Flanders. It is an advance not rapid, but insistent, irresistible. It goes up hill very slowly, but now it is doing down hill, and the forces are following each other a mile or more rapidly."

"I want to say a word about the work which has been done behind our lines in preparing for these battles. I do not wish to minimize the U-bont threat, but I can truthfully say that nothing the U-boats have done has delayed for a single hour our work in France; it has not delayed a single round of ammunition or a ration for the soldiers. The British army was never better fed or supplied than to-day."

"The daily imports of British war material into France last January averaged 11.4 tons per hour; in September they had increased to 21.5. The number of broad-gauged trains run daily in the war zone with British war material numbered 173 in March; 259 in September. The weekly tonnage on narrow-gauge lines in March was 25,000; in September 172,000. The weekly average of war materials on the canal in the British war zone was 34,000 tons in March; 62,000 tons in September."

Commenting on the German report that the British had lost half a million men in the present series of battles, General Maurice said: "The figures are grotesque. We have not had that many men engaged. As I have already told you, our casualties have been very light, and the German casualties are known to have been 75 per cent. greater than ours."

REICHSTAG ROW IS FOR EFFECT

To Make Peace Appeal in Time More Forceful.

Crisis Over Helfferich is Postponed.

A London cable: The Evening Standard says: "In diplomatic circles the Deutsche Tageszeitung's forecast of a new peace offer of the Central powers on the basis of the status quo with no indemnities is accepted as accurate. Germany has been endeavoring to create an atmosphere in which an offer of 'reasonable peace' would be hailed with rapture by her pacifist friends in all countries. The reason for staging the present quarrel between the Pan-Germans and non-annexationists is, in the main, a comedy for the benefit of the allies."

"Those who understand German mentality hold that German Government is under no illusion as to its position, but encourages an intransigent attitude on the part of the Pan-Germans in order to make more effective the real appeal of pacifism abroad. When it comes we shall no doubt be warned by our pacifists in proper time against throwing the Empire into more in the hands of the thorough-going. Wisdom lies in disregarding all these manoeuvres."

THE CRISIS POSTPONED.

Germany's Ministerial crisis caused by Government encouragement of the new agitation of the Fatherland-Pan-German party among the army and officialdom seems temporarily at least smoothed over. Today's despatches differ vastly from yesterday's, wherein the immediate resignation of Helfferich, and later the resignation of Michaelis was forecast. The Amsterdam correspondent of the Times telegraphs under Tuesday's date: "Despatches from Germany say the crisis has been postponed. The Vorwärts regards the desire as natural to avoid domestic conflicts during the war. The Voelksrecht says the Chancellor and War Minister have given all explanations reasonably to be expected, thereby clearing up the essential cause of the incident. The Lokal Anzeiger says that only the Social-Democrats are still dissatisfied, but they cannot prevent the refusal to vote a want of confidence. Saturday's outburst are attributable to a misunderstanding. The Germania thinks the Reichstag's conflict with the Government ought to be a vast scheme whereby the German cause abroad is not served. Helfferich's telegram to the Reichstag was the Chancellor and army authority achieved in the main Committee success a remarkable and rapid settlement of the conflict. The aim required for information and service of the army is agreed to and the conflict with Helfferich adjusted. The Social-Democrats alone voted against it. The Government may be said to have won a victory. Saturday's events might have been avoided. The Reichstag can now finish its business at one or two sittings and adjourn till November."

PERSHING'S PRAISE.

U. S. General Congratulates British Troops.

British Headquarters in France, cable says: The recent operations in Flanders have brought many congratulations to the British Expeditionary Force in France. Field Marshal Haig has issued an order of the day containing a number of despatches received on October 5, and replies sent to them. Gen. John J. Pershing, commander of the American Expeditionary Force in France, telegraphed: "Permit me to extend sincere congratulations to you and your magnificent army on the recent important gains in front of Ypres. They give a striking answer of the well-known peace propaganda."

Field Marshal Haig sent this answer: "I wish to thank you very heartily in behalf of the British army under my command for your most kind telegram. We look forward to the day when the American armies join us on the western front, and we are quite confident that the allied co-operation will fight the war to an early and decisive issue."

POOREST APPLE CROP ON RECORD

Yields From 10 to Less Than 40 Per Cent.

Other Fruits as Well Are Very Poor.

A Toronto report: The September report of Dominion Fruit Commissioner Johnson shows that this year's apple crop in Ontario is the smallest on record since the Province really began to grow apples in a commercial way.

In no one district will there be a 40 per cent. crop, and the one section in which this figure is even approached is in the valleys of the St. Lawrence and Ottawa, where fruit-growing is, at best, a very minor line of activity. In Prince Edward county, one of the heavier producing districts, a 20 per cent. crop is counted on; in the Georgian Bay district and along the front of Durham county, also important apple sections of the Province, the yield is not expected to exceed 10 per cent. September sunshine has given a fine color to the fruit, but worm holes and fungus will force the bulk of the crop below No. 1 grade. Reliance for domestic needs must be largely placed on Nova Scotia, which has a moderate crop of well-covered and generally clean apples, according to Commissioner Johnson's report.

The situation of all the other fruit crops is also unfortunate because of the fact that other fruits as well as apples are short. Peaches in the Niagara district are only a 50 per cent. crop, and the crop is still lighter in Western Ontario. Pears in the Niagara district are also only half a crop, and the best report outside of Niagara points to a 25 per cent. yield. Plums have given equally light yields, and the supply of grapes will be greatly shortened, owing to the failure to mature as a result of adverse conditions in spring and early summer. Tomatoes, which may also be considered as a fruit crop, were held back by cold, wet weather early in the season and yields have been shortened by early autumn frosts.

Taking everything together, 1917 will rank as the poorest year to date in the history of Ontario fruit growing. Prices have been high, but not nearly high enough to offset reduction in production.

ALLY SHIP LOSS DURING A WEEK

France and Italy Got Off Very Easily.

Neutral Norway Had First Clear Week.

Paris cable: Three French steamers of more than 1,000 tons were sunk by mines or submarines during the week ending Oct. 7. Two vessels of less than 1,000 tons were lost and eight ships were attacked without success. Six fishing boats were sunk.

ITALIAN RECORD.

Rome cable: In all last week two Italian steamers of more than 1,000 tons were sunk by mines or submarines. One sailing vessel of more than 100 tons was also lost. One steamer and one sailing vessel were attacked without success.

NORWAY'S CLEAR WEEK.

London cable: Not one Norwegian ship was sunk last week by German submarines, for the first time in more than a year, according to a despatch to the Morning Post from Christiania. The Tidens Tegn, of Christiania, prints a diagram purporting to show that Norwegian sinkings have decreased as the efficiency of the Allies' dealing with submarines has increased.

BOMB PLOTTERS NABBED IN N.Y.

Three Held for Conspiracies Last Year

Which Cost $5,000,000 in Ships and Cargoes.

A New York report: Three men, charged with conspiring to blow up ships in New York harbor in 1916, were arrested here last night by members of the "bomb squad." The prisoners are Eugene Riester, 32 years old, a restaurant proprietor; Jos. Zofert, 37 years old, a printer, and Walter Thide, 30 years old, a lithographer. This news has been nationalized. The others were American citizens.

The conspiracy in which the three men were involved, according to the police, was responsible for the destruction by bombs and fires of $5,000,000 worth of ships and cargoes.

"The chief conspirators," said Captain Tunney, of the bomb squad, "were Dr. Karl Schimmel, who escaped to Buenos Aires and later made his way to Rotterdam. Captain Franz von Rintelen, already convicted of conspiracy; Captain Otto Wolpert, superintendent of the Atlas Line pier, who was now under $25,000 bail; Captain Senberg, an aide of von Rintelen, who escaped; Walter T. Scheele, a chemist, and the three men under arrest."

HAD A BATTLE IN THE BALTIC

Mosquito Fleets of Russia and Germany Clash.

German Airmen Are Also Very Active.

A Petrograd cable: The Germans are still continuing preparations for an attack on the Russian Baltic fleet. In the Gulf of Riga Wednesday evening enemy motor boats appeared, but were dispersed by the coast batteries. "On the Baltic Sea Monday," says to-day's official report, "Russian scouting cutters encountered in the Riga Channel ten enemy cutters and trawlers and attacked them. One enemy trawler was set afire. The enemy retired southwards."

"On Monday fourteen enemy aeroplanes approached Ceres (on the island of Oesel). Some of them fired mines on our transports at Ajfchod. Yesterday eight enemy aeroplanes attacked without result the batteries at Ceres and the village of Mendo, six miles to the northeast."

"On Monday our machines dropped twenty bombs on Roderols station and on the Riga station. We brought down an enemy aeroplane in the Riga region. In the neighborhood of Huezac French aviators brought down an enemy machine in flames."

NEW BARRAGE IS APPALLING

British Shells Do Not Make Holes in Ground

But Spread Death Over a Wide Area.

A London cable: The British barrage is now many thousands feet deep, and the consequent rain has caused a tremendous amount of its efficacy to-day from a close observer of the three preceding weeks. He said: "Its death-dealing capacity is beyond anything seen before in this war. The German losses have been very heavy, especially from our big shells, for new shells are invented just as new aeroplanes are. Earlier in the war certain types of shells made enormous holes in the ground, and this same type does so still."

"But there are big shells now that seem to touch the earth for the mere purpose of exploding with a terrible lateral force over a wide area and weakening the enemy's position."

This military commentator, discussing the persistent reports of the German retreat to new lines, said:

"The German high command is well aware that it requires at least six or seven divisions more to hold its present line than it would if they withdrew to the straighter line running to Zebrugg. But the high command knows the difficulty of retreating now that we have them everywhere under observation. It is not like it was on the Somme last winter, where they could withdraw under cover of the Bapaume Ridge. There must soon be a crisis for the Germans."

GERMAN PLANS PROVE FAILURE

A London cable: Reuter's correspondent at French headquarters telegraphed to-day:

"Two interesting points emerged from the latest battle of Flanders. First, the enemy system of echelonment proved a failure. Second, the substitution of new lines of shell craters for battered trench lines is at most valueless, because after a heavy shelling the craters are little good as shelters. Prisoners admit that the higher command realize that during heavy fire the men cannot be trusted to hold them. At the moment of attack the men are either shot at their posts or are in a frame of mind which makes surrender the wiser course than fighting."

FACE STARVATION.

British Captives in Asia Minor in Bad Plight.

London cable: Attention is drawn by Thomas Seacombe, the eminent scholar and critic, to the melancholy position of British prisoners of war in Asia Minor.

"Unless," he declares, "these men be exchanged before the severity of the approaching winter overtakes them, few, if any, can survive. Even good treatment, according to Turkish standards, would involve nothing less than slow and very painful death to men already weakened by Mesopotamian starvation, tolls forced marches, inhuman food and the inevitable rigors of that ferocious climate."

Enquiries made by the Daily News shows that with the exception of 800 men exchanged directly for the fall of Kut, the exchange of prisoners yet has taken place between Great Britain and Turkey. There are nearly 9,000 British and Indian troops of all ranks in the hands of the Turks, of whom some 150 are in Constantinople, the others being at various camps in Asia Minor.

BERLIN SHIVERS.

Fire Illegal and the Mercury Drops.

A Berlin cable: The coal distribution authorities some days ago, when the weather was sunny and warm, decreed that before Oct. 15 no fires should be lighted anywhere, in private or public, or even in governmental buildings.

On Saturday the weather began to grow exceedingly chilly, and has continued so ever since, and women are decorating themselves with furs. Rain adds to the general discomfort.

The suburb of Schoenburg asked the coal authorities to withdraw the order, but so far this has not been done. The weather prophets are certain that the sun will soon shine again as brightly as the season permits.

NEW RUSSIAN GOVERNMENT REBUILDING

Already Busy Trying to Get Trade and Military Matters Settled.

OFF TO FRONT

Kerensky and His Aides to Meet Troops—Confer With Allies.

A Petrograd cable: The new Government has begun the task of rebuilding the breaches in the country's economic and military lines created by the political uncertainty since the Bolshevik uprising in July.

Premier Kerensky and his principal lieutenants have left for the front, where they will spend several days in placing before the soldiers the purposes of the coalition Ministry. The Foreign Minister will also confer with the Allied military agency at the front, and explain to them Russia's needs, and devise schemes of co-operation, which he will probably present before the Allied war council at Paris.

The re-constructed Government yesterday issued a declaration which says:

"Fresh trouble has broken out in the bosom of our country in consequence of the Korniloff movement. Although this movement is being rapidly suppressed, it still menaces the very existence of the republic by the disturbances it provokes."

"The government is blowing through the land, and the thrust of a foreign foe is increasing in force."

The Government is profoundly conscious that a universal peace will alone allow of Russia's marshalling all the creative forces, and adds:

"The government will pursue an active foreign policy in the spirit of the Democratic principles proclaimed by the Russian revolution, and will strive for the conclusion of a universal peace."

The government, in its declaration regarding its participation in the forthcoming Allied conference, states that while discussing questions connected with the common war, the Russian representatives will not reach an understanding with the Allies on the basis of the revolution claimed by the revolutionary government at its inception.

"The government," it adds, "will extend its whole strength in support of the common cause of the Allies, to defend the country, to oppose every attempt at the conquest of territory of other nations, and to every attempt to impose the will of others on Russia."

In restoring the fighting power of the Russian army, it is declared, the government will follow the democratic principles already promulgated by the War Minister.

NO MOVE TO MOSCOW.

Petrograd cable: With the announcement of the new Cabinet comes the statement, emanating from a government source, that preparations for the removal of the government to Moscow have been stopped, as there is no prospect that such removal will be necessary in the near future. No reason for the abandonment of the evacuation plan is forthcoming, but it is generally assumed that the improvement in the political outlook is the cause. Fears for the safety of the city of Petrograd as a result of the capture by the Germans of Riga have subsided.

BRITAIN FIRM BEHIND ALL FRENCH DEMAND

No Peace, Says Lloyd George, Till Alsace-Lorraine Restored.

H. H. ASQUITH

Scores Tricky Talk of German Leaders, and is Confident.

A London cable: Premier Lloyd George, addressing a delegation of insurance committees, who called to-day to urge a readjustment of health insurance and the establishment of a Ministry of Health, declared that all the nation's thoughts and energies were taken up by the terrible demands made in defence of liberty and freedom. He wished he could see the end, but the task which the nation had taken in hand must be accomplished. He could not think of any statement which would tend to prolong the war that the assertion of the German Foreign Secretary, Von Kuehlmann, that Germany would never contemplate the making of concessions to France respecting Alsace-Lorraine.

However long the war lasted, said the Prime Minister, Great Britain intended to stand by her gallant ally, France, until she redeemed her oppressed children from the degradation of a foreign yoke. This meant that the country must husband its resources, and the demands were put forward for improvements here and there, his answer was: "Concentrate upon victory."

For the moment, every claim upon the exchequer must be considered in the light of the terrible possibilities of the war, and when the war was over, in a freer, happier atmosphere, the country could begin to rebuild, reconstruct and regenerate.

DOUBTS GERMAN SINCERITY.

Addressing a war-aimed meeting at Liverpool to-night, H. H. Asquith, former Premier, referred to recent declarations by German statesmen and writers, and said that his previously expressed skepticism regarding the Reichstag's peace resolution was justified by the event, for the German parties had been scuffling ever since with infinite acrimony concerning its orthodox interpretation, and confusion had become worse confounded with the publication of the Chancellor's reply to the Papal note.

Doubtless, said Mr. Asquith, in both Germany and Austria there was a widespread and genuine desire for peace, and in the Reichstag itself, slender as was its powers and divided its councils, there were indications of a growing spirit of revolt against the Government methods.

"But," continued Mr. Asquith, "the dominant fact with which we have to deal is neither German public opinion nor the German Parliament, but the German Government. Does that Government mean business? Is its desire for peace sincere? Depend upon it, the world will never find the way to peace through a morass of equivocations and ambiguities. Plain questions and concrete cases are studiously avoided. We are left in the dimness of a rhetorical twilight and we are asked to lay down our arms without other safeguard than the exhibition of the three virtues, Faith, Hope and Charity."

CLIMSY GERMAN MANOEUVRE.

Admitting that nobody pretends to believe that either side is sincere, he said, it is not to be formulated an ultimatum, detailed and exhaustive, which must be accepted chapter for chapter and as an indispensable condition, and that many things must be left for action and adjustment by negotiation. Mr. Asquith declared that the same time the allies must be resolute and definite in their assertion of the means whereby peace must be attained.

He referred to the speech of the German Foreign Secretary, Dr. von Kuehlmann, respecting Alsace-Lorraine, and said: "German diplomacy is not celebrated for definiteness, but even in its analysis it will be difficult to find a more clumsy or more transparent manoeuvre than this maladroit attempt to sow discord between ourselves and our French allies. Von Kuehlmann relegates the Belgian question to a secondary position."

"I have formerly asked whether Germany was ready to restore Belgium in the only real sense acceptable to the allies, but I have received no answer, and von Kuehlmann, who can be notoriously definite and precise concerning Alsace-Lorraine, preserves regarding Belgium an unbroken, but significant silence."

GENERAL SITUATION.

Concluding with an allusion to the general situation in the East, he said: "It is to be a contest of endurance we have no reason to lose heart or hope. During the last fortnight our unconquerable troops have been doing great things both in Flanders and Mesopotamia. There is still need of economy and good organization in the necessary commodities, but not the slightest danger of our being starved into submission."

"Take the allies as a whole, including America, whose contribution to the common stock becomes every month a factor in the growing quietude—survey the relative powers of endurance of the allies; measure them by any standard, naval, military or economic and after you have made allowance for every dubious or hazardous contingency, even for the temporary paralysis of Russia as an aggressive power, can there be doubt that the material, no less than the moral, preponderance rests manifestly and increasingly with our cause?"

GERMAN WASTAGE.

How Enemy Troops Are Being Wiped Out.

A London cable: Reuter's correspondent at British headquarters in France, telegraphs to-day:

"The following interesting reports are given as an example of how enemy troops are being wiped out."

"Case of the 24th Prussian Division. This latter was raised in January and sent to the west front in April, to the northwest of St. Quentin. They were immediately heavily attacked by the British. These last of the 1918 class were badly shaken by a whirlwind bombardment, which inflicted heavy casualties, while one regiment lost many prisoners. The division appeared in September on the Ypres front, being thrown in to counter-attack us on Sept. 20, being repulsed. Again, on Sept. 26, some elements of the same division were completely shattered. The result is that the division exists only in name. Several of the officers who were not trusted by the non-coms have been tried. This is interesting, because it is a reminder that the old German officer class has almost entirely been wiped out."

PLENTY OF OIL

For British Navy Fuel, Acquired by Standard Oil.

A Washington report: An ample supply of fuel oil for the British navy was assured to-day by a conference between their Government representatives, Standard Oil officials and members of the Shipping Board. Oil reserves in Great Britain have run so low, the conference disclosed, that many British tankers have been forced to remain inactive.

To remedy this situation the Shipping Board will rush construction of 58 oil tankers recently commandeered in ship-building yards, and is considering building at least 40 more. The problem, it was brought out to-day, is entirely one of tonnage, as there is an abundance of oil on this side of the Atlantic.

The British representatives proposed that the Shipping Board requisition Standard Oil ships to carry supplies to their navy, but Standard Oil officials showed the British that many of the ships in the United States, the British representatives and officials of the Standard Oil will continue conferences this week in New York, where a definite estimate of the actual British needs will be worked out.

A BULGAR WIN.

Sofia Claims Ally Defeat in Macedonia.

A London cable: Allied troops made a strong attack Tuesday south of Doiran, north of Saloniki, according to the Bulgarian official statement issued to-day. The attack, begun after violent artillery fire for twenty-four hours, were broken up at two points by the Bulgarian artillery. The English losses are reported to have been heavy, while the Bulgarians suffered only slightly. Allied troops who gained a temporary footing in one of the Bulgarian advanced trenches, the statement claims, were either killed or captured.

The reported Allied attacks south of Doiran probably are not in force. The official statement from Berlin on Wednesday said that southwest of Lake Doiran, "the Bulgarians repulsed several British detachments which attacked after lengthy artillery preparation." There has been no British statement on this fighting.

ALSACE-LORRAINE

Alone Bar to Peace, Says Von Kuehlmann.

Amsterdam cable: In addressing the Reichstag Foreign Secretary von Kuehlmann said, according to a Berlin despatch, that as far as he was able to view the world situation there was no question of impediment to peace, which could not be hindered by negotiations, except for the French demand for Alsace-Lorraine.

Chancellor Michaelis is quoted as saying: "As long as our enemies confront us with demands which appear unacceptable to every civic German, as long as our opponents wish to interfere with our efforts to reach peace, as long as they demand that we shall long a piece of German soil, as long as they pursue the idea of driving a wedge between the German people and their Emperor, no long shall we with arms refuse the hand of peace. We can wait. This is working for us. Until our enemies perceive that they must reduce their claims, that they must speak the common sense of the U-bonts do their work. Our peace will yet come."

HUN RAILWAYS SHORT OF FUEL.

London cable: The German state railways are faced with the prospect of fuel and drastic limitation of traffic has begun, according to a despatch from Berlin. The railways propose to reduce heavy excess fares on express trains by heavy surcharges. A large number of fast trains have been eliminated from the winter schedule. The German railways will cut Saturday afternoon and Sunday services.

There can be too much of a good thing. A full house has emptied many a man's pocket.

Mr. Walter Hensman and Arthur Chair went Sunday at the latter's home, near Stirling.

Mr. Josh. Richardson and wife visited relatives in Smithfield, a couple of days
last week.

Mr. D. Thrasher and wife and family were Sunday guests with her sister, Mrs.
J. A. Morrow.

Silo-filling is in progress now.

Messrs. Harry Richardson and Willie Bate called on Pte. Chas. Bushaw, a returned soldier from the front, Sunday afternoon. Pte. Bushaw has been overseas nearly two years and was wounded in the right arm, disabling him for life.
He arrived home Saturday evening.

Guy Boulton and Mrs. Boulton spent Saturday in the City.

Mr. and Mrs. Willie Bush, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Fox from Prince Edward called up Sunday to spend the day with Mr. Bush's parents.

Mrs. E. Heagle had a very narrow escape on Sunday, while driving up to the school house. Her horse became light-headed at some bicycles lying by the road-side and started to run away.
Fortunately it did not upset the vehicle and no damage done, the horse being caught in time to save trouble.

for so long with acute rheumatism.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Sager were in Trenton last Saturday.

Tenders for Pulpwood Limit

Tenders will be received by the undersigned up to and including the seventeenth day of December next for the right to cut pulpwood and pine timber on a certain area situated in the vicinity of the Kapuskasing River in the Districts of Thurston and Algoma.

Tenders are to offer a flat rate per cord for all classes of pulpwood, whether spruce or other woods. The successful tender shall be required to pay for the Red and White Pine on the limit a flat rate of $10 per thousand feet board measure.

The successful tenderer shall also be required to erect a mill or mills on or near the territory, and to manufacture the wood into pulp and paper in the Province of Ontario, in accordance with the terms and conditions of sale which can be had on application to the Department.

Parties making tender will be required to deposit with their tender a marked cheque payable to the Honourable the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario, for Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000), which amount will be forfeited in the event of their not entering into agreement to carry out conditions, etc. The said Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000) will be held by the Department until such time as the terms and conditions of the agreement to be entered into have been complied with and the said mill erected, equipped and in operation.
The said sum may then be applied in payment of the said terms and conditions of the agreement and at such times as may direct in payment of monies due for taxes or of any other obligation, the sum being until the whole sum has been repaid.

The highest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

For particulars as to description of territory, capital to be invested, etc., apply to the undersigned.

CANADA

GEORGE the FIFTH, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India.

To all to whom these presents shall come, or to whom the same may in anywise concern—GREETING:

A Proclamation calling out the men comprised in Class 1 as described by the Military Service Act, 1917.

E. H. Newsome.
The Deputy Minister of Justice,
Canada

Whereas it is provided by the Militia Act of Canada, 1906, chapter 41, Section 69, that our Governor-General of Canada in Council may place our Militia of Canada, or any part thereof, on active service anywhere in Canada, and also beyond Canada for the defence thereof, at any time when it appears advisable so to do by reason of emergency;

And Whereas that part of our militia of Canada known as the Canadian Expeditionary Force is now engaged in active service overseas for the defence and security of Canada, the preservation of our Empire and of human liberty; and it is necessary owing to the emergencies of the war to provide reinforcements for our said Expeditionary Force in addition to those whose inclination or circumstances have permitted them to volunteer;

And Whereas by reason of the large number of men who have already left agricultural and industrial pursuits in our Dominion of Canada in order to join our Expeditionary Force as volunteers, and by reason of the necessity of maintaining under these conditions the productivity or output of agriculture and industry in our said Dominion, we have determined by and with the advice and consent of our Senate and House of Commons of Canada that it is expedient to secure the men so required; not by ballot as provided by our said Militia Act, but by selective draft; such re-enforcement, under the provisions of the Military Service Act, 1917, hereinafter referred to, not to exceed one hundred thousand men;

And Whereas it is accordingly enacted in and by the provisions of an Act of our Parliament of Canada, holden in the 7th and 8th years of our reign, and known as the Military Service Act, 1917, that every one of our male subjects who comes within one of the classes described and intended by the said Act shall be liable to be called out on active service in our Canadian Expeditionary Force for the defence of Canada, either within or beyond Canada; and that his service shall be for the duration of the present war and demobilization after the conclusion of the war;

And Whereas the men who are, under the provisions of the said last mentioned Act, liable to be called out, are comprised in six classes of which Class 1 is, by the provisions of the said Act, defined to consist of all our male subjects, ordinarily, or at any time since the 4th day of August, 1914, resident in Canada, who have attained the age of twenty years, who were born not earlier than the year 1883, and were on the 6th day of July, 1917, unmarried, or are widowers but have no child, and who are not within any of the following enumerated

EXCEPTIONS:—

- Members of our regular, or reserve, or auxiliary forces, as defined by our Army Act.
- Members of our military forces raised by the Governments of any of our other dominions or by our Government of India.
- Men serving in our Royal Navy, or in our Royal Marines, or in our Naval Service of Canada, and members of our Canadian Expeditionary Force.
- Men who have since August 4th, 1914, served in our Military or Naval Forces, or in those of our allies, in any theatre of actual war, and have been honourably discharged therefrom.
- Clergy, including members of any recognized order of an exclusively religious character, and ministers of all religious denominations existing in Canada at the date of the passing of our said
Military Service Act.
- Those persons exempted from military service by Order in Council of August 13th, 1873, and by Order in Council of December 6th, 1898;

And Whereas it is moreover provided by our said Military Service Act that our Governor-General in Council may from time to time by proclamation call out on active service as aforesaid any class of men in the said Act described, and that all men within the class so called out shall, from the date of such proclamation, be deemed to be soldiers enlisted in the military service of Canada and subject to military law, save as in the said Act otherwise provided; and that the men so called out shall report and shall be placed on active service in the Canadian Expeditionary Force as may be set out in such proclamation or in regulations; but that they shall, until so placed on active service, be deemed to be on leave of absence without pay;

And Whereas it is also provided by the said Act that at any time before a date to be fixed by proclamation an application may be made, by or in respect of any man in the class to be called out, to one of our local tribunals, established in the manner provided by the said Act in the province in which such man ordinarily resides, for a certificate of exemption from service upon any of the following

GROUND OF EXEMPTION:—

- That it is expedient in the national interest that the man should, instead of being employed in military service, be engaged in other work in which he is habitually engaged;
- That it is expedient in the national interest that the man should, instead of being employed in military service, be engaged in other work in which he wishes to be engaged and for which he has special qualifications;
- That it is expedient in the national interest that, instead of being employed in military service, he should continue to be educated or trained for any work for which he is then being educated or trained;
- That serious hardship would ensue, if the man were placed on active service, owing to his exceptional financial or business obligations or domestic position;
- Ill health or infirmity;
- That he conscientiously objects to the undertaking of combatant service, and is prohibited from so doing by the tenets and articles of faith in effect on the sixth day of July, 1917, of any organized religious denomination existing and well recognized in Canada at such date, and to which he in good faith belongs;

And that if any of the grounds of such application be established, a certificate of exemption shall be granted to such man.

And Whereas moreover it is enacted in and by the provisions of an Act of our Parliament of Canada holden in the 7th and 8th years of our reign, and known as the War Time Elections Act, that certain persons thereby disqualified from voting with such of their sons as on polling day are not of legal age, shall be exempt from combatant military and naval service;

And Whereas it is further provided by our said Military Service Act that applications for exemption from service shall be determined by our said local tribunals, subject to appeal as in the said Act provided, and that any man, by or in respect of whom an application for exemption from service is made, shall, so long as such application or any appeal in connection therewith is pending, and during the currency of any exemption granted him, be deemed to be on leave of absence without pay;

And Whereas our Governor-General of Canada in Council has determined to call out upon active service as aforesaid the men included in Class 1, as in the said Act and hereinbefore defined or described;

Now Therefore Know Ye that we do hereby call out the said Class 1, comprising the men in our said Military Service Act, 1917, and hereinbefore defined or described as to the said class belonging, on active service in our Canadian Expeditionary Force for the defence of Canada, either within or beyond Canada, as we may, in the command or direction of our Military Forces, hereafter order or direct.

And we do hereby strictly command, require and enjoin that each man who is a member of the said class shall, on or before the 10th day of November, 1917, in the prescribed form and manner, report himself for military service, unless application for his exemption shall then have been made by him or by another person entitled to apply on his behalf; wherein our loving subjects, members of the said class, are especially charged not to fail since not only do their loyalty and allegiance require and impose the obligation of careful and implicit obedience to these our strict commands and injunctions, but moreover, lest our loving subjects should be ignorant of the consequences which will ensue if they fail to report within the time limited as aforesaid, we do hereby forewarn and admonish them that any one who is hereby called out, and who without reasonable excuse fails to report as aforesaid, shall thereby commit an offence, for which he shall be liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for any term not exceeding five years with hard labour, and he shall nevertheless, if we so require, be compelled to serve immediately in our said Expeditionary Force.

And we do hereby proclaim and announce that for the greater convenience of our subjects, we have directed that prescribed forms, for reporting for service, and for application for exemption from service, may, at any time on or before the said 10th day of November, 1917, be obtained at any post office in our Dominion of Canada; and that reports for service and applications for exemption from service, if obtained at any of our said post offices and properly executed, shall be forwarded by our postmaster at the post office from which the same are obtained to their proper destinations as by our regulations prescribed, free of postage or any other charge.

And we do further inform and notify our loving subjects that local tribunals have been established in convenient localities throughout our Dominion of Canada for the hearing of applications for exemption from service upon any of the statutory grounds, as hereinbefore set out; that these our local tribunals so established will begin to sit in the discharge of their duties on the 8th day of November, 1917, and that they will continue to sit from day to day thereafter, as may be necessary or convenient, at such times and places as shall be duly notified, until all applications for exemption from service shall have been heard and disposed of; also that men belonging to the class hereby called out who have not previously to the said 8th day of November, 1917, reported for service, or forwarded applications for exemption through any of our post offices as aforesaid, may make applications in person for exemption from service to any of our said tribunals on the 8th, 9th or 10th day of November, 1917.

And we do hereby moreover notify and inform our loving subjects who are within the class hereby called out, that if, on or before the 10th day of November, 1917, they report themselves for military service, or if, on or before that day, application for exemption from service be made by them or on their behalf, they will not be required to report for duty, or be placed upon active service as aforesaid, until a day, not earlier than the 10th day of December, 1917, which will, by our registrar for the province in which they reported or applied, be notified to them in writing by registered post at their respective addresses as given in their reports for service, or applications for exemption from service, or at such substituted addresses as they may have respectively signified to our said registrar; and we do hereby inform, forewarn and admonish the men belonging to the class hereby called out that if any of them shall, without just and sufficient cause, fail to report for duty at the time and place required by notice in writing so posted, or shall fail to report for duty as otherwise by law required, he shall be subject to the procedure, pains and penalties by law prescribed as against military deserters.

Of all of which our loving subjects, and all others whom these presents may concern, are hereby required to take notice, rendering strict obedience to and compliance with all these our commands, directions and requirements, and governing themselves accordingly.

In Testimony Whereof

We have caused these Our Letters to be made Pa-ent, and the Great Seal of Canada to be hereunto affixed. WIT-NESS: Our Right Trusty and Right Entirely Beloved Cousin

There are many duties and obligations which as Large Distributors of Reliable Merchandise we owe our patrons, but in this day of unusual rising prices on all necessities and the lowering of quality standards to keep prices down we considered it our paramount duty to guard against inferior merchandise entering the Ritchie Store and to use our vast purchasing power to keep the prices down as near to the former level as possible. We have kept the prices down but not at the expense of quality! Our buyers went right to the source of supply many months in advance of our actual selling needs and first of all were assured that the goods were of the High Ritchie Standard and then secured the most advantageous prices that huge cash purchases and large quantities would permit. That of course applies to the many classes of merchandise which prevailing fashions do not materially effect. This store is the home of all that is new and authentic in Fashion tendencies. New York dictates the styles seen at Ritchie's and much of the Ladies' Wearing Apparel is imported direct from that Fashion Centre, and even these are priced quite moderately. We do not and no reliable or progressive business house would not, make the assertion that pre-war prices prevail as that would be out of the question, but we do claim for the Ritchie prices that they are as low, if not lower than to be found elsewhere for the same High Standard of Merchandise—our prices will stand comparison on this point and we invite it. Shop at Ritchie's and Save. Absolute satisfaction Must go With Every Purchase Made at the Ritchie Store otherwise your money cheerfully refunded.

Obsequies of Bruce Miller

Madoc on Friday paid its last tribute of respect to a well-known citizen, Mr. Bruce Miller, whose career as baggage-man on the Madoc train was closed as the result of an unfortunate accident in Belleville yard. Many citizens gathered at the family residence, including friends from Belleville, and attended the last sad rites. The obsequies were under the auspices of the Masonic Order. Rev. W. B. Tucker conducted service after which the remains were taken to Madoc Cemetery in the Thompson Company's motor hearse. Many motes being in the cortege. Wor. Bro. Frank Smith of Madoc Lodge officiated at the Masonic rites at the grave. The bearers were Messrs. W. H. Brooks, C. E. McCov, A. Ketcheson, W. J. Hill, F. Curry and George West.—Ontario.

The rate of pensions for non-commissioned officers and men is to be increased 25 per cent. The British pensions are being increased also. The high cost of living hits the national treasury as well as the private pocket.

River Valley W. I.

R. V. W. I. held their last meeting at the home of Mrs. Earl Morrow, October 4th, with the attendance of 23. Instrumental music was given by Miss Fannie Heesman. Mrs. Edgar Morrow gave a number of good recipes. Three quilts made by members of the Institute were sold for $12.00. A Red Cross Quilt made by Mrs. M. Vandervoort, Miss Florence Koschich and Mrs. Percy Utman, was donated by them to the Institute. Tickets are being sold by girls for this quilt, the lucky ticket wins the quilt. Money received from these quilts will be used for Red Cross purposes. Collection amounted to $2.10, meeting was closed by singing the National Anthem. The next will be at the home of Mrs. Fred Carr November 1st. The ladies in charge of programme will be Mrs. Alex Parks, Mrs. Percy Utman, Mrs. Wm. Bush and Miss Lucy Boulton. Visitors welcome.

The following shipment was packed and sent to Belleville, 12 sheets, 30 pillow slips, 2 suits of pyjamas, 5 hospital shirts, 9 pairs of socks and 3 pairs of bed socks, also 15 Xmas boxes was packed and sent to our boys overseas.

On Guard At The Reading Gate!

It is a fine thing to guard our homes against alien soldiers of whose purposes we are all aware. But it is also very important to guard them against other insidious foes that creep in under the disguise of friendly entertainers to plunder and destroy the cherished ideals the lofty standards, the clear values that have given the home its character.

If you will familiarize your young people with the best reading, they will not be likely to crave what is inferior and demoralizing. The Youth's Companion is powerful influence in awakening a taste for what is best in reading. It is on guard at the reading gate! Nothing cheap, mean or hateful passes its challenge. But neither does the crabbed and dull and austere. Cheery idealism is the Companion's counterpoint. Put it on guard at your reading gate!

The Companion is $2.25 a year. If you do not know it, by all means send for sample copies giving a Forecast of what the next volume will bring.

Our offer includes, for $2.25:

1. The Youth's Companion—52 issues of 1918.

2. All the remaining issues of 1917.

3. The Companion Home Calendar for 1918.

E. G. Porter in Field In West Hastings

Belleville, Oct. 22.—Mr. E. G. Porter, K. C., M. P., who has represented West Hastings in the Dominion Parliament for 17 years, states that if his friends desire he will be their win-the-war candidate in the next election, and by so doing would not be sacrificing any of his political principles, but, under the present conditions, would be doing his country a greater service. Mr. Porter's only son is at present at the front.

CLASSING MEN FOR SERVICE

Those in First Class Under Military Service Act are Placed in Grades

Ottawa, Oct. 23.—Only those men found physically fit for combatant service over-looked by the medical boards will be included in the first grades called to the colours under the Military Service Act. All such men are now being placed by the examiners in Category A.

Men not in flawless physical condition are being classed as to their fitness for war service in non-combatant units, either in Canada or overseas according to the shape they are in. Such men may be called up later and re-examined or they may be called for non-combatant services. The immediate need, of course, is for men fit for active service.

Experience shows that the physical condition of men varies greatly; that is, a man may improve greatly in a few weeks or months. Some of those passed as fit by the medical boards recently had been rejected by the doctors when they had applied for enlistment in the volunteer forces.

The village of Hastings is without a newspaper. The proprietor, Mr. J. Wilton, has closed the office and gone to Toronto to get into the grocery business.

According to an estimate made February 1 of this year, the Great War had, up to that time, cost the world $71,740,000,000.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson IV. Oct. 28, 1917.
Ezra's Return from Babylon.—Ezra 1: 1-36.

Commentary.—I. Preparations for the return (vs. 1-5). The first ten verses of the preceding chapter give an outline of the return to Jerusalem of exiles from Babylon with Ezra as their leader. This significant record is made: "For Ezra had prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord, and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments." We have in the verses preceding the lesson a partial catalogue of those who went with Ezra from Babylon to Jerusalem. The place of assembly was probably not far from Babylon, near one of the canals connected with the Euphrates River. Ahava, a name which occurs in the people gathered near the Euphrates. When Ezra found that there were none of the Levites present to make the journey to Jerusalem, he sent for some of them in order that the temple service might be provided with ministers of this rank. Ezra's call met with a ready response, and a considerable number of Levites became members of the expedition.

II. Prayer for protection (vs. 21-23). 21. Ezra speaks in the first person in giving the account of his great undertaking. "Proclaim a fast," fasting was recognized as a means of successfully approaching God in prayer. Jehoshaphat proclaimed a fast when threatened by his enemies (2 Chron. 20: 3). Jehoiakim proclaimed a fast (Jer. 35: 9), and Esther ordered the observance of a fast that she might approach the king on behalf of her people (Esth. 4: 16). Fasting indicates submission to God's will and humility, and is an expression of dependence upon God and faith in him. By fasting one places spiritual ground above temporal. That we might afflict ourselves.—R. V. To seek . . . a right way.—This was an acknowledgment, that Ezra felt his insufficiency for so important an undertaking, and an expression of his confidence in God's power and willingness to render aid. Our substance—Goods or property.

22. Ashamed to require . . . soldiers.—Ezra had expressed to the king his confidence in God's protecting care over those who trust him, and it would be inconsistent to ask for a band of soldiers to ward off the attacks of enemies. The enemy.—The route to Jerusalem lay through regions infested with bands of robbers ready to fall upon unprotected travelers. Ezra recognized the danger, but he was determined to depend upon the protecting hand of Jehovah, whose servants he and his companions were. Hand of our God—A symbol of the divine power, protection and love. 23. Intreated.—True prayer is never offered in vain. The company gathered at "the river of Ahava," believed in the importance of their divinely-appointed mission, recognized the dangers of the journey and offered the prayer of faith.

III. Precautions taken (vs. 24-30). 24. Separated.—Set apart for a particular and important service. Chief of the priests.—Those among the priests who were leading men on account of their ability and perhaps because of their mature age. Sherebiah, Hashabiah, and ten of their brethren.—According to vs. 15-19 these were Levites. The passage, "Beside Sherebiah, Hashabiah and ten of their brethren with them" (R. V. margin), indicates that in addition to the twelve priests, twelve Levites were appointed to have charge of the treasures. See v. 30. 25. The offering for the house of our God (R. V.)—a dedicatory offering. Which the king had offered.—The king and the chief men in his kingdom were deeply impressed with the power of the God of Israel and with the sacredness of worship offered to him, and were ready to contribute liberally to that worship. They joined with the Jews in their offerings for the temple service. Weighed.—Money was mostly reckoned by weight. Unto their hand.—The treasures were carefully weighed and a strict account was kept of the amount in order that there might be no loss. They must deliver in Jerusalem the exact amount that was weighed into "their hand" in Babylon. Six hundred and fifty talents of silver.—At $1,500 to the talent the silver would amount to $975,000. Of gold an hundred talents.—The talent of gold was worth upward of $25,000, and the value of one hundred talents was at least $2,500,000. 27. A thousand darics (R. V.)—The daric was a coin worth about five dollars. Fine copper—A kind of brass in which was possibly a mixture of gold. This was an alloy highly prized by the ancients on account of the difficulty of its production and because of the high polish which it was capable of taking. The total value of the treasures has been placed at $4,000,000 to $5,000,000. Ye are holy unto the Lord.—The priests and Levites had been set apart and consecrated to the service of the Lord. The vessels are holy also.—They were separated from profane uses and were set apart for the temple service. A freewill offering.—The abundance of the gifts that attests the devotion of the giver, but the spirit of devotion which he makes the offering. 29. Watch ye and keep them.—A sacred trust committed to them for which they must account, and they were exhorted to exercise the utmost diligence. Until ye weigh them before the chief of the priests.—At Jerusalem there could be no cessation of watchfulness. They had deposited the treasures intact with the proper officers at the house of Jehovah. Chambers—Rooms in the temple used as store-rooms and as places of meeting for the priests. 30. So the priests and Levites received (R. V.)—From this it is reasonably certain that the treasures were committed to twelve priests and an equal number of Levites.

IV. A prosperous journey (vs. 31-36). 31. First month.—This was the Jewish month Abib, or Nisan, corresponding nearly with April of our year.

The company arrived in Jerusalem about the first of July. The distance in a direct line is five hundred miles, but it is probable that Ezra and his company went nearly nine hundred miles to avoid difficult desert marches delivered on from the enemy. The Jews were saved from the attack of those who would naturally have fallen upon them for the immense wealth they were carrying with them such as lay in wait for it is not stated whether any attack was made upon the company or not, but in either case the Lord protected them, or in causing their defeat if they tried to plunder the returning exiles. 32. And there three days.—Thus allowing time for rest and for making plans for future action. 33-36. The next step was to deliver the treasures to the priests and Levites authorities to receive them at the temple. An account was taken of the weight of the silver and the gold, as well as the number of the talents and the darics. The inventory was made before leaving Babylon.

Questions.—Who was Ezra? What aid was given him by the king of Persia? How long had it been since the first return from captivity under Zerubbabel? How many accompanied Ezra from Babylon to Jerusalem? What was the value of the treasures carried with them? What was the occasion for a call to fasting and prayer? How was the faith of Ezra shown? How long were the people in making the journey?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Armistice faith. 1. Exalted God before the heathen. 11. Directed the people to seek God. 11a. Prepared against misfortune. 1.—Exalted God before the heathen. Ezra was about to conduct his brethren on a perilous journey to Jerusalem. He did not doubt that he would take the place in his plans which belonged to God. He wanted to show that God was the object of his supreme confidence. When making request of the king for authority to make his proposed journey, he declared his faith in God and his providence to promote the interests of his people. Ezra knew that he had but to ask an escort from the king. He had influence enough at court to have procured such help. His faith impelled him to rely on the protection of a Babylonian guard. He considered that to reveal any anxiety would appear to a heathen king like a practical denial of the overruling providence of Jehovah. A band of soldiers would have hindered the "Shepherd of Israel." With the spiritual perception Ezra saw that his declining the escort would leave open to view God and his gracious and glorious government.

II. Directed the people to seek God. Ezra was accompanied to Jerusalem by members of the same families as Zerubbabel had taken with him. They were on their way from captivity to liberty, from exile to their ancestral home, from the land of idolatry to the scene of true worship. They were in a position of great responsibility, being entrusted with the care of the treasury of the God of Israel. They were in danger of being attacked. They were not organized for defence. Ezra was not indifferent to the danger to which he might be exposed in marching without a band of soldiers. They trusted in the God of infinite power, who governs the world and can dispatch his angels to their aid. As are agreeable to his will. The journey from Babylon to Jerusalem under the guidance and protection of Jehovah was somewhat comparable to the journey of their forefathers in their exodus from Egypt under the guidance of the Lord. Ezra made arrangements for the custody of the offerings with which he was entrusted. It was fitting that the priests should carry the things that belonged to the temple. "To no other guardianship but that of the possessors of a symbolic and ceremonial purity could the vessels of a symbolic and ceremonial worship be entrusted." With exactness Ezra charged them with their trust. The safety of the treasure meant much to him. In answer to the humble prayers of Ezra and his company, God gave them guidance and guardianship all along the journey to Jerusalem. They reached their destination with joy and without molestation. It was the end of a toilsome march. It brought the satisfaction of a long cherished hope of reunion with their own people in the true worship of Jehovah. Their faith was rewarded. Ezra and his company were just such characters as were needed in Jerusalem at that time T. R. A.

Profit by These. Do not be content with following good advice; catch up with it. Keep an eye on the job ahead, but keep the other eye and both hands on the job you have. There is plenty of room at the top, because those who get there are the few who started early to avoid the rush. The man who goes half way to meet Fortune is more likely to find her than the man who waits for her to knock at his door. The men who succeed best when they work for others are those whose aim in doing so is to help others to succeed for themselves.

PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE FOR THE BEGINNER WITH SHEEP

Common Sense Boiled Down and Practical Pointers Told Plainly From Experience—By W. H. Underwood.

I have maintained a flock of good sheep on my farm for a good many years and have always found them very profitable. Why more of these animals are not raised is something I can hardly understand. There are many reasons for raising sheep. First, is the money that can be obtained for the wool and mutton. It is needless to say that there is a big demand for these products and every indication points to a big demand for many years to come.

This class of animal should be maintained to aid in keeping down weeds. When weeds are young and sappy, sheep are in a sense insatiable devourers of the same. There are but few kinds of weeds that they will not trim down and consume and turn into good mutton if they have access to the same at a comparatively early stage in the growth of the weeds. When other pasture is not over abundant, this cropping down of weeds will be a complete boon. They are equally ravenous also for the seeds of weeds. When these have been formed and even when mature and consumed by the sheep, they are so finely ground that they do not grow when dropped upon the ground.

Sheep ought to be raised because of the influence which they exert upon fertility. No class of animal raised on the farm will equal them in the favorable influence thus exerted. This arises first from the readily available condition in which droppings reach the soil; second, from the scattered condition in which they reach the land, and third, from the general distribution of the droppings all over the land. In this way sheep leave the land richer in available fertility when they graze upon it than it was when the grazing began. Thus it is that the proverb has arisen that the sheep has a golden hoof.

Sheep are docile and easily cared for. Most of the care they need is required when other farm operations are slack. The returns from sheep are quick and many, profits made principally from pasture, with a little concentrated feed to finish up on; a very small amount as compared with the grain feed necessary to finish other farm animals for the market.

In starting a flock of sheep, some advocate the purchase of pure bred animals, such as a bunch of ewe lambs. This means a heavy outlay at the beginning, but not much income during the first year. A ewe should be two years old before she drops her first lamb. Thus the only source of income from the ewe lamb is her wool clip, which should pay for her keep. For the man who has had no experience in raising sheep, and who wants to start a flock at a small expense, it is better to buy a few mixed ewes than to buy pure-breds. The mixed ewes will be a little more difficult to care for, but they will be a little more profitable in the first year.

USE PURE-BRED RAM. After the ewes have been secured, one can well afford to pay a good price for a good ram. It is impossible to get a ram of too high quality. The better the quality in the ram, the better the quality one will get in his produce. This is true regardless of the quality of the ewes. In the selection of the ram choose for constitution, vigor and masculine characteristics generally. It is always desirable to avoid certain physical defects, such as what is commonly called a bad back, low back of the shoulders, or sharp heart girth and flat ribbed. All these undesirable characteristics, with the poor backed ram. A broad

This picture taken in one of the northern sections of Ontario show a flock of "animals with the golden hoof," such as one does not see in the older sections as a rule.

SHEEP GRAZE EVERYWHERE.

Sheep should be kept to consume the waste products. On every farm these waste products abound more or less. They abound not only in the form of weeds, but in the form of grasses of various kinds. These are found in quantities in the grain fields after the grain has been harvested. They are found in the highways beside the farm, and they are found along fence borders, whatsoever may be the bulk of them. The sheep that are given access to them will virtually clean up everything and in good form, and the food thus eaten would otherwise be wasted, at least in large measure. Sheep adapt themselves to waste places, and adapt waste places to themselves. They will graze to the very bottom of the deep ditches. They will graze to the very summit of steep hills and crop the succulent tufts of grasses that grow where other animals fear to tread. Thus through the helpful agency of sheep many a stony or hilly farm which otherwise would largely exist as "dead" producing land, will not much income during the first year. A ewe should be two years old before she drops her first lamb. Thus the only source of income from the ewe lamb is her wool clip, which should pay for her keep. For the man who has had no experience in raising sheep, and who wants to start a flock at a small expense, it is better to buy a few mixed ewes than to buy pure-breds. The mixed ewes will be a little more difficult to care for, but they will be a little more profitable in the first year.

SELECTING THE EWES.

When a ewe attains the age of five years many people consider her to be undesirable. Such a ewe, if a good breeder, will not appear so nice to the eye of the visitor as the ewe two or three years of age, but if her under is in a good condition there is no reason why she should not be profitable from a breeding standpoint until she is eight years old. She is the kind of an animal I would want to start backed ram straight from where his neck couples onto his shoulders right back to his tail is what should be required, and in addition, a round barrel over the heart girth, especially full over the heart girth in the present day. I could get one with his head coupled onto his shoulders I would not mind that neck, he will be able to get head down to graze. A short legged ram is desirable. And if the animal is well used to the ground on a good set of strong legs, it is just as much in his favor. The nearer the ram is to a good mutton carcass the better. He should have and will have a strong, broad head, broad and wrinkled nose when he is equipped as previously described.

The above described sheep will answer for the ram, be he of the mutton breed or fine wool breed. The covering or wool feature should be just as good as one can get it. It is desirable to get a fleece on the ram with the longest growth of staple or wool fibre possible, and as dense and compact on his skin and of as fine quality as possible. It is hard to get length, density, fineness of fibre, freedom from yellow, gummy, discolored wool, all in the same animal, but this can be approximated by keeping all the desirable features of fleece and carcass in mind when selecting the ram. These qualities are more or less transmissible to the offspring and, therefore should be considered carefully in selecting a ram for breeding purposes.

No grade ram should be selected. There can be no real improvement secured from the use of a grade in any kind of a breeding venture that is worth talking about. The pure bred sire is the only kind that should be used, if you would ever use a ram lamb for breeding. My reason for this is that a lamb makes its best growth in its first year, and if it is used for breeding before it is a year old, its growth and full development is naturally hindered. Lambs sired by a ram lamb are not nearly so large as those sired by an older ram, and they do not always do well and make good grow-up.

The ram should have the very best of care during the breeding season. It is important to keep this animal in good flesh, strong and vigorous. He should be provided with a ration such as a little grain, clover or alfalfa hay, and a consistent variety that will encourage an appetite and yet temperate to avoid founder or overfeeding. A good way of being sure that the ewes are bred as fast as they come in season is to dust the belly of the ram with oil and turn him in with the flock a short time each night. He will find the ewes in season, serve them and leave a little oil on their bodies, by which they can be detected and removed from the rest of the flock as fast as bred. The again after 14 days or so in order that he may catch any that may have come in season again.

The aim should be to have the ewes in good condition at the time for lambing. It is an easier matter to lay flesh on a ewe before she is pregnant than to lay it on after she is pregnant. The feed as used in developing the ewes should be fat, but in good condition. It is not good to have the ewes too fat, but in good condition when they are to lamb. They should have the fat to make them fit for the lambing. Oats and alfalfa hay and mangeling, and the animals allowed to run on during the day with access to some good clover or alfalfa hay, will produce splendid results. Turnips and other roots are very beneficial to the breeding flock in the fall and winter, and the winter, as they help to counteract the binding tendency of grain and provide succulence.

The new ewes, the young ewes, should be done. These ewes, which are the oldest and least profitable, should be separated from the rest of the flock and fattened for the market. The number of the best ewe lambs should be selected to replace the old ewes which have been discarded, thus selecting the foundation for the future breeding flock. If this method is followed up, in a few years all the old ewes will be replaced by younger ones of better type and breeding. By getting a new sire every two years an excellent flock can be built up from a small outlay of money. If after a few years of experience with grade ewes, one desires to establish a pure bred flock, a few choice pure bred ewes may be added to the original flock. Then by proper care and selection the pure bred ewes may be increased from year to year and the grades discarded.

"BELA"

"All right," said Jack. "Anything to oblige." Turning, he opened the door and shouted for Sam.

Sam presently appeared, tousled and flushed with sleep, his blue eyes scornfully resentful.

"What do you want now?" he demanded. "You made me lose sleep last night."

"Well," said Jack, "all that is over. We're making Bela here to choose between us and settle the thing for good. We've all said our say, but she allowed she wanted to hear what the cook had to offer before she closed. Speak up."

Sam was effusively startled into wakefulness. He became very pale, and fixed Bela with a kind of nervous glare. It seemed to him like a horrible burlesque of something sacred. He hated her for allowing it. He did not reflect that she might not have been able to prevent it. She did not look at him.

"Do I understand right?" he said, stiffly. "You're all proposing to her to be a body?"

"That's right," said Jack. "And out of goodness of heart she gives you a chance, too."

Sam's jaw snapped together, and his mouth became a hard line.

"Much obliged," he said. "I resign my chance. I'm not looking for a wife." He went back into the house.

It was not what the other men expected to hear. Suspecting an insult to the object of their own desires, they turned on him angrily. They would never have allowed him to have her, but neither should he turn her down.

"And a good thing for you, too!" cried Joe.

"By George, I've a good mind to thrash him for that!" muttered Jack.

His attention was attracted in the other direction by a laugh from Bela. It had anything but a merry sound, but their ears were not sharp enough to detect the lack. Bela's nostrils were dilated, and her lip oddly turned back. But she laughed.

"He is a funny cook!" she said. "I got caught!"

"Oh, never mind him!" said Big Jack. "He doesn't count! What is your answer?"

Bela stopped laughing. "Well, I got to think about it," she said. "I tell you to-morrow."

CHAPTER VIII.

The situation at Nine-Mile Point four hours she required for her answer promised to be hard to get through.

The interim of waiting for a lady to make up her mind is sufficiently trying on a man's nerves under the most favorable circumstances; but to be obliged to endure the company of all his rivals meanwhile was almost too much.

Breakfast was eaten in a dangerous electrical silence. No man dared to speak of what was in every man's mind, and to make trivial conversation was impossible under that atmospheric pressure.

Afterward, when Bela announced her intention of going away for a while, every man, much as he desired her company, felt relieved, and no word was spoken to stay her departure.

They let her go without so much as looking out to see which way she went. As a matter of fact, nobody was willing to let anybody else look; therefore, he could not look himself.

Thereafter they breathed more freely. At least, they were all in the same boat. They were not under the intolerable strain of watching every look of her eyes and interpreting every word she spoke for a sign.

The worst they had to look forward to was one more day of unutterable boredom. Each man was buoyed up by the hope that it might be the last of such days for him.

Sam went about his work with a wooden face and a sore and aching heart. He was not much of a self-analyst. He called Bela all manner of hard names to himself, without stopping to ask why, if she were such a worthless creature, he should feel so concerned about her.

A woman who took her pleasure in provoking four men to the point of murder was not worth bothering about, he told himself a hundred times; but he continued to be very much bothered.

"I'll never let her get me on my hook!" he cried, angrily—meaning while the hook was in his gills!

After he had given the men their dinner, he too, went away from camp, bent upon his own devices. No one paid any attention to him.

A couple of hundred yards east of the shack a good-sized creek emptied into the lake. The stones of the shore over which it tumbled musically. Farther inland it pursued a slower, deeper course.

According to Jack, in about a quarter of a mile one found it issuing out of a lovely little meadow, through which it meandered crookedly, its course marked out by willow bushes. The meadow was Sam's objective. He had often been there before. It was about a quarter of a mile long, and no more than a good stone's throw across from place to place. Though the level of the ground was several feet above the creek, the ground, like the creek bottoms generally, was spongy and damp, with dry islands here and there.

The grass was amazingly luxuriant. Lined in the strong sunlight, and hemmed all round by the secretive pines, the place was the very picture of a cheerful retreat. Silent, strong-winged water-fowl frequented it, and more than once Sam had caught a glimpse of the noble figure of a moose stepping from among the trees.

Sam, ever anxious to learn the lore of the country, was experimenting in trapping muskrats. Finding a couple of the little beasts snared and dragged at the doors of their own dwellings, he went to work to skin them. His inexperienced fingers made a mess of the job.

He was sitting thus occupied on the edge of a little cut-bank, with his feet hanging over. A clump of willows flanked him on either side. The clear waters of the brook eddied sluggishly a few inches under his feet.

In the middle of his bloody task, something caused him to look over his shoulder, and there, not twenty feet from him, peering through the willows, he saw Bela.

From a variety of causes, he blushed at the sight of her hair. For one thing, he was thinking bitterly of her at that very moment; for another, he saw, or imagined he saw, scorn in her eyes for his clumsy handiwork upon the muskrat.

He hastily tossed the little carcass into the water, and then regretted having done so.

"What are you spying on me for?" he demanded, hotly.

The word was strange to Bela, but the tone conveyed its sense. She promptly took fire from his heat. Showing her own proudly, she said: "I don't know spyin'."

"Following me around," said Sam. "Watching what I do without my knowing."

"I follow you for cause I want to," said Bela, indignantly. "I think maybe you got sense. If you not want to talk to me right, I go away again. You ain't got sense, I think. Get mad for not's."

Sam was a little ashamed.

"Well—I'm sorry," he muttered. "What did you want to talk about?"

She did not immediately answer. Coming closer, she dropped to her knees on the little hummock of dry earth.

"I show you how to skin him, if you want," she suggested, pointing to the other muskrat.

Sam swallowed his pride. "All right, go ahead," he replied.

Cutting off the paws of the little animal and making an incision over his broadest end, she deftly rolled back the skin, and drew it off inside out over his head like a glove.

Then, cutting a willow stem beside her, she transformed it with two half cuts into a little spring-frame, over which she drew the late muskrat's overcoat. The whole operation did not consume five minutes.

"Easy enough when you know how," admitted Sam, sheepishly.

"Hang it up to dry," she said, handing it over.

They stretched in the grass, side by side, and hanging over the edge of the creek, washed their hands in the creek. A silence fell upon them. Each was waiting for the other to speak. Sam was trying to resist a great tenderness that threatened to undermine all his fortifications.

Finally he asked again: "What was it you wanted to talk about?"

Bela was not yet ready to answer. She threw up little cascades of water with her hands. Sam, watching, was suddenly struck by the fact that they were not at all like ordinary hands.

This was the first pair of hands he had ever distinguished in his life. They were most beautiful objects, the backs every color, the palms and fingers tips a lovely dusky pink. They were useful hands, too—thin, strong, nervous. Watching them play in the water, he forgot the argument going on inside him.

"You not mad wit' me now?" murmured Bela softly.

This reminded him that he had every reason to be angry with her—though he had temporarily forgotten the reasons. He turned his face away, frowning, blushing again, the picture of anger. It was partly directed against himself, that he should have so little self-command.

"Then why you mak' wrinkles in your face to me?" asked Bela.

"Ah, cut it out!" he said, exasperated. "Never mind my face! What did you want to say?"

"I can't say it when I think you mad," murmured Bela.

"No!" said Sam. "I want to be your friend," he added. "You can't always regulate your face."

There was another silence. Bela studied his averted face with a curious wistfulness. He was very difficult to handle.

"You want see my cache?" she asked abruptly, at last. "Where I stay?"

Sam's heart leaped up. Old Prudence shook his staff in vain. "Yes, if you like," he said, breathlessly, scowling harder than ever.

She smiled at her feet. "Stay here," she said. "I come back soon."

She disappeared around the willows without vouchsafing any further explanation. Sam lay as she left him, scowling at the water, very much confused as to his internal sensations.

As it had happened before, no sooner was the intoxication of her presence over than he began to berate himself for his weakness.

"Weak as water!" he mentally scolded himself. "Just because she's pretty, you forget every blame thing! There's a whole lot of funny business about her that needs explaining. But so charming a whole. What business have you got fooling with any girl, anyhow? You've got other problems to solve. For God's sake, take a brace!"

He was communing with himself in this fashion, the graceful, proud, a dugout poked itself around a bend of the little grass-fringed canal below. Presently followed, kneeling in the stern, Bela with her quiet face and glowing eyes, wielding a paddle with invisible grace.

She floated toward him noiselessly, bringing the grassy bank to his eye, and that with deft turns of the wrist. She was as harmonious against the background of brown water and green grass as a wild duck.

It was such an intimate, cosy little stream; the grassy banks seemed to embrace the canoe as they let it pass. So charming was the sight that Sam forgot his prudency and broke into a beaming smile.

She brought her little craft to a stop before him.

"Get in," she said, pointing to the bow. "Tak' care!"

It was Sam's first experience with a native craft. It looked strange. He looked carefully over the bank on his stomach. Finding the floor of the dugout with his feet, he gingerly stood up. It staggered alarmingly under him, and he hastily embraced the bank again, unhappily conscious of a lack of dignity.

A great piece of the sod came away in his hands. He lost his balance, and was catapulted overboard. He landed in the water in a sitting position, wearing an absurd expression of surprise. Bela, seeing what was coming, saved herself from a like fate by throwing herself forward in the canoe.

Sam's streaming head emerged from the creek, with the same look of surprise on his face. The water reached to his waist. Bela looked at him, and went off into a rippling peal of laughter.

Sam blinked and scowled and dashed the water out of his eyes. His face offered a study in varying expressions. At first he tried to laugh with her, but her laughter was intolerable. Suddenly he exploded:

"Ah, it's out! Sounds like a chicken!"

The angrier he got the harder Bela was obliged to laugh. It had an apologetic ring, but the tears rolled down her cheeks. Sam began to think she had done it on purpose, and said so.

"No! No!" gasped Bela. She pointed across the creek. "Shallow there. You can step in easy."

Sam, full of dignity, waded out and started home.

Bela was suddenly sobered. "Wait!" she cried. "Ain't you comin' wit' me?"

He affected not to hear her.

"I sorry I laugh," she said, genuinely distressed. "But—but you look so funny!" The unruly laughter threatened to escape her again. "Please come back, Sam."

"I can't come like this, can I?" he said, sternly.

"Sure!" she said. "I mak' good fire. You soon dry off."

He gradually allowed himself to be persuaded. Finally with dignity, somewhat marred by his bedraggled appearance, he took his place very gingerly in the bow. Bela bit her lips to keep the laughter in.

"I not want to laugh," she said, naively. "Someday inside mak' me. You face look so funny when you sit down in the water! Lak' a bear when him hear a noise—oh!"

Sam glowered in silence.

She exerted herself to charm away the black looks. "See papa muskrat," she said, pointing. "Sit so stiff under the fire, I think I see not'ing. Sit up wit' hands on his stomach. Lak' little ol' man and look mad. Look lak' Muskoos."

Meanwhile she was nosing the dugout cleverly around the grassy bends of the tiny stream and under the willows. It was like a toy boat on a fairy river. Sometimes the willows interlarded overhead, making a romantic green tunnel to be explored.

"Finally, as they drew near the woods at the head of the meadow, she turned her boat into a narrow backwater starred with little lilies, and drove it forward till it grounded as snugly as a ship in its berth."

Leading the way up the grassy bank, she pushed under the willows and introduced Sam into a veritable Titania's bower, completely encircled by the springing bushes. This was her cache. Her blankets lay neatly rolled up in a tarpaulin. There were her grub-box with stones upon the cover to keep out four-footed prowlers. Her spare muskies were hanging from the branches to dry.

She made Sam sit down in a patch of goodly sunshine, and in a jiffy had a crackling fire of dry willow blazing before him. He took off his coat and hung it to dry.

"Tak' off your shirt, too," she said. "Dry quicker."

Sam shook his head, blushing.

"No only," she said, coolly. "I guess you got it on shirt on, too."

The blue flannel shirt joined the coat beside the fire.

She handed him a towel to dry his hair with. Afterward she produced a comb.

"I comb your hair nice," she said. Sam started away in a panic and did not sit on the comb. Bela let him have it with a regretful look at the thick, bright hair. She started to brew tea.

"Don't be mad wit' me for 'cause I laugh," she said cajolingly. "Some day, maybe, I fall in water. I let you laugh all you want."

He looked up startled. He dared not glance forward at his future with her. Nevertheless, in spite of himself, he was relenting. He would relent quicker had she not continued to humiliate him out of conceit with himself by making him blush.

Naturally, he blamed her for that. Meanwhile there was delicious bodily comfort in sitting under shelter of the willows, warmed on the outside by the crackling fire, and all mellow within by hot tea. The corners of his mouth began to turn up.

His curiosity concerning her was still active. Remembering something she had said before, he asked: "Who is Muskoos?"

She smiled at his pronunciation.

"Muskoos," she corrected. "That mean little bear. He is my friend. He find to my father, too. He is little. Get crooked back. Know everything."

"Where do you live, Bela?" he asked.

"Over the lake by Hah-wah-sop," she answered readily. On second thought, she corrected the statement. "No; before I live there. My mother live there. Now I live where I am. Got no home. Got no people."

"But if your mother lives there, that's your home, isn't it?" said Sam respectfully.

Bela shrugged. "She got stay wit' her 'oban," she replied. "He no good. He wat you call 'obo'!"

"What did you leave for?" asked Sam.

She frowned at the difficulty of explaining this in English. "These people are poor an' foolish, an' dirty people," she said. "They not lak me ver' much. I not lak them ver' much. Only my mother. But I am live there because 'cause I not know nothing. Well, one day I see my father wit' a stick—no, hit my mother's 'oban' wit' a stick. So my mother tell me my father a white man. Her father white man, too. So I mos' white. So I go 'way from those people."

"But you've got to have some home—somebody to live with!" said Sam anxiously.

She glanced at her through her lashes. She shrugged. "Muskoos tell me what to do," she said simply. "He is my friend."

Sam in his concern for her situation forgot himself. "I—I'd like to be your friend, too," he stammered.

Bela smiled at him dazzlingly. "I lak her you say that," she returned simply.

They fell silent, mutually embarrassed, but not unhappy. There was something both delightful and dangerous in their proximity within that secret circle. The eyes of both confessed it.

"Will you eat?" asked Bela. "I have bread and fish."

She shook her head. "I have to go soon," he replied with a glance at the sun.

Her face fell. "I lak feed anybody come to my place," she said wistfully.

"Oh, well, go ahead," assented Sam, smiling.

RIGA

Founded by German merchants over seven and a half centuries ago, and with its present population, fifty per cent. Teutonic, Riga, the capital of the Russian province of Courland, is a town in the famous Hanseatic League, is again in German hands.

Russia's army has failed and through its weakness the great country has been deprived of its third most important city—second in importance among the cities of the Baltic sea, only to Petrograd it is a city of thriving industrial activity, a city of strategic importance, the being the center of the splendid system of waterway and railroad transportation, a city that is a gateway for the Germans to the Russian capital city.

But it is not the purpose of this sketch to project the recent history of Riga to Russia or to bemoan its downfall, instead, something about Riga's location and appearance, its inhabitants and its importance as a city, as well as a brief history of its 729 years of existence.

Along the eastern side of the Baltic Sea—that body of water between Scandinavia and Russia—lies two gulfs, the Gulf of Finland, near the head of which is situated the city of Stockholm, and the Gulf of Riga, near the head of which Riga is situated. The Gulf of Riga runs north and south, its limits of only one hundred miles. It is separated from the Baltic by a triangular peninsula, which contains the greater part of the Russian province of Courland. Into the southern corner of the gulf empties the vast Russian River, the Dvina. Dvina, an various spelling have it. Several miles up the Dvina from the gulf lies Riga.

Despite its proximity to the Baltic Sea, it is easily accessible. The Gulf of Riga is a shallow arm of the sea, its deepest part being only twenty-two fathoms. In consequence, large vessels are anchored off shore in the gulf or at nearby port of Laid-Klokk, a distance of the vast Riga, which is wanted to reach the port before the war was commenced by the Russian army. The city, situated on the Dvina's mouth, or from another nearby place, Riga, is about one-third of the year the Gulf of Riga is freed over, and is inaccessible to vessels of any sort.

Riga has other means of water communication, however, through the system of canals just mentioned. These extend inland as far as the Volga, through which the Black and Caspian seas may be reached.

Since the capital of the province of Livonia, the seat of the governor-general of the Baltic provinces, the city of Riga is the northern, Petrograd to the north-east and Courland to the south and west. It is about 200 miles to the northeast of the city of Petrograd itself, on the River Neva, at the head of the Gulf of Finland.

Like many other European cities of medieval origin, the city of Riga has both its ancient and its modern sections. Riga boasts of four such parts—one ancient and three modern. The old town, the St. Peterburg and Moscow suburbs, are on the right bank of the Dvina, the city of Riga is on the left.

This suburb is connected with the rest of the city by a bridge of boats, which is drawn to one bank during the period when the river is frozen, and by a viaduct of 200 feet long.

The bulk of the population lives in the three suburbs. These suburbs are modern, have broad, well-kept boulevards and contain most of the modern erections in the city. They were erected by the German army during the wars and before the war were rapidly growing into a high modern residential and merchant community, representing nearly half the population of Riga.

The city of Riga is a mixture of the old and the new. The old town, the St. Peterburg and Moscow suburbs, are on the right bank of the Dvina, the city of Riga is on the left.

much of its commercial importance before the war was due to its way and railroad system of canals connecting the Gulf of Riga with the Gulf of Finland and the Volga, as the waterway trade of the rivers from the Caspian and Black Seas in a great Russian railway system, crossing the Gulf of Riga and the Gulf of Finland, in the lower Volga region, two of the natural outlets for the vast white timber exported from Russia. It also exports enormous quantities of flax and flaxseed, hemp, corn, oats, rye, wheat, tobacco, sugar and feathers.

Besides being an important manufacturing center, it was an army, navy, railroad car, lumber, leather, and other products to exceed 500,000,000. Riga also did considerable business with the interior of Russia, including special groceries.

All this, however, was before the war. The presence of the Baltic navy at the mouth of the Baltic had a great influence on the foreign trade with Riga, as the city has remained more or less abandoned. Since the war, its importance from a military standpoint is considerable.

The city of Riga furnishes abundant and interesting material for the historian. It is a city of many centuries, and its history is a story of many changes.

Canada and the United States probably will be able to provide for the Allies requirements of cereals other than wheat during the next twelve months.

The Allied peoples themselves have been economizing with wheat and wheat flour. As Lord Northcliffe said in Montreal, "There is no such thing as white bread in the Old Country, from the King's table downwards." Other cereals are being used but they cannot be used alone for bread. The Allies must add them to wheat flour to make the war bread now in universal use in European countries. Except in Italy, where the people normally consume much corn, there are few corn mills in Europe. Cornmeal, not being a durable commodity, cannot be shipped across the ocean in great quantities.

The Allies must have a wheat flour basis for their war loaf. Unless the people of Canada and the United States are willing to substitute other cereals for part of the wheat flour which they normally consume, they will be denying even war bread to many thousands of people. Substitution of at least one pound of other cereals for one pound of wheat flour weekly, per person, would save a very large quantity of wheat for export. It would still be far short of meeting the normal consumption requirements of the Allies but it would save the situation.

A majority of the people of Canada believe in Canada continuing her assistance to the cause of defending herself and of ridding the world of the menace of Prussianism. The carrying on of that work is essential.

Sunday, October 21st, was the one hundred and twelfth anniversary of the battle of Trafalgar. Nelson's crowning victory saved the liberties of Europe from the tyranny of Napoleon, and the Nelson spirit lives on in the British fleet to this day. But for that British fleet, Canada as well as Great Britain would be today suffering the fate of Belgium.

Don't Miss The Point!

There is a man in this part of the world who represents to our way of thinking, a pretty good average of human nature. Whenever the preacher in his church delivers a very hot sermon against some special kind of sin, this man gets enthusiastic and goes around to the vestry to tell the preacher what a fine sermon it was. Then he goes home and repeats it to his brother, and they talk over the points and the people the sermon hit the hardest. But this particular man never sees when the sermon hits him.

Early next month the biggest public campaign ever put on in Canada will be opened to get subscription for the fourth Canadian war loan, the Victory Loan. The thing people in this district must bear in mind is that the appeals are directed to each and every one of them. It is not merely the well-off men and women who are being asked to invest. It is everybody. The little sermon which will be "preached" in the advertising should not be taken as hints to the well-to-do people only. Every man and woman should watch for these advertisements and start now to gather up the necessary money to buy either a fifty or a hundred or a five hundred or a thousand dollar bond. In the United States there were about 4 subscribers to the first American loan out of every 100 persons. They only received 3 1/2%. In Canada for the last war loan there were only about 41,000 subscribers or say 4 in every 700. Yet in Canada the interest was much higher—on the Victory Bonds that will probably be issued to yield about 5 1/2%.

The first thing anyone should do, in our opinion, is to get rid of the idea that there is any sacrifice involved in investing in this loan. It is true that the patriotic spirit is appealed to and it is equally true that a great and generous response is expected on that ground. But the new war loan is a straightforward business proposition—safe, profitable and convenient. Every man and every woman with as much as fifty dollars to spare should own one of these new bonds and not only that, but should help to show others the worth of these bonds by recommending them everywhere.

The readers of this paper are among the most thrifty, prosperous and public spirited in the Dominion. When the subscriptions to the Victory Loan are added up from the various districts and sub-districts we expect them to show that this part of the great Dominion has been true to its traditions and just to its opportunities.

Centre Hastings

Teachers' Convention

The teachers of the Public and Separate Schools of Centre Hastings convened in the Methodist Church in Stirling on October 11th and 12th. There were 102 teachers present and very profitable and interesting were the five sessions.

The Convention was called to order by the President, Mr. G. E. Kennedy, B.A. Principal of Stirling High School. The Rev. Mr. Howard opened the meeting with a Psalm and a short prayer, after which Mr. Kennedy spoke briefly of the duties of the teacher in developing the child's physical, mental and moral natures.

Following the Roll Call and Minutes of the last convention by the Secretary, communications were received and the following committees were appointed—Resolutions' Nominating and Library. The morning session was taken up with reading of Miss F. Ruthertford's report of the Ontario Educational Association and a practical lecture on "A Problem in Construction for Forms (II and IV)" by Mr. A. F. Hagerman, Manual Training instructor of the Normal School, Peterboro. In his lesson, Mr. Hagerman emphasized the importance of both pupils and teacher having a motive for doing the thing in hand.

The principal lecture of the afternoon session was "The Educational Meaning of the Manual Arts" by Mr. Hagerman. He traced the growth of the Manual Arts from the early Egyptians and Hebrews down through the Middle Ages. He emphasized the importance of giving the Manual Arts a place in education. They contribute to social efficiency, and what is the aim of education but social efficiency in the individual.

Following the lecture was the report of Mrs. Stanley Morton who was delegate to the O.E.A.

Miss Clela Holmes gave a very excellent paper on the teaching of writing, emphasizing the arm movement and the correct holding of the pen as primarily essential to good writing.

A discussion "Irregular attendance and the Truant officer" was led by Mr. J. E. Clement. He spoke of the need of hearty co-operation on the part of parent and teacher to eliminate truancy which was due to various causes many of which could be easily overcome.

It was expected that the Convention would be able to secure a lecturer for an evening address but this was impossible. The failure to do so gave the Stirling people a chance to show what they could do in preparing a programme on very short notice.

The evening's entertainment consisted of short addresses, songs and readings, all of which were much enjoyed.

On Friday morning after the Roll Call, the report of the Nominating Committee was received. The following officers being on motion elected for the ensuing year:—

Pres.—Mr. J. E. Minns, B.A. I. P. S. Vice-Pres.—Mr. R. A. A. McConnell. Secretary.—Mr. S. H. Connor. Treasurer.—Mr. R. A. Morton.

Executive Committee—Messrs Kennedy, McKeljohn, Clement, Williams Haig, Beatty, Messrs Carroll and Mullen, Mrs. Roberts, Mrs. Allen.

Mr. A. D. Mackintosh dealt with "Agricultural Instruction in Public Schools". Rural depopulation, he said, is becoming a serious factor. The need in the schools is for increased instruction in agriculture. Make the teaching of Nature Study snack of agriculture.

A new feature of the Convention was the introduction of illustrative lessons into the programme.

Miss Margorie L. Harrington, B.A. of Stirling High School Staff taught an illustrative lesson in Literature to a Form I class of the High School. The poem selected was Tennyson's "Break, Break, Break."

Mr. Minns spoke briefly on the year's work. He spoke principally of the importance of starting the child properly in writing; the need of introducing Manual Training into the schools; Agriculture instruction and Nature Study aims.

At the afternoon session Mr. R. A. A. McConnell, Principal of Madoc Model School taught an illustrative lesson on "The Phases of the Moon". This difficult topic was handled in an admirable manner, greatly to the benefit of both the inexperienced and the experienced teachers.

Miss E. M. Garrison B.A. gave a very excellent paper on the "Essentials of Good Reading."

The Department of Education requires that there be a library in connection with each Teacher's Institute. By vote of the Association Mr. R. A. A. McConnell of Madoc was elected Librarian and the library will be placed in Madoc. After the singing of the National Anthem the Convention adjourned to meet next year at Marmora.

Stirling W. I.

The regular meeting of the W. I. will be held on Friday, Nov. 2nd in the Agricultural Rooms. Programme provided by Mrs. Faulkner and Mrs. N. Lin.

Each member is asked to bring her knitting, also a question relating to Institute or Red Cross work for the question drawer, which will be an important feature of the afternoon.

Bring also a lead pencil for the contest. Two papers will be given on interesting subjects.

Arrangements will be made for a visit to Wellman's Institute during the second week in November, exact date will be decided and programme com. arranged for.

Those who have distributed Food Pledge cards are asked to bring back those signed.

The result of the Soldiers Shower held by W. I. was very pleasing as the value of the parcels contributed is estimated at $125.00.

Rawdon Khaki Club

The last meeting of the Club was held at the home of Miss Luella Thain on Friday evening Oct. 19th. The evening was a decided success, there being 21 young people present.

Mr. Fred Thain gave an instrumental on the piano and also rendered several beautiful solos which were greatly appreciated. He was escorted several times and readily responded.

Miss Hilma Reid gave a piano instrumental. A chorus was given by the young people entitled "Just before the battle, mother".

Stump speeches were given to the young men who answered them to the best of their ability. Mr. Perry Bronson gave several violin selections. Red Cross collection amounted to $1.81c.

Miss Thain treated the Club to Bonbons and peanuts.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Hoover have kindly offered their home for the next club meeting to be held on Nov. 2nd. Visitors always welcome.

HEAD STUFFED FROM CATARRH OR A COLD

Says Cream Applied in Nostrils Opens Air Passage Right Up.

Instant relief—no waiting. Your clogged nostrils open right up; the air passages of your head clear and you can breathe freely. No more hawking, sniffling, blowing, headache, dryness. No struggling for breath at night; you cold or catarrh disappears.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic healing cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothes the inflamed or swollen mucous membranes and relief comes instantly.

It's just fine. Don't stay stuffed up with a cold or nasty catarrh.

Some Notes of Fashions

The small furs of this year, says the New York Sun's fashion writer, are really bewitching. So are the collars, capes and scarfs fur trimmed, and there are also many hats of fur and muffs, hats and scarfs and bags, etc., that without even the slightest supporting touch of fur manage to be unconsciously chic.

WITH A PIECE OF VELVET.
A Parisian milliner can take a piece of black velvet, fashion from it a hat wide of brim and high at crown and a soft pillow muff, give to each by way of trimming a cord and tassels of blue and red and rightly consider her duty done.

HER MAGIC TOUCH.
Or she can make a soft little hat of rose duvety and a knowing looking cache nez neck scarf, give a narrow band of moleskin to the hat and moleskin ends and buttons to the scarf and accomplish as much in the way of effect as a lesser artist could achieve through whole pots of fine fur.

IT'S ALL IN KNOWING THE TRICK.
And while some American milliners have engaging tricks of their own, it is Paris that gives us our best in hat and neckwear and neck and muff sets not wholly of fur.

THE CLOTH HAT.
The cloth hat that has sprung into popularity offers admirable opportunity

MINARD'S LINIMENT CO., LTD.

ty for the launching of new cloth neckpieces, and everywhere, or at least wherever chic millinery is assembled, one sees these sets as well as sets in velvet.

A NATTY TURBAN.
Sometimes the cloth is embroidered a little at the ends in wools or chenille or cord. Sometimes it is only lined with contrasting material or color and depends upon the novelty and cleverness of its shape to give it cachet. A small turban and neck scarf of green and black check, the soft bright green surface checked off with lines of black lace into inch squares and brim facing, scarf lining and scarf end bands of black velvet; and in the same collection with this was an adorable little muffled collar of soft gray velvet the back, bordered and collared high in fur and accompanying a high, soft crowned turban of duvety and fur.

CAPE COLLARS.
Cape collars and short capes of fur bid fair to be an epidemic if the furriers have their way. Innumerable models of this sort are in the shops, many of them very attractive, some of them awkward and bulky, and not by any means invariably becoming.

Plain of Damascus.
The fertile plain in which Damascus is situated is about thirty miles in diameter and is due to the River Barada, which is probably the Abana of scripture. Two other streams, the Wady Helon on the north and the Wady on the south, increase this fertility, and these two contend for the honor of representing the Pharpar, the other scriptural stream.

A NEW VERSION.
Ten little nigger boys walking in a line.
One stopped off the curb and then there were nine.
Nine little nigger boys stayed out rather late.
Forgot their light meant safety and then there were eight.
Eight little nigger boys looking up to heaven.
Walked into a motor truck, then there were seven.
Seven little nigger boys playing ally tricks.
One hung behind a wagon then there were six.
Six little nigger boys glad to be alive.
Played a game called "Last Across" and then there were five.
Five little nigger boys though they were sure.
One forgot his safety and then there were four.
Four little nigger boys going on a spree.
One jumped on a moving car and then there were three.
Three little nigger boys wondering what to do.
Dodged about the road and then there were two.
Two little nigger boys starting on a run.
Passed behind a street car and then there was one.
One little nigger boy feeling very sad.
Always thinks of safety now and wishes the others had.

GUARD THE CHILDREN FROM AUTUMN COLDS

The fall is the most severe season of the year for colds—one day is warm, the next is wet and cold and unless the mother is on her guard the little ones are seized with colds that may hang on all winter. Baby's Own Tablets are mothers' best friend in preventing or banishing colds. They act as a gentle laxative, keeping the bowels and stomach free and sweet. An occasional dose will prevent colds or if it does come on suddenly the prompt use of the Tablets will quickly cure. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

IRON OF THE FUTURE.

No Danger of a Shortage Because of Increased Consumption.
That iron is the very basis of our industrial civilization will be admitted by the thoughtful, and many of our greatest supplies of iron ore are being rapidly depleted because of the increased per capita consumption of iron in the world over, an increase which is destined to be greater in the future when the races in Asia and Africa increase their consumption of iron.

These conditions of increasing consumption and decreasing reserves have often in the past, particularly about the beginning of this century, been used to create a scare, on the ground that our supplies of usable ore were being so rapidly depleted that their exhaustion would occur within two or three generations.

This is a preposterous point of view, because as we lower the percentage of iron in the rock which we call "ore" the quantity of such ore increases at a rate out of all proportion to the decrease in iron content, and as we use leaner and leaner ores technical improvements will be made which will minimize any tendency to increased cost of production.

The same thing has happened in gold, silver, copper and other ores, and today copper ores are being worked with only 1.5 per cent. of copper in them.—Chemical Engineering.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.
In the Shops.
Wash blouses of soft, warm wool challis are in pretty striped effects and have collars to be worn high or low. New play suits for little boys are in one-piece style and made of sturdy striped cottons.

Gleaming and lovely are the new metal cloths with satin finish. There is green, pink or blue in addition to gold, silver or gun metal, and the cloths are one and wide.

New ribbons to make bags are in peacock feather designs, with a satin stripe. They are quite wide and not too expensive to be prohibitive.

A dustless duster which absorbs the dust instead of spreading it, and polishes while it dusts, is one of the new and helpful articles for the housewife. And it is quite inexpensive, too.

The man who makes the most of himself need not necessarily have to laugh and grow fat.

A PROMINENT CANADIAN

Mr. R. S. McLaughlin, President of the McLaughlin Motor Company Limited, Oshawa, Ont., and Director of the Dominion Bank, was appointed a director of the Chevrolet Motor Company on Oct. 5th, as a member of the board of directors. The Chevrolet Motor Company is the parent company incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware in 1916. The capital stock of this company is $80,000,000 and among its assets are the controlling interest in General Motors Company. Eight Chevrolet Motor Companies in various parts of the United States are owned and operated by the Chevrolet Motor Company of Delaware. The Chevrolet Motor Company is one of the strongest and most powerful of the motor companies.

It is an interesting fact that while the Chevrolet Motor Company of Canada is closely affiliated with the American Chevrolet Companies, it is owned and operated entirely by Canadian capital and Canadian men.

Mr. McLaughlin is to be congratulated in his appointment to the Directorate of this company.

Accurate Timekeepers.
The most perfect clocks are used in astronomical observations. One of these has run for months, with an average error of only one fifteen-thousandth of a second a day. In order to run so perfectly a clock must not only be constructed and adjusted with the greatest care, but must be installed in a special vault, where the temperature is practically uniform. It must also be free from jar or vibration and must, therefore, be mounted on a heavy masonry pier. Lastly, it should always be kept under the same barometric pressure, and this may be affected by inclosing it in a glass or metal case, from which the air is partially exhausted. In order that the case may not be opened or disturbed by electricity, the frequency of the winding in some cases being as often as every minute. Only pendulum clocks can attain the highest degree of accuracy.—Wall Street Journal.

The Shoestring Republic.

Chile is as long as from New York to San Francisco and as narrow as Lake Erie. Truly a "shoestring republic." She is squeezed tightly between the mountain range and the coast. Her cities look up to the hills. She is surrounded by the United States, Argentina, Peru, Bolivia, Brazil, and the Atlantic Ocean. The Chileans are the Yankees of South America, aggressive, keen, making fortunes from nitrate, erecting a chain of wireless stations from the near tropical north tip of the Chilean shoestring to the Antarctic south tip and preparing for Panama trade by expending $12,000,000 on port and dock improvements. Chile is elbowing her way in among the most forward pushing nations of the twentieth century.—World Outlook.

"There goes a man who thinks in terms of millions. He doesn't look to me like a great financier. In fact, I would take him to be some kind of a scientist." "Correct. He's a germ expert."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Chats With the Doctor (By a Physician)

SUMMER DIARRHOEA.

Summer diarrhoea is, of course, commonest and most fatal among infants, but it occurs among adults also, and with serious results if no steps are taken to check it. In very many cases slight diarrhoea is merely Nature's method of getting rid of some unsuitable substance that has been eaten, and where it is of short duration no harm results. But when it lasts day after day something should be done, and the best thing is to take a smart purge, a dose of castor oil or three or four grains of calomel. This usually gets rid of the irritating matter. Should it not do so, however, a doctor should be consulted. While the diarrhoea lasts the diet should be largely farinaceous, composed mainly of such things as rice, sago, tapioca, cornflour and arrowroot.

SUNBURN.

Sunburn is easier than to prevent than to cure, though many people prefer to risk it rather than to take the time to be protected. To people with dark complexions and hair, whose skin tans to a pleasant brown color, sunburn is nearly always becoming and seldom painful, but fair-skinned, delicate haired people suffer great discomfort from it. These latter should always wear broad-brimmed shady hats, should dry the face thoroughly after washing or, especially, after sea-bathing and if women, should cover the skin of the face before going out into the sunshine with a protective layer of good pure face cream covered with an equally reliable powder. Both should be removed at once on coming indoors out of the sun. Women should wear extra veils, preferably plain ones, as an extra precaution. It is very difficult to remove sunburn once it has appeared, but relief may be obtained from the burning and tingling of the affected skin by applying cold cream fairly thickly over it.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE BABY

There are many factors necessary for the proper development of a young child. If the baby is to develop steadily and soundly all these factors must be present. It must have proper food, proper clothing, proper surroundings, and proper exercise. In the case of a quite small baby sufficient exercise is almost assured by the promise of suitable clothing. If the clothes are simple and do not hamper and impede the movements of the arms, legs, and body, a healthy child will instinctively exercise itself as does a young animal, whilst laying in a cot or cart. Too often, however, we find babies cramped and swathed in an endless series of unnecessary garments, which almost entirely prevent movement. A child dressed in this way can seldom develop well or thrive as it should. It must not be forgotten, too, that even simple clothing is not natural to man, and every opportunity should be seized of allowing the baby to lie or crawl quite naked for a while in suitable surroundings—in a warm, well-ventilated room, or on a rug out of doors in the sun and air according to the season. These exercises for the tiny infant should be supplemented by a certain amount of carrying about by the mother or nurse. In the natural primitive state the baby is carried by the mother almost continuously, and it is clear that the more mechanical adjustment of the child's body to the movements of the mother brings the little muscles into action and helps their growth.

The proper food for an infant is clearly its mother's milk. Where this is unavailable for any reason a carefully selected and studied artificial diet must be used, but these substitutes cannot adequately replace the natural food supplied by a healthy mother. The subject of artificial diets for babies is rather too long a one to go into fully here, but the food should always be freshly prepared, given in scrupulously clean utensils, and all effect on the child's health and growth must be carefully watched. An ill-nourished or a flabby, fat, starch-fed child will often succumb to an illness that a vigorous one would throw off in a day or two.

The child's surroundings must be airy, well ventilated, sunny, clean and simple. The furniture and fittings should be strong and able to bear a little knocking about. There should be as few breakable or tearable as possible, so that the baby may have all the liberty it needs to investigate its surroundings without causing trouble. It will always want to handle things, to pull itself about by chairs and curtains, and climb up table legs, and these instincts should be anticipated and provided for. They are useful and harmless. Anyone who has watched a family of kittens learning balance and acrobatics on the rungs of a chair must have realized how much of the perfect suppleness of the grown-up cat was acquired during these baby stages. So with us, the play of the baby and the child builds the framework of the healthy man and woman.

Vacation and Efficiency.

It is the change really more than the rest that is of so much value in a vacation. Besides the absorption of the fatigue products, there is an opportunity given those functions which have remained inactive and sluggish, and even atrophic, to exercise and develop. A restoration of balance, for confined and sedentary workers even hard and coarse country work is restful and invigorating. For indoor workers this sort of a vacation means a new lease on life. Very often a border line case of tuberculosis is maintained a little longer above the line by a proper vacation. The increased tendency to arteriosclerosis and other degenerative conditions, as well as premature senility, nearly all the result of high pressure and efficiency, can be much neutralized by periodic vacations, a vacation free from the grind, of course, but also from the worry incident thereto. The vacation is a therapeutic measure come to stay.—New York Medical Journal.

Two Freaks of Nature.

Two contrasting freaks of nature are the Island of Fire and the Lake of Snow. The Island of Fire is called the Island of Hot Devils. It is situated in the midst of a large lake of boiling mud in the island of Java. The steam and gases which arise from the sticky mud form themselves into bubbles, and these bubbles, carried up in the air like balloons, and fall high up in the air like balloons, and finally exploding with a loud crash.

The biggest snow lake is seen from the summit of Hiepar pass, in the Karakoram range. It is more than 300 square miles in area. In Switzerland the snow of ice might better be called the sea of snow, as the surface is broken up by solar heat, which makes a minute fissuring in the ice, giving it the appearance of snow.

Minard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

Dressing Wounds With Sugar.

Dr. G. Magnus reports to the Therapeutische Monatshefte of Berlin on his success in treating wounds with ordinary sugar. This he sprinkles in a thick layer over the wound, that has previously been washed and dried. He covers it with a dry dressing, which he renews every day.

Madame's Belt.

Sometimes 'tis very narrow. And then again it is a broad affair, coming well down over the skirt. Often it is a wee girdle of cloth or silk or braid—quiet and demure. Or it may end in loops and ends, or perhaps a soft throat tie, or like some other thing we must mention, apparently have no end at all. Cloverly used it may conceal or reveal much—make her slim and not-so-slim, just as she wishes, and give her the most piquant touch it needs.

MIRAGE IN CLOUDS.

The Spector That Gave an Aviator the Scare of His Life.

An extraordinary story of a mirage in the clouds is told by a young flying corps officer in the British service:

"I had often wondered what it would feel like to see a machine coming straight for one and to know that a collision was inevitable. I had the experience one afternoon, only the collision did not take place. I was on patrol with five other machines over the lines and had just gone into a cloud bank. Just before going in I saw the bus on my right turning across in front of me. All of a sudden I saw a machine just the same as my own appear out of the cloud about fifty feet away, making straight for me. Instinctively I jammed my nose hard down and went as near a nose dive as possible. The other bus did the same. I turned. The other turned into me. I was in a cold perspiration all over by this time, so I thought, 'Here goes: If I am going to crash it might as well be complete.' So straight for I went. We got closer and closer, and, biff, my machine and—its mirage in the clouds met—"

"It seemed like a hideous nightmare, and I could still see that machine doing its utmost to crash into me. I think I can say I have had the full horrors of a collision in the air without its actually taking place."—London Telegraph.

Tenders for Pulpwood Limit

Tenders will be received by the undersigned up to and including the seventh day of December next for the right to cut pulpwood and pine timber on a certain area situated in the vicinity of the Kapuskasing River in the District of Timiskaming and Algoma.

Tenders are to be in the form of a flat rate per cord for all classes of pulpwood, whether spruce or other woods. The successful tenderer shall be required to pay for the Red and White Pine on the limit a flat rate of $10 per thousand feet board measure.

The successful tenderer shall also be required to erect a mill or mills on or near the territory, and to manufacture the wood into pulp and paper in the Province of Ontario, in accordance with the terms and conditions of sale which can be had on application to the Department.

Parties making tender will be required to deposit with their tender a marked cheque payable to the Honourable the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario, for Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00), which amount will be forfeited in the event of their not entering into agreement to carry out conditions, etc. The said Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00) will be held by the Department until such time as the terms and conditions of the agreement to be entered into have been complied with and the said mill erected, equipped and in operation. The said sum may then be applied in such amounts and at such times as the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines may direct in payment of accounts for dues or of any other obligation due the Crown until the whole sum has been applied.

The highest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

For particulars as to description of territory, capital to be invested, etc., apply to the undersigned.

Letter from Pte. E. J. Liddle

To MRS. THOS. ANDREWS, Stirling, Ont.
Bear Wood, Wokingham,
September 30, 1917

My Dear Sister:—
A line to let you know that I am doing fine. I was moved to this convalescent hospital last Friday.

This is a good place here and very pretty. The Mansion is a very large and beautiful building, there is also a good Y. M. C. A. and recreation but with some amusements every evening, so we are not so lonesome.

All who are able do a little physical drill each day to help get us fit again. I did my first this afternoon which consisted of digging a few potatoes, ha' ha'!

I got a letter to-day from my chums mother, had written to her about his death a while before I left Devonport, I have a small Testament of his which I promised to send to her. It was so dark that night that you could see nothing except when the flare lights were up that I only got the Testament when getting his pay book to identify him. If I had not been wounded so soon myself I would have gotten more for her.

Had a letter from Irene written at Madoc Model, they had just heard of me being wounded and of course were quite excited, I consider myself very lucky to come out as I did and am having a go at rest here in England which is very acceptable. Of course it would be better to come out untouched but it was not in my hands to decide that part, in fact I was expecting far worse than I got, my wound is doing nicely and when thoroughly healed will not bother me, at least I think so at present.

How are all the old High School fellows coming on, waiting anxiously for conscription to be enforced? surely not, I am most awful glad I came when I did although it seemed hard to give up at the time.

I would not mind being back to Canada, but would want the war all over first so we could enjoy life thoroughly.

I do not expect to go in Lewis Gun Section again it is such heavy work, far harder than the others. The paniers weigh over twenty lbs. apiece and when you lug two of them through the mud of the trenches for a mile or two sometimes more it is no joke. The last trip going in we had our equipment with haversack (not the pack) rifle, two paniers, two sand bags and a pick or shovel to carry from the village away back all way to the trenches.

I was never stronger or healthier than I was while in France and after a good sleep no matter how tired a fellow would be, he'd be as fit as ever.

I would like so much to see Raymond Montgomery if he is still in England I may yet, but do not know his address.

Now I must cut this out and write to some others. Heaps of love to all from brother,

EDWARD

Exemption Tribunals.

Exemption Boards have been chosen in such a way as to make them absolutely independent and removed from all influence. There are over 1,250 boards throughout the country, each composed of two men, one appointed by the county judge in the district concerned and one selected by a joint committee of Parliament. Being familiar with local conditions where they sit, the members are well-fitted to appreciate such reasons for exemption as are put before them by men called up.

Exemption will be granted to those who can establish that it is in the national interest that they remain in civilian life. This is for the Exemption Board to decide after having received full information in each case. The grounds on which exemption may be claimed (which are similar to the grounds recognized in Great Britain and the United States) are as follows:—

- (a) That it is expedient in the national interest that the man should, instead of being employed in Military Service, be engaged in other work in which he is habitually engaged.
- (b) That it is expedient in the national interest that the man should, instead of being employed in Military Service, be engaged in other work in which he wishes to be engaged and for which he has special qualifications.
- (c) That it is expedient in the national interest that, instead of being employed in Military Service, he should continue to be educated or trained for any work for which he is then being educated and trained.
- (d) That serious hardship would ensue if the man were placed on active service, owing to his exceptional financial or business obligations or domestic position.
- (e) Ill health or infirmity.
- (f) That he conscientiously objects to the undertaking of combatant service and is prohibited from doing so by tenets and articles of faith, in effect on the sixth day of July, 1917, of any organized religious denomination existing and well recognized in Canada at such date, and to which he is in good faith belonging.
- (g) That he should be exempt because disfranchised under the War Time Election Act.

No Claim for Exemption should be put forward unless one or other of these grounds in fact exists, and no loyal citizen should assist in, or allow himself to be made a party to, any Claim for Exemption unless thoroughly satisfied that it is made in good faith.

Exemption may be applied for by the man selected themselves or by their parents, near relatives or employers. Application for exemption must be made on printed forms to be found at every post office, which are to be filled in and left with the postmaster if exemption is desired. The postmaster will forward the form to a Registrar, who will send it to the appropriate Exemption Board. In due time, then, the Applicant will get notice as to when he must present his case before the Board.

Issued by The Military Service Council.

A Girl Guide of Stirling Truly a Heroine

Never could Halloween be observed in a better way than Wednesday evening, when the M.A.P. and the I.O.U. girls of Stirling united for the sole purpose of entertaining the people of Stirling and allowing them the privilege of again contributing to soldier's comforts. That they succeeded admirably is evidenced from the fact that those "Merry, Merry Maidens" receipts totalled $82.00. An excellent programme had been provided consisting of the very latest and up-to-date songs by the ladies dressed as witches, apooks and "phantoms of the night," which was thoroughly enjoyed by an appreciative audience, but the one great feature of the programme was the presentation of a Bronze Medal from the Royal Canadian Humane Association to a Girl Guide, Miss Dorothy Alger, age 15 years, whose father Col. Alger has been serving with the C.E.F. having enlisted in the 80th Battalion and who is now in France attached to the Governor General's Body Guard. On the Bar of the Medal was the word Bravery.

Inscription—

DOROTHY ALGER FOR THE RESCUE OF MISS HELEN GREEN
THIRTY RIVER
AUGUST, 1917

T. E. Butler Yeats, Manager of the Bank of Montreal in presenting Miss Alger with the Medal, said—"I have a very important and pleasing duty to perform this evening, namely, make a present of a medal on behalf of the Royal Canadian Humane Association to a Stirling girl who is in truth a heroine, having risked her life to save another. Mrs. Green, wife of Major Green and Dorothy Chard, Fort Saskatchewan were battling in the Trent River while Miss Alger and mother were coming to join them, there is a sudden drop of some 14 feet at this particular place and Mrs. Green who could not swim, in making an attempt landed in the deep water, she called to the little girl for help and her request was complied with, but the child who wore water wings found she was unable to support herself and Mrs. Green and soon was taken under the water, Dorothy Chard called to Dorothy Alger who was standing on the bank "Come quickly Dorothy" and in a moment Dorothy Alger bravely plunged in the water to the rescue. She tried to make the ledge and succeeded only to slip off, with a most heroic effort in face of apparent death she struggled to again regain the ledge with the result success crowned her efforts and the little heroine rejoiced over the fact she had saved Mrs. Green from a watery grave. Mrs. Green was present and pinned the medal upon the patriotic little daughter of a truly brave and patriotic father."

Mail Your Parcels Early

Post office authorities no longer announce sailings of ships or dates upon which overseas mails close, and it is therefore necessary for the public to bear in mind without special reminders, such as were formerly furnished by announced sailing dates, that in connection with Christmas parcels for overseas, which are sure to be on a large scale, it will be well to get them ready for mailing at an early date.

Fair Day Receipts Total $1601.90

Secretary Roxburgh has completed the work of checking over and summing up of the receipts of the Agricultural Society and finds after the returns from the school children's tickets were taken into account that the gate receipts at this year's fair amounted to $1298.10. The total receipts from all sources, including fees for membership received on fair day aggregate $1601.90.—Norwood Register.

Why Canada Needs More Money

UP to date the war has cost Canada about $700,000,000.

Canada has spent in Canada over $400,000,000 on her own account.

Canada has spent in Canada on behalf of Great Britain over $300,000,000.

What Canada spends for Great Britain is really loaned to Great Britain and will be repaid or credited to Canada later on.

Great Britain needs so much ready cash to finance her own expenditures at home for herself and for our Allies that she must buy on credit from Canada, and from every other country where she can get credit.

Of course Great Britain's credit is so good that other countries, in order to get her trade, are quite as willing to give her credit as we are in Canada.

Canada wants to help Great Britain not only because Canada wants Britain's trade but because we are Canada and she is Great Britain—both members of the same great Empire, kin of our kin, our motherland.

For Canada it is both a filial and patriotic duty to supply Great Britain's war needs and remember, her needs are our needs. Also it is in Canada's self-interest to supply those needs and thus keep open a market for our products.

Now, Britain needs our wheat, our cheese, cattle, hogs, and many manufactured articles.

Canada also needs many of these things—between the two it amounts to more than a million dollars a day in cash.

And the producers must be paid in cash.

Neither Canada nor Great Britain could go to a Canadian farmer and buy his wheat or his cattle on credit.

The farmer and all other producers might be ever so willing to give their country credit but they could not do it because they have to pay cash for wages, for rent, materials, etc. They must be paid in cash, or its equivalent.

So Canada says to Great Britain—"I will lend you the money so that you can pay cash to Canada's producers for what you want."

"I will borrow this money from our own people just as you borrow money from your people."

"I will also borrow from the people of Canada money to pay cash for all the products that Canada, as well as Great Britain, needs in Canada."

That is Canada's practical, patriotic part in helping to win the war.

Without this credit the Canadian producer could not sell to Great Britain, and without these Canadian products the war would be prolonged.

So it is necessary for Canada to give to Great Britain the credit in order that Canada's own producers, who need a market, will have one; and in order that Great Britain which needs the products to win the war, will get them.

Now how does Canada get the money by which both Canada and Britain can pay cash for Canada's products?

By borrowing it from the people of Canada through the sale of Canada's Victory Bonds to be offered in November.

That is why Canada's Victory Bonds are offered to the people—to raise money to help to finish the war.

"Canada must keep her shoulder to the wheel even though it be a chariot of fire," and the way for Canada to keep her shoulder to the wheel is by buying

MENACE OF THE SHOE.

Scientist on the Cause and Cure of Foot Ailments.

That the conventional shoes we wear from childhood to old age are the main factors in causing foot ailments, who writes of the shoe as an "insidious menace" in the Medical Review of Reviews (New York, April). He says the infant's foot, being delicately formed and having extremely flexible joints, escapes for a time the wearing of shoes, but when the little foot is placed into shoes and thereby so cramped that there is serious interference with their development. He protests against children wearing shoes before they begin to walk. The writer says on "It is absolutely unphysiological and dangerous to permit these infants to wear shoes because they cramp the foot and interfere with their future development. Children should not wear shoes until they begin to walk in their own feet, as this allows the free and proper use of the muscles employed in walking."

"The outline of the normal foot is practically the same throughout life. The inner border is almost a straight line and the outer border curved with the convexity externally meeting the inner border anteriorly."

"With few exceptions, this outline is not interfered with until the conventional shoe is worn. The continual wearing of these shoes will eventually result in deformed feet. They will subsequently assume the shape of the shoe."

Not only does the shape of the conventional shoe cause mischief, but the heels are also offenders. They are too high, as a rule. A high heel strains the foot, eventually leading to unnatural, producing weak feet."

Mansonsville, June 27, 13.

Minard's Liniment Co., Limited,

Yarmouth, N.S.

Gentlemen,—It affords me great pleasure and much gratification to you to know that after using 26 bottles of your Liniment on a case of paralysis which my father was afflicted with, I was able to restore him to normal condition. Hoping other sufferers may be benefited by the use of your Liniment, I am,

Sincerely yours,

GEO. H. HOLMES.

"A vast majority of the weak feet that we meet with usually result from the conventional shoe. This condition is very often overlooked, probably because it is erroneously called flatfoot. In an analysis of 700 cases of weak feet there were a very small percentage that showed a flat impression, those few being well advanced cases. As a rule, the symptoms of weak feet are referred to the feet. In children the gait is awkward. They walk upon the entire sole of the foot. The toes are turned outward and the heels and heels of the shoes are worn down on the inner side. The children quickly complain of pain and discomfort occasionally, and want to be carried continually. Such weak feet in childhood are often the beginning of severe deformities later on."

"Much can be accomplished by carrying out the prophylactic measures subsequently enumerated. In children the following suggestions will aid considerably in preventing weakness and suffering in later life."

"1. The feet of small children must not be forced or pressed into shoes."

"2. Creeping should be encouraged. Infants should be placed upon their abdomen. The desire of locomotion will soon induce the child to become accustomed to creeping."

"3. Abnormal locomotion, such as sliding over the floor on the buttocks, develops when children are forced to assume a sitting posture at too early a date, the creeping period being suppressed."

"4. The period of creeping must be changed spontaneously by the child into one of walking. Only when a child of its own accord begins to stand up and walk ahead, holding to some surrounding object, should it be permitted to do so."

"5. To force children to walk together with the aid of a nurse or with go-carts or walking apparatus, is absolutely objectionable. All such appliances, whatever are impracticable and unnatural. Flattering the commencement of locomotion increases the danger."

"7. Regarding the choice of shoes, broad-soled shoes allow unrestricted action of the toes are best."

"For older children and adults the following exercises have proved useful in strengthening the muscles of the foot."

"1. Walking barefooted."

"2. Walking upon the front part of the foot."

"3. Grasping motions with the toes, exercises with foot-weights."

"The proper shoes for adults should be built on an anatomical basis. They should be made to fit the foot and not as the conventional shoes are made. The conventional shoe makes the foot fit the shoe with consequent damage to the feet. Shoes should have broad soles and heels which are square and of the proper height."

"Foot ailments will exist just as long as the conventional shoe will be in demand."

THE FALL WEATHER

HARD ON LITTLE ONES

Canadian fall weather is extremely hard on little ones. One day it is warm and sunny and the next wet and cold. These sudden changes bring on colds, cramps and colic, and unless baby's little stomach is kept right the result may be serious. There is nothing to equal Baby's Own Tablets in keeping the little ones well. These tablets in the stomach, regulate the bowels, break up colds and make baby thrive. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A SUBMARINE FARM.

The Crops Are Merely Pearls of Great Price and Beauty.

One of the queerest farms in the world is situated on the island of Takujima, in the Bay of Ago, Japan. The farm lands lie fathoms deep in water, according to an article in the "Popular Science Monthly" for June, and the crops are lustrous pearls. Oyster shells are used with a smooth coating which is commonly called mother-of-pearl or nacre. The oyster builds up this lining layer on layer. If any foreign substance—even a grain of sand—happens to enter the shell of an oyster, the oyster immediately begins to lay the irritation it causes by surrounding it with the material it uses to build up the lining of its shell. This process the oyster keeps up year after year. Pearls are not made by oysters alone. Any mollusk may form them, but pearls formed by common oysters and clams are not particularly attractive. On the farm at Takujima the first steps toward the production of the pearls are taken during July and August of each year. Wherever the larvae of the pearl-oyster have been found most abundant, small pieces of rock and stone are placed. In a little while the oyster-spots will be attached to these rocks. Then the rocks are removed to beds which have been prepared for them in deep waters. If they are left in shallow water during the winter the oysters may perish from the cold. They are left in the deep water beds undisturbed for three years. Then they are taken out of the sea, and into each oyster is introduced a small seed pearl or a small round piece of nacre which serves as the nucleus for a future pearl. The oysters are then returned to the sea, where they remain for four years. At the end of that time they are taken out and the harvest of pearls is reaped. During the four years the oyster has been Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows.

SOAP AND WATER.

Not Clear Soap Was Known to Israelites; Romans Had It.

The words "soap and civilization" are so frequently joined that one might think that civilization has been brought about or at least helped along by "soap and water" are words that figure prominently in any discussion of various social problems. Soapmaking, once and for centuries an industry carried on in practically all households, has become one of the largest and immense commercial industries of the world. In the Old Testament there is reference to things which clean and which have been translated as "soap." It is said to be not clear that the old Israelites knew soap. In the second chapter of Jeremiah it is written, "For though thou wash thee with fire and like thou much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before me, saith the Lord God." In Malachi, the last book of the Old Testament, is the following: "But will any abide the day of His coming? and who shall stand when He appears? for He is like a refiner's fire and like fuller's soap." Authorities who maintain that the outer Israelites were not familiar with soapmaking, the same in which it is now understood hold that those old people used the ashes of plants and other such purifying agents. Soapmaking was known to the ancient Romans and there is a tradition that they obtained their knowledge of the art from some of the Germanic tribes farther to the west and north. Pliny mentioned that the Germans used both hard and soft soap, and he indicates that it was a discovery which had been made by the Gauls. A prominent soapmaker said not long ago that the essence of the soap-making business have not made very remarkable advances in the centuries. Pliny, nearly two thousand years ago, said that the best soap was made from goat's suet and wood ashes and these are the necessary elements—fat or oil and alkali—in the soapmaking trade today. In its earliest form the soap was produced by purifying the crude soda that was obtained from burnt seaweed or kelp, and this process was improved upon toward the close of the eighteenth century by the discovery made by a French doctor for getting alkali from salt. Soapmaking materials are now brought from many parts of the world, and a great many improvements have been made over the old recipes.

While there are many kinds of soap, it is said that these commonly used may be divided into three classes. The first class comprises fine white soaps and scented soaps, the second class the coarse household soaps, and the third class the soft soaps.

White soaps are usually made of olive oil, cottonseed oil or other fine vegetable oils and carbonate of soda. Common household soaps are usually made of soda and tallow, and yellow soap is generally composed of tallow, rosin and soda to which palm oil is added in some cases. Marine soap, or "sea soap," which will lather and dissolve in sea water as well as in fresh water, is usually made of coconut oil, soda and water. Soft soaps are made with potash instead of soda and with whale oil, seal oil or the other oils of linseed, rape seed, hemp seed or cotton seed with the addition of a little tallow.

Soap has played a large part in medicine. Medicinal soap when pure is said to be made of caustic soda and either olive or almond oil. It was most employed in the form of pills intended to have a gently aperient, anti-acid action.

EVILS OF OVERFEEDING.

Good Rule Would Be "Eat Less and Exercise More."

The sin of gluttony is common, and therefore much condoned, but like every other violation of nature's laws the penalty. Fat inefficiency, sluggish mentality, the reddened nose, the pimpled face, certain of the chronic skin eruptions and much fatigue and nervousness are due to the abuse of the digestive apparatus. Rich, indigestible foods in large quantities, highly seasoned to stimulate the faded palate, are forced into a body already rebellious from repetition. Exercise is largely limited to walking to and from the table, and bodily deterioration proceeds rapidly.

Many an overfed dyspeptic, suddenly dragged by the stern hand of circumstances from a life of physical ease and plenty and forced to work out of doors suddenly discovers that his semi-invalidism has gone, that a chronic skin derangement of many years' standing has disappeared and that a new vigor and zest of life has been given him.

MEDICAL SCIENCE

FOR GREASY SKINS.

A very greasy skin is most unightly and, though little can be done in the way of direct treatment to relieve the condition, much may be effected by a course of careful eating, combined with care in the treatment of the skin itself. The diet should be light, and chiefly vegetarian in character, with the addition of fish and eggs. Meats and pastries, gravies and sauces, and, in general, fatty foods of all kinds should be avoided. Exercise in the fresh air and well ventilated rooms to sleep in are both essential. The bowels must be attended to, and a dose of salts or some other saline aperient taken daily before breakfast if necessary. In treating the skin itself several points must be insisted on. Never use face cream or any preparation containing glycerine. The skin must be kept clean by washing with a good simple toilet soap and cold water, not hot, followed by a thorough rinsing of the face in fresh, clean water. Powdered boracic acid may be used on the face, or an astringent lotion of witch hazel, followed by a light dusting of precipitated chalk.

INFECTION AND SUSCEPTIBILITY.

The phenomena of infection, and the problems presented by the differing degrees of susceptibility in individuals, are among the most interesting and men are much interested in the subject. Most people know that certain animals are not susceptible to certain diseases—thus the hen resists infection by the tetanus germ and that of anthrax, as do some other animals, such as the rabbit and there are many other cases of this immunity. Among the races of men negroes and persons of negro blood, even when this is mixed by intermarriage with a white race, are immune to yellow fever, and this immunity is inherited to the second and third generation of mixed descent. But it is possible to disturb or altogether destroy this individual immunity by special treatment, and this can be done by interfering with the diet, the temperature and atmospheric surroundings, and by fatigue or loss of blood. Starvation will induce susceptibility to a great number of diseases to which the individual is naturally immune, while creatures immersed in water, kept in rooms of unnaturally high or low temperatures or artificially fatigued, will acquire diseases which they can normally resist.

It is clear from this fact that healthy, cleanly surroundings, a regular, natural life, and suitable nourishing diet provide us with the greatest possible chance of escaping disease. It is practically impossible for anyone living in ordinary surroundings to avoid contact with disease germs of almost all kinds, but it is within the power of most of us to avoid giving them a suitable soil and suitable conditions for their development.

TOBACCO HEART.

The results of over-indulgence in tobacco are almost too well known to bear repetition. The alkaloid—nicotine—which is present in tobacco, first excites and then depresses the nerve cells throughout the body, affecting the circulatory system first by slowing the heartbeat, and then in the second stage by considerably quickening of it, first raising and then lessening the blood pressure in the arteries. Chronic irregularity of the heart-beat is common as a result of continued excess in tobacco, slowness of heart and occasional intermission being the symptoms in most cases, but in severe examples this may change to utter disorder in rate and rhythm, a condition known as "delirium cordis."

Tobacco heurts are commonest among young men who have acquired the habit of smoking at an early age, and is usually found among cigarette smokers. This is probably because more tobacco is smoked daily without noticing it in the form of cigarettes than in pipes or cigars, heavy smokers getting through as many as forty or fifty cigarettes a day. In advanced cases sudden fainting is not unusual. Tobacco heart may, happily, be cured in its early stages by avoiding tobacco. This irregularity usually ceases shortly after giving up the habit, and if it has not been of long duration the heart regains its normal condition. Four or five weeks will commonly see normal health regained. But where the habit is of very long standing and the case a severe one, the irregularity may persist for a much longer period. If the cure is attempted late in life perfect regularity of heart beat may never be restored.

Swimming With a Cold.

In an address before the lending ear, nose and throat specialists of the county, Dr. Hill Hastings, of Los Angeles, recently called attention to the danger of a person's swimming, and particularly diving, when he has a cold in the head. Comparatively few persons realize that it is dangerous, and many believe that a cold and are still annoyed by excessive thick secretions in the nose they can find relief by diving or plunging the head under water. The purulent matter washed out of the nose by the diver himself runs a risk of forcing some of the pus into his middle ear. Most specialists have observed that cases of mastoid abscess are common every summer during the swimming season. At the large ear, nose and throat hospitals it is recognized that the swimming season invariably brings on "a crop of mastoids." The advice to keep out of the water until a "head cold" is entirely cleared up cannot be too strongly emphasized.

PEARLS OF PEARL DIVERS.

Dangers That Beset Native Workers in the Persian Gulf.

The lot of the native pearl divers of the Persian Gulf is a hard one, for all run the risk of getting scurvy from the lack of fresh food. Ice, of course, is unknown in the fleet, and the impure water breeds worms. The boiling and filtering of water do not appear to appeal to oriental people as yet. The salts, or rope pullers, get palms as hard and cracked as an ancient Bedouin's heel. They could prevent this by wearing gloves, but that would be a sign of effeminacy and bring ridicule upon them.

The exposure in the water gives many of the divers weak hearts and tuberculosis, and many of them become deaf because the weight of the water breaks their ear drums. Sharks abound in the gulf, and many divers have had a hand bitten off. One young Arab was brought to the American dispensary at Kuwait with his whole side laid open by a shark that had got a wide mouth hold upon him. The boy survived. We asked him if he would give up diving. He said: "I will go back next year. I have to."

The danger of drowning is great, for sometimes a strong current carries the diver far away from his boat, and before the rope puller can bring him back he is drowned. The Arabs have no pulmotors, and they are not equipped in giving "first aid." If a man remains too long under water it was "written on his forehead," and that is all there is to it.—E. E. Calverley in Scientific American.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

Chewing the Crude Rubber.

About the first process rubber goes through on the way to become a tire or tube is mastication. After the crude Para is washed it is broken up into lumps and tossed into the crackers. These are machines with heavy rollers, which take the rubber in between them and chew it. Entering the masticating room of a factory, the first impression is that there is a brush fire burning or else there is a den of snakes at hand. The rubber snaps and crackles like burning branches and then blows shrillingly. The stuff is kept at until it comes up in regular sheets, very thin and looking like a sort of cake dusted with crumbs. Then after thorough drying in vacuum chambers it is ready to be put up with the chemicals and other things that make up the compound.—New York Sun.

Worth Protecting

A good article is worthy of a good package. A rich, strong, delicious tea like Red Rose is worth putting into a sealed package to keep it fresh and good.

A cheap, common tea is hardly worth taking care of and is usually sold in bulk.

Red Rose is always sold in the sealed package which keeps it good.

The Power of the Nation

BY AUGUSTUS BRIDLE

Ten months ago a man named Nicholas Romanoff was far and away the richest man in the world. Rockefeller, Carnegie and all the Rothschilds rolled into one had not one-quarter of the wealth of this man, who owned in his own person all the undeveloped lands, mines and forests of Russia and about half the industrialized wealth of all the Russias. For several months now Nicholas Romanoff has been poorer than a Russian peasant; because he has the peasant's food and clothes, but not the peasant's liberty.

What transformed Nicholas R. from that dizzy height to what he is? Revolution. Nicholas was the only real big aristocrat in the world. The Kaiser rules Germany through big interests. Nicholas ruled Russia by I-Am. And the moment Russia decided to have done with I-Am in favour of We-Will, all the power and property of Nicholas were swept away just as you sweep checkers off a board. What gave him that property and power? The State. He thought he was the State. In himself he had nothing. And he is now as much a charge on the State as any old bedridden widow ever was on the township. It was the State's signature, representing the wealth and the nation and all of Russia, that gave Nicholas what he lost and had. When he lost that he lost everything but his life.

We have no Nicholas Romanoff in Canada. But the power of the nation is here, just as it was in Russia. Whenever the nation decides to affix its signature to a document drawn in favor of John Smith, that man is sure of his money. In a very little while the nation of Canada, in the person of its Finance Minister, will be putting its signature on scores of thousands of documents promising to pay money at a future date with interest at 5 1/2 per cent. Temporarily the nation needs the money. The people have it. As a mere matter of right, the State could seize that money along with all other property, because it's only the State that makes property, just as it did in the case of Nicholas R. But the State robs no man. It merely wants to use the wealth which people have as a result of the State's protection, for the purpose of helping to finance the war.

To get the loan of this money the State issues Canadian Victory Bonds. Behind the promise to pay-back on every one of those bonds is the wealth and the power of the State that already guarantees property rights to every man and woman in Canada. When the State decided to pluck the feathers off Nicholas Romanoff, the State made a clean job of it. When the State backs the Finance Minister's or the Government's note to pay you, the money is as sure to come back to you as the sun is to rise tomorrow.

Judging by the reports from all parts of the country the Exemption Tribunal will have a busy time soon. There appears to be at least ninety per cent. of the men eligible under the Act, applying for exemption.

Letter from Adjutant-General Canadian Militia to Albert Dunkley

Ottawa, October 25th, 1917
Albert Dunkley, Esq.,
R. R. No. 3,
Stirling, Ont.
814313 Pte. Albert Roy Dunkley,
Canadian Expeditionary Force.

Sir: I have the honour to inform you that a cable has been received from England reporting that arrangements had been made for the marginally named soldier to sail from Liverpool for Canada per the H. S. "Arquaya" on the 17th instant.

The above information is sent you to advise you of his probable arrival in Canada at an early date. As it sometimes occurs that the departure of vessels for Canada is postponed for a few days, his non-arrival at the time he is expected need not cause you any anxiety on his behalf. I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

FRANK BEARD,
Director of Records for Adjutant General

BELLVIEW

A number of hunters from this vicinity have taken their departure for the hunting grounds of North Hastings. We all are very fond of venison around here.

The ladies of the Women's Institute in this vicinity picked some twenty five Christmas Boxes to be sent overseas to the boys from this part of the township. Owing to the generosity of the givers they had plenty of funds to carry out this good work and we understand will be able to send some more in the near future. The boxes are being sent in the name of the Rawdon Red Cross.

St. Mark's S.S. is sending six delegates to the annual convention of the Ontario Sunday School Association which is being held at Peterboro on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week. The delegates are Mrs. John Brown, Miss Mary McInroy, Miss May Penn, Miss Florence S. McKeown, Mr. Allan McComb and Mr. Will Barlow.

Mrs. B. P. Clarke, of Edmonston, Alta. and Mrs. Geo. Simmons of Edmonton Falls Ont. are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Baker this week.

Miss Milda Munby who has been touring the west for the past three months returned home on Wednesday of last week.

"BELA"

She hastened to prepare a simple meal. Self-consciousness did not trouble her if she might be busy. Sam loved to follow her graceful movements by the fire. What harm? he asked the watch-dog within. This dog had grown drowsy, anyhow.

Bela's curiosity in turn began to have way. "Where you live before you come here, Sam?" she asked. "In a city, Sam," he answered. "It isn't real living."

"I know a city!" she exclaimed. "Musquosels tell me. They got houses high as jackpines. Windows as wide as a river. At night a thousand thousand moons hang down to give the people light. Sam. 'What would you say to a sky-scraper, I wonder.' 'What is a sky-scraper?' 'Like fifty houses piled up one on top of the other, and reaching to the sky.'"

Bela pouted. "You mak' fun I think because I know nothing." "Honest to goodness!" she swore. "What good to 'know' no good?" "There are different floors inside. Fifty of them."

"How do people get to the top?" "In an elevator. Kind of box you get into. Whiz, up she goes like that!"

Bela's face showed strong incredulity. She let the subject drop. "You got fater, mot'er out there, Sam?" she asked.

He shook his head. "Both dead." "You got no people 'tall?" she asked, quick with sympathy.

"Brothers," he said grimly. "Three of them. They don't think much of me." One question followed another, and the time flew by. They were making famous progress now. They ate. Afterward Sam stretched out in the grass with his hands under his head, and told his story freely.

"Gad, what a relief to talk!" he said. "I haven't really opened up since we left Prince George. Those fellows, they're all right in their way, but pretty coarse. I don't hit it off much. I keep mum to avoid trouble."

"I lak hear you talk," murmured Bela softly. "My brothers are all a lot older than I. Sam went on. 'I was the baby of the family. It's considerable of one to be a baby to a kid. The baby you along until after you've grown up, then all of a sudden they expect you to stand alone.'"

"I was always a kind o' misfit somehow. I never fit in. I lack an instinct all other fellows seem to have to hang together and boost each other along. School seemed like such a silly affair to me; I wouldn't learn. In business afterward it was worse."

"My brothers took me up one after another. They are all well-to-do. One is president of an electric-light plant, one is a corporation lawyer, the other runs a big store. Keen on business, all of them. I tried to make good with each one, honest I did. But I sickened in offices. My brain seemed to turn to mush. Impossible for me to get up any interest in business."

"So I got passed along from one to another. Naturally, they thought I was no good. I thought so, too. A dog's life! Their wives, that was worse. All regular rich me. They crazy about society and all that, and having things better than the neighbors. Do you understand what I mean?"

"No," Bela confessed. "Some day I will. Don't stop. I lak hear it all."

"Well, me with my untidy clothes. I was a thorn in the side of those ladies. Vasily turned up their noses when I came around. One day after a big row with my eldest brother, I just walked off. I've been regularly against 'em since. Just a year ago. Seems more like ten. I've lived a thousand lives."

"You take a big baby like I was and throw him on the world—I was, he won't have to go to hell to find out what it's like. I've learned in one year what most fellows take twenty to learn. Now I'm beginning to see light, to get solid ground under my feet. Of course I haven't got anything yet!" Sam smiled here—but I know what!"

"What you want?" asked Bela, quickly. "To live a natural life. I've found out that is what I was made for. Anything all laid out for me, regular school or business simply floors me. I want a little piece of land of my own, all my own. I'll build my own house on it and raise my own grub. I want to do what I want without anybody else's say-so. The idea is to build up something that you can see grow."

"All alone?" asked Bela with a casual air. Sam's heart missed a beat, then overtook it.

"I like to be alone," he said quickly. "That's what I came up here for. I have made up my mind to it. I don't get along well with people."

Bela was silent. From time to time Bela glanced nervously at Sam through her lashes. He presented a terrific problem to one of her experiences. She found this friendly interchange delightful, but was it all?

She had no feeling of being a woman to him. She began to feel a great dissatisfaction. At imperious instinct urged her to sting him out of his comfortable disregard of her sex. Her opportunity came when Sam said:

"You have never told me what it was you wanted to talk to me about." "All those men want marry me," she said offhand. Sam sat up abruptly and stared at her in astonishment. Was she, after all, the evil woman he had first thought? Had he been deceitfully lulled into security? She repeated her statement. His face hardened.

asked. "I don't think anything about it," he answered with an angry flash. "I don't know what to tell them."

"I had a faint theoretical ring, which might have suggested to a discriminating ear that she was not being altogether candid. Sam obstinately closed his mouth. "Which you lak best?" she asked, presently. "The big one, the black one, the red one, you one?"

A great discomposure seized upon Sam. Anker pounded at his temples, and insana words pressed to his tongue. He put on the clamps. "What I think is neither here nor there," he said, stiffly. "It's up to you to make your own choice. Why drag me into it?"

"You say you want be friend," explained Bela. "So I think you help me."

"Nobody can help you in a matter of this kind," said Sam. "Lord, you talk like a fool. You want something whispered to him while he said it. 'Why?' she asked with one of her sideling looks.

Again his eyes flashed on her in angry pain. "Was the woman trying to madden him?" "A girl must make her own choice," his tongue said primly.

"But you could tell me about them, which is the best man. How do I know?" "This on the face of it seemed like a reasonable request, but his breast still passionately rebelled.

"Well, I won't!" he snapped. "If that's all you want to talk about I'd better go."

"Big Jack a good man?" she persisted. "Sam got up. 'No, don't go!' she cried quickly. 'I'll be good. I don't know why you always mad at me. Neither did Sam himself know. He looked at her dumbly with eyes full of pain and confusion. He sat down again."

For awhile she made light conversation about muskrats and beavers, but when she thought he was safely settled down, womanlike she was obliged to return to the forbidden subject.

There was a pain in her breast as well as his. What was the matter with him that he treated her so despectfully? How else could she find out what was in his heart but by making him lose his temper?

"Maybe I lak' Big Jack," she remarked casually. "All right," returned Sam, bitterly. "He's the richest."

"A regular woman's reason. I wish you joy."

Would nothing move him? Bela felt as if she were beating with her hands at a rock. "What do you care?" she asked insolently. Both voices rang with bitterness now.

"I don't care!" she sneered. "What you get mad for?" Sam's endurance gave way. He sprang up.

"It's rotten!" he cried. "The whole business! That's what makes me mad! Have you no shame, setting a whole lot of me against each other like that? And cooly talking over which one you'll take! I tell you it'll likely end in murder. Maybe you'd like that. Give you quite a send-off, eh? Well, you can't drag me into it. I like a different kind of woman."

Bela was no tame spirit. Anger answered anger. She faced him pale and blazing-eyed.

"No woman want you, anyhow!" she cried. "You cooly! You only half man! You too scare to fight for a woman! You only talk! Go away from me! I lak' a man for my 'osban'!"

Sam, beside himself with rage, stepped forward and raised his clenched fist over her head. Bela laughed in his face. Suddenly he seemed to see himself from the outside, and was filled with blank horror.

Turning, he snatched up his coat and shirt, and crashed blindly away through the willows.

Go and do your cookin'!" Bela cried after him.

Bela's cabin was on the opposite side of the creek from the men's cabin. The only place where Sam could cross without getting another wetting was by the stepping-stones near the lake. He headed for the pines where the going was better and encircled the edge of the meadow.

A great turmoil was going on within him. He was agitated at the gust of passion that had drowned all his senses for a moment. He had not known he contained such possibilities. To come so near to striking a woman! Horrible!

Naturally, he did not fail to blame her. A devil—to provoke men to such a pitch of madness! Well, he was done with her. Anyhow, he had seen her in her true colors. She was no good! There could be no further argument about that. If he had ever had anything further to do with her let him be called a soft-headed fool!

not think those things in my heart. Please forget it." His eyes bored her through and through. "Another trick to get you going, the voice inside him asked. "Don't look at me lak that," she faltered.

"How do I know what to believe?" Sam said harshly. "You say so many things."

"I got foolin' 'bout those o'ter men," she said. "I not marry one of them. I sooner jump in the lak'."

A secret spring of gladness spurted up in Sam's breast. "Do you mean that?" he demanded.

"I mean it," she replied. He gazed at her strongly, desiring to believe, but suspicious still. His slower nature could not credit such a rapid change of front.

"Don't look at me lak that," she said again. "What you want me do?" "Go away," he said.

She looked at him, startled. "You're in earnest about not wanting to make trouble," he said, harshly. "You've got to go without seeing any of them again."

Her eyes were full of trouble. "You tell me go away?" she whispered. Sam winced. "I haven't got anything to do with it," he said. "It's up to you."

He was more than ever inexplicable to her. "What you goin' to do?" she asked. "I?" he replied, nettled. "I'm going up to the head of the lake with the bunch, of course."

Bela was a painful silence, while she sat idly in her mind for the explanation of his strange attitude. An instinct told her he loved her, but she could not make him say it.

"You think I bad girl, Sam," she murmured. "How do I know what you are?" he asked, harshly. "Here's your chance to prove to me that you're on the square."

"I got go 'way to mak' you think I all right?" "Yes," he answered, eagerly. "You funny man, I think," she murmured, sadly.

"Can't you see it?" he cried. "No," she said. "But I goin' to do what you tell me. I go to-night."

"A whole lot of me against each other like that? And cooly talking over which one you'll take! I tell you it'll likely end in murder. Maybe you'd like that. Give you quite a send-off, eh? Well, you can't drag me into it. I like a different kind of woman."

Bela waited for him to say more—but waited in vain. For herself she would quickly have told him she loved him, had not her tongue been tied by Musquosel's positive instructions. And so the unhappy silence continued between them.

"Maybe somebody come this way," said Bela at last. "Mak' trouble. Come up by my boat."

Sam shook his head. "I've got to go back to camp now."

"You not see me again. You got nothing say to me?" asked Bela, despairingly. Her hands sought his.

Sam's instincts sprang up in alarm. "What could I say?" he cried. "What good would it do? Good-by!" Snatching his hand out of hers, he retreated over the stones, refusing to look back.

When Sam entered the shack Joe faced him, scowling. "Where you been?" he demanded.

Sam, in no humor to be meek, made the time-honored rejoinder. "I'll soon make it my business," he retorted Joe. "With that, see?" showing a clenched fist. "Have you been with Bela?"

Sam, because of the threat, disdained to lie. "Yes," he said, cooly. "Joe whistled about the others. 'Didn't I tell you?' he cried, excitedly. 'I heard her calling him. There's the underhand work here. He's hid the goods on us.'" recumbent figures with a curling lip. Was it hate that had awakened him? He had put up in alliance with so much at their hangout.

An oblique ray of moonlight struck through the window over his head, luring him like a song. He softly got up, and, gathering up his bed, went outside.

The pines were like a regiment of gigantic soldiers standing at ease under the sky and whispering together while they waited the word of command. Their fragrant resin like a benediction on the air. The moon, low down in the southeast, peeped between the trunks. At the mouth of the creek where the little rapids poured into a quiet pool there was a bank of sand. This was the general washing-place of the camp.

Sam, thinking of the sand as a promising bed, made his way in that direction by the path they had worn. As he passed around the house a shadow moved from behind a great pine and followed him, flitting noiselessly from tree to tree.

Sam sat down in the sand, nursing his knees. The mouth of the creek was the only spot along shore as yet wholly free of ice. He looked over the lake through the opening. Under the light of the low moon the water was the color of freshly cast iron.

Somewhere out upon it Bela was paddling, if she had not already reached home. His breast relaxed its guard against her a little. He believed she was a pretty fine sort, after all. Had he done the right thing to send her away? She was beautiful enough to make a man's arm ache for her now she had gone.

But on the whole he was glad she was gone. He did not realize it, but his hour had not quite struck. It was a wholesome instinct that made him fight against the overmastering emotion that attacked his heart.

He told himself that he must afford to look in that direction. He had work to do. First he had to get a toothpick in this land. Some day, maybe—

Drowsiness overcame him again. With a sigh he stretched out on the sand and rolled himself in his blanket. His breathing became deep and slow. By and by the coquettish moon peeped between the tree-trunks across the creek and touched his face in his fair hair with a silvery wand. Whereupon it was no longer a mere man; it was young Hermes sleeping beside the water.

The shadow stole from among the trees above the sand-bank and crept down to his side. It knelt there with clasped hands. In shadow a white face in the moonlight, on which glinted two diamonds.

By and by it rose with energetic action and, sitting down, looked at him. A ghost, turned toward the lake, and clambered around the barrier of ice, dropped on the edge of the water, on the other side.

BLOOD-MAKING MEDICINE

It took centuries for medical science to discover that the blood is the life. Now, it is known that if the blood were always abundant, rich and pure, very few people would ever be ill. It was not until the end of the 19th century that an instrument was invented for measuring the red part of the blood. Then doctors could tell just how anemic a patient had become, and with medicine to make new blood the patient soon got well.

All the blood in the body is nourished and kept rich and red by the food taken, but when, for any reason, a person is run down and cannot make sufficient blood from the food to keep the body in health, then a blood-making medicine is required. The simplest and very best of blood makers suitable for home use by anyone, is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

When a course of these Pills is taken their good effect is soon shown in an improved appetite, stronger nerves, a sound digestion and an ability to master your work and enjoy leisure hours. For women there is a prompt relief, or prevention of ailments which make life a burden. As an all-round medicine for the cure of ailments due to weak, watery and poor medicine discovered by science, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are equal to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

You can get these pills through any dealer in medicine, or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

BARBED WIRE IN WAR. Putting Up and Cutting Down Barriers is Perilous Work.

The erection of war entanglements, even when the trenches are some distance apart, is at all times dangerous. The men elp over the parapet and in the first place pound in the supports with mallets, the heads of which are carefully wrapped in cloth in order to deaden the sound. Two other men carry the wire drum—a wooden cylinder round which the wire is rolled—by means of a long pole through the centre, and a comrade attaches the wires to the supports.

The work is slow and nerve straining, says a writer in the London Graphic, for star shells burst often and compel the men to crouch low and remain motionless until the flare burns out.

To each soldier who takes part in modern warfare thick gloves for gripping wire and strong pliers for cutting it are as essential as the rifle and bayonet.

Before an assault by his own regiment the soldier cuts his own wire, and he must then endeavor as best he may to cut and hack his way through the enemy's, pulling down a support here, cutting the wire while the machine gunner aims at their men.

Thus barbed wire, so simple in its use, so deadly when used in the ways described, enters into every phase of operation in the firing zone.

Vegetables For Winter

The Conservation of the Products of the Garden

1. Corn—The surplus (many find difficult to keep when canned) may be canned with tomatoes, as the acid of the tomato helps to preserve the corn and is good for soup in this way.

2. Corn—Cooked on the cob, cut off with knife and dried in a slow oven. In the winter soak over night before using and then cook slowly. Use as vegetable and make into soup.

3. Corn (recommended by the Toronto Garden Committee of the Women's War Time Thrift Committee)—Cut from cob, spread on platters and give a good covering of salt. Let stand over night. In the morning pack into glass jars or in a covered crock, putting a weight on top. When required for use take out what is required, soak over night in water, then cook as fresh vegetables.

1. Tomatoes, canned—Scald, peel, cut in half, remove the hard core, pack in jars as solid as possible without any extra fluid added; add a teaspoonful of salt to each jar, adjust the rubbers (better new ones to be certain, and sterilized), and put on the covers. Place the filled jars in the wash boiler, on a rack of some kind to prevent breaking the glass, and in cold water. Have enough water to come at least two or three inches above the rack, taking care to have enough to prevent it boiling dry, and give the tomatoes five minutes after the boiling point is reached.

2. Tomatoes, if cut from the vines in good sound condition, with an inch of the stem left on, cleaned, and put in a brine in a crock (one cup of salt to two gallons of water), will keep and be useful for a considerable time.

3. Tomato plants pulled up by the roots just before the frost injures them, the roots wrapped in coarse cloth, and the plants hung up by the roots in a cool, frost-proof place, will provide sliced tomatoes until Christmas.

4. Or wrap large, smooth, well-formed green tomatoes in tissue paper, and place on shelves in a cool closet, taking care to avoid touching each other, and these will ripen, and can be sliced for the table until Christmas.

5. Green tomatoes can not only be pickled, but a fig-like preserve can be made from them—especially the small ones. The ripe ones cannot only be used for sauces and catsups, but a marmalade (used in England in the place of orange marmalade) can be made. The strained juice can be sealed hot and used for soup (cream of tomato soup) in the winter.

6. Cucumbers (recommended by the Toronto Committee)—Peel and slice thin; put in a layer of sliced cucumbers and a layer of salt in a glass jar. Repeat until the jar is full and press down as tightly as possible. Seal tightly, and when required take out the quantity required for use and soak over night. Pour a little vinegar over them and sprinkle with pepper. They will be just as like freshly-sliced cucumbers, not having changed color at all.

2. Cucumbers, if large, need not be discarded, as useless, as they can be cooked as vegetable marrow, and also the largest and ripest can be used in this way.

3. Cucumbers can be preserved like citron, and combined with lemon, ginger, or raisins, will give variety.

Swiss Chard—The green part of the leaf can be canned for green for winter and the white midrib also canned and used as asparagus in the east.

1. The root vegetable, besides being good canned—especially if pulled young; when thinning is in order, or soon after—can be stored in damp sand in the cellar.

2. Some use sifted coal ashes preferring these as non-conductors of heat the drying and shrivelling is prevented.

3. In England a marmalade is made from carrots and oranges, as well as rhubarb and oranges.

4. Parsnips and salsify can remain in the ground all winter.

5. Beans—From a few vines of Kentucky Wonder bean 6 or 8 pounds of beans may be harvested from these grown on fence or trellis. When using the dried scarlet runner beans, being the dried scarlet runner beans, soak over night and remove the tough outer coat and the kernel will be found to make excellent soup.

2. Beans (as per the Toronto committee's recommendation)—Cut string mitter's recommendation—Cut string beans as if preparing for the table, have them perfectly dry (never pick them on a wet day) spread out on platters and give a good coating of salt. Let stand over night. In the morning pack in glass jars or in a covered crock putting a weight on top of the crock putting a weight on top of the crock.

When required for use take out the amount required, soak over night in water and then boil as fresh beans. They will require a little longer cooking than the fresh beans. String Beans (see below 3)—Parsley can be dipped in hot water, dried and put away and found excellent for many uses in the winter or can be carefully cleaned and packed in glass jars for use for layer with salt when required. Soaked and used and found quite as good as the freshly purchased article. If one can not winter it over by covering with a box in the garden.

HAY FEVER

By EDGAR A. GIBSON, IS. CHARLOTTE, RICHMOND.

I do not wish the Kaiser ill,
I wish him nothing that would kill;
No bomb, with needless and dispatch
To wipe him from life's kaffir klatch.
No danger thrust between his ribs
That would destroy his royal ribs;
I would not have him swiftly die;
That is too good for such a guy.
I only wish the Kaiser might Hay fever get, and get it right.

I wish the Kaiser's royal nose Might know the woes my poor nose knows.

I only wish his royal chest
Might always feel as sore distressed
As mine must feel until the day
October's frosts shall come our way.
I wish that royal piece of cheese
Might be forever doomed to sneeze
Death is too good for such a king
Hay fever would be just the thing.
A pair of watery eyes and red,
An aching and a throbbing head.

A choking throat, and fevered lips,
And then a nose that constant drips;
The wish for sleep, but all in vain;
To end one cough to cough again!
All these are parcel of the wish
I cherish for that royal fish.
I could work my will with trifles,
He'd scuffle to the end of time.
I'd never let the Kaiser die,
Although for death he'd often cry.

As punishment for all he's done,
His nose forevermore would run;
A million years on earth he'd stay
And sneeze a thousand times a day.
Sweet sleep would never find his bed
All night-long the floor he'd tread.
Death is too good for such a king
Hay fever would be just the thing.

The Military Service Act

The Military Service Act is Being Vigorously Enforced. Class 1 men must respond by 10th Nov. Employers must Assist in Enforcing the Law.

The Regulations have now been issued by the Military Service Council and despatched throughout the Country. They are very comprehensive and a perusal of them makes it clear that the Government is very much in earnest in its determination to enforce the Law.

The duty imposed upon the members of Class 1, called out under the Proclamation of the 13th October, 1917, is very clear and simple. They must report for service or claim exemption by the 10th of November next. Such report or claim for exemption is to be made in writing in any Post Office and will be transmitted by the postal authorities to the appropriate Registrar. Those who neglect to claim exemption through the Post Office will be allowed to do so in person at the Tribunals on the 8th, 9th and 10th November, but will probably find themselves a good deal inconvenienced by resorting to this method, and will be much better advised to make use of the facilities of the Post Office which have been provided, in order to minimize the inconvenience occasioned to the public by the operation of the Act.

The Regulations are equally direct and explicit in providing penalties for breaches of the law.

Any members of a local tribunal duly appointed who fails without reasonable excuse to perform his duties is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years and not less than three months.

Any man who fails to report for service or claim exemption is liable to a term of imprisonment not exceeding five years' hard labour.

Any man who, after the 10th of November, fails to answer truthfully any inquiries by a police officer or any person authorized, bearing on the question of his compliance or non-compliance with the Act, is liable to a penalty not exceeding $500.00 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year.

Bribing or attempting to bribe any member of a Tribunal, Medical Board, Registrar or other person connected with the Administration of the Act, is punishable by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and not less than one year.

The duty is cast upon employers to report any man in their employ who has failed to comply with the Act and a penalty of a fine not less than $50.00 and not more than $100.00 or imprisonment for not more than three months is the penalty for infraction of this provision. A fine is also imposed upon any employer who knowingly employs or continues to employ any man called out who has neither reported nor claimed exemption.

Any attempt by dishonest employers to use the draft for the purposes of oppressing employees is dealt with by a regulation which imposes a fine of not less than $100.00 and not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not to exceed six months upon any employer who stipulates or offers to stipulate with an employee for reduction of wages or other attention or consideration in consideration of the employee's claiming or refraining from claiming exemption for such employee.

Other possible offences against the intention and spirit of the Act are dealt with in detail.

DRINK HOT WATER IF YOU DESIRE A ROSY COMPLEXION

Says we can't help but look better and feel better after an inside bath.

To look one's best and feel one's best is to enjoy an inside bath each morning to flush from the system the previous day's waste, sour fermentations and poisonous toxins before it is absorbed into the blood. Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken each day leave in the alimentary organs a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not eliminated, form toxins and poisons which are then sucked into the blood through the very ducts which are intended to suck in only nourishment to sustain the body.

If you want to see the glow of healthy bloom in your cheeks, to see your skin get clearer and clearer, you are told to drink every morning upon arising, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless means of washing the waste material and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Men and women with sallow skins, liver spots, pimples or puffed complexion, also those who wake up with coated tongue, bad taste, nasty breath, others who are bothered with headaches, bilious spells, acid stomach or constipation should begin this phosphate hot water drinking and are assured of very pronounced results in one or two weeks.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs very little at the drug store but is sufficient to demonstrate that just as soap and hot water cleanses, purifies and freshens the skin on the outside, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the inside organs. We must always consider that internal sanitation is vastly more important than outside cleanliness, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities from the blood, while the bowel pores do.

Tenders for Pulpwood Limit

Tenders will be received by the undersigned up to and including the seventeenth day of December next for the right to cut pulpwood and pine timber on a certain area situated in the vicinity of the Kapuskasing River in the Districts of Timiskaming and Algoma.

Tenders are to offer a flat rate per cord for all classes of pulpwood, whether spruce or other woods. The successful tenderer shall be required to pay for the Red and White Pine on the limit a flat rate of $10 per thousand feet board measure.

The successful tenderer shall also be required to erect a mill or mills on or near the territory, and to manufacture the wood into pulp and paper in the Province of Ontario, in accordance with the terms and conditions of sale which can be had on application to the Department.

Parties making tender will be required to deposit with their tender a marked cheque payable to the Honourable the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario for Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00), which amount will be forfeited in the event of their not entering into agreement to carry out conditions, etc. The said Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00) will be held by the Department until such time as the terms and conditions of the agreement to be entered into have been complied with and the said mills erected, equipped and in operation. The said money may then be applied in such amounts and at such times as the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines may direct in payment of accounts for dues or of any other obligation due the Crown until the whole sum has been applied.

The highest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

For particulars as to description of territory, capital to be invested, etc., apply to the undersigned or to the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines.

Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines, Toronto, September 19th, 1917.

N.B.—No unauthorized publication of this notice will be paid for.

Will Class One Provide The One Hundred Thousand Men?

It will be greatly to the advantage of Canada if the entire quota of 100,000 men to be raised under the Military Service Act can be secured from the first class; that is, from the men between the ages of 20 and 34 who were unmarried or widowers without children on July 6th, 1917.

This is almost self-evident for the following reasons:

It is admitted that, between the ages of 20 and 34, the average man is at the height of his physical strength and is most adaptable to the change of conditions from civilian life; the military service of unmarried men and widowers without children would occasion less distress than that of most others, since they are largely without dependents. Also, it would entail less financial burden for Canada, through separation allowances, etc.

Authorities estimate that, after all proper exemptions have been allowed, Canada should be able to produce from the first class 100,000 men fit for service, so the drain upon the man power of the country will not be severe.

Members of Class One will be well advised to present themselves for examination immediately to the Medical Board in their district. Upon examination as to their physical fitness, they will be placed in one of the following categories:

- Category A—if fit for service overseas fighting units.
- Category B—if fit for service overseas in Army Medical Corps, Forestry Battalion, etc.
- Category C—if fit for service in Canada only.
- Category E—if unfit for military service of any nature.

If not placed in Category A, the applicant will know that he is not liable for immediate service, but will go to the Post Office and send in a claim for exemption with his Medical Certificate attached, when he will receive in due course a certificate of exemption until those in his medical category are summoned for service.

Where a man, who is placed in category A, feels that exemption should be allowed, an application form can be secured from the postmaster. This form, when filled in, will be forwarded by the postmaster to the registrar of the district, and the applicant will be informed by mail as to the time and place for the consideration of his application by the Exemption Board.

Issued by The Military Service Council.

Beef and Bacon are Needed Overseas

Beef and Bacon are needed overseas in increasing quantities. They are foods especially suited to the requirements of the men who are fighting and those doing heavy physical labor. The scarcity of fodder and the greater call for meat have compelled the Allies since the beginning of the war to kill more than 33,000,000 head of their stock animals. Thus the source of their meat is decreasing. At the same time the needs of the soldiers and war workers have increased the necessary meat consumption.

Imports of beef and bacon into Great Britain from Sweden, Denmark and Holland have been reduced to a very small amount, whereas all three countries formerly supplied large quantities. The United Kingdom is throwing more than ever upon the North American continent for these commodities. Moreover, the entrance of the United States into the war has greatly increased the requirements of both beef and bacon for the United States Army.

The soldiers need beef and bacon and they can only be supplied if the civilian populations of Canada and the United States will reduce their consumption of these foods. A saving of one ounce of meat per person per day, and increased production of beef and bacon on this continent, would go a long way towards meeting the Army's requirements.

"Grow more grapes," is the advice of Dr. Croelmann to the fruit men of Ontario. He finds, since the country went "dry" an insatiable demand for grape juice.

"BAGGING UP"

By AUGUSTUS BRIDLE

When a certain city man was a boy on the farm, cleaning wheat was one of the things he never liked to do, because he always had to turn the fanning mill, and fanning mills in those days were about as hard to turn as a chopping-box is now. It was an arm-aching, back-racking job. Wheat in those days was queer stuff. Most of it had to be run through twice on account of the black peas, because in the battery of screens belonging to that old mill there was no sieve for cockle. The two of them, father and boy, had to clean up thirty bags for a load. It was a day's work. By near noon they had ten bags bagged up and a fresh heap on the floor ready for the scrop.

The father held up his hand when the hopper was empty. "Guess we'll bag that up."

"Thank the Lord!" muttered the boy as he got an empty.

Such a nice little heap of wheat.

"Hope this heap'll make five bags more," thought the boy. "I guess 'twill."

He was always interested in how many bags a heap would make; always guessing at it. Cleaning a load of wheat in those days was a very human job.

The heap made four bags and a half.

Of course they don't do it that way now. A load of wheat is only a chore to bag up now, with all the extra machinery for cleaning and bagging. And it takes only an hour or so to have the barn floor alongside the hayrack and the granary wall looking like a snowbank with the white bags ready to load up. But bagging up is just as interesting as it ever was when a bag of wheat was worth only about $1.65. It's the time when the farmer begins to get a pretty clear estimate of what how much wheat he really has at $2.20 a bushel.

In the old days though a load of wheat meant a lot. It might mean interest on a mortgage, or taxes; anything to keep the farm and the farmer together.

These days it may mean just depositing a check in the town bank.

Down in Ottawa pretty soon a farmer named Tom White will be bagging up his wheat to pay off part of Canada's obligations in the war. To help England go on buying wheat and other things from Canada. He exports wheat all bagged up to have at least $150,000,000. He may have more. But if he doesn't get the $150,000,000 he won't be satisfied with his national crop. And in the matter of buying Canada's Victory Bonds very likely the Canadian farmers will see to it that Farmer White in Ottawa has all his bags chockfull and a good big heap on the floor when it's all bagged up.

B. Belshaw gave notice that at the next meeting of the Council he would introduce a By Law for the purpose of fixing a time and place for holding nominations for Reeve, Councillors and School Trustees for the year 1918.

On motion Council adjourned.

Lanark village hotelkeeper has the following little but expensive advt. in the Era: "Parties who have been using my stables and taking their meals elsewhere are hereby notified to take their horses where they get their meals."

The Victory Bond Loan will be like the Canadian or bank note. It will be worth its face value any time and any where.

Why does Canada Raise Money by Selling Bonds?

BONDS are issued payable in ten or twenty years, as the case may be. It means that repayment of the money will be spread over ten or twenty years instead of being raised by taxation to meet current expenditures.

To raise by taxation all the money as fast as it is needed to carry on Canada's share in winning the war, would be an unbearable burden upon the people.

It would mean that more than a million dollars a day would have to be raised right now.

But to raise money by selling Canada's Victory Bonds means that those of the next generation who will benefit by the sacrifices this generation is making;

—who will share in the freedom this generation is fighting for and largely paying for—will also pay their share.

And when you buy Canada's Victory Bonds you make a first-class business investment in a security that is absolutely safe, likely to enhance in value after the war, and bearing a good rate of interest.

You help the country by keeping open the British market for Canadian products and this helps the general welfare in which you share.

And again, every Canadian who buys a Victory Bond becomes a financial partner or backer of Canada in the war.

When you buy a Canada Victory Bond

you give a personal pledge that you are going to help to win the war.

Every man and woman in Canada can help to win the war by buying Canada's Victory Bonds. And Canada wants the personal, individual interest and co-operation of every man and woman in the country.

The buying of Victory Bonds by the whole people unites them in a determination to win the war.

Every purchase of Canada's Victory Bonds is a blow for freedom against the tyranny of German Kultur.

Every bond sold is a new guarantee that Canada is in the war to the finish, until victory is with the Allies and the world has been made safe to live in.

Every bond you buy is a new pledge that Canada will remain true to herself, the Empire, the Allies and to freedom's cause.

So it is both patriotic and good business to

Buy Canada's Victory Bonds

Issued by Canada's Victory Loan Committee in co-operation with the Minister of Finance of the Dominion of Canada.

Must Put Up Deposit of $200

Before a man can run as a candidate in the Federal elections he has first to be nominated by 25 qualified electors, whose names go on the nomination paper together with the candidate's written consent that he will run. If the candidate is out of the country the consent in writing is not necessary.

Every candidate must put up a deposit of $200. If the candidate fails to get half the number of votes which the winner gets he loses his deposit, but if he gets more the deposit is returned to him.

The nomination papers and the deposit may be submitted to the deputy returning officer on nomination day or any other time between the deputy returning officer's proclamation and nomination day.

Forms for nomination papers can be obtained from the deputy returning officer or the candidate can write out his own form according to Form H of the Dominion Elections Act as follows:—

"We the undersigned electors of the electoral district of — hereby nominate — as a candidate at the election now about to be held of a member to represent the said electoral district in the House of Commons of Canada." Then follow the names of electors and the signature of the nominee.

Everything Dear

Copper Cliff Express: Deer hunting will be dear hunting this year. Cart-ridges cost over twice as much as formerly. Men hunting in the matrimonial stamping grounds for "little dears" also find the sport more expensive than formerly, the price of high-grade chocolates and other ammunition having undergone sharp advances, not to mention the increased cost of marriage licenses. It is said some of the horrid men of this town, who not long ago called their wives "dear," are now calling them "expensive."

The Right Thing in First Place

The manifesto, or platform, of our Union Government possesses many merits and among them there is this outstanding one—it places the first thing in first place. And what is the first thing at this time everybody knows. It is the doing of our share in the winning of the war—and the doing of it now, when our co-operation is needed, and when it will count. A little later our help might not be needed. It might be too late for our help to count; it might be that others had done what it was our duty to do. There is a tremendously important job on hand. It has to be done now; and the Union Government have pledged themselves to do it without delay. There is to be no squirming out of it, no dodging of responsibility, no killing of time by trying this course and that and beating around in a circle of dilatoriness and pretence until the starting point is reached without anything being accomplished except shirking and playing politics. That policy is left for the opponents of the Union Government. The Government have taken up the outstanding task, and they are going to perform it. And that is exactly what the country wishes to have done.

"Carry on" to victory—that is not the principal plank in the Unionist platform. It is much more. It is the very foundation on which the whole platform rests.

PROSPERITY IS PROMISED

Ottawa Thinks Military Service Act will Help the National Condition in Future

Ottawa, Oct. 29—The prospect opened up for Canada by the Military Service Act is one of prosperity insured and safeguarded. The object of the Act is to reinforce our men at the front while keeping in Canada those whose presence here is required in order that necessary business may be carried on as well as those whose going overseas would lay a heavy burden on the country through the needs of dependents.

No heavy tax on the manpower of the country will be made. The Act calls for but 100,000 men, and authorities estimate that there are in the country 400,000 of the first class alone, unmarried men and widowers without children between the ages of 20 and 34. This class may well supply most of these needed.

Men in the first class will be withdrawn for military service only as they are required by the military situation. The process will be gradual, thus leaving a portion of the men to follow their regular vocations until such time as they are required.

The cost of the war must be reduced to the minimum by the system which sends out of the country only those who can best be spared, from the standpoint of the nation as a whole. General prosperity must also be encouraged by the safeguarding of essential industries and the retention at their work of men whom the highest interests of the country require at home.

Canada's Victory Loan to be Liberally Subscribed for in Hastings County

Very few people have any idea of the magnitude of the work connected with Canada's Victory Loan. For three weeks Mr. W. B. Deacon, the County Chairman, has been tireless in organizing and has succeeded in surrounding himself with an organization which is well high perfect. It is not a question of Belleville in this matter. Every village and hamlet and farmhouse right back to Nipissing District will be organized and canvassed. Mr. Deacon and Mr. W. B. Evans have travelled the county from end to end and are handling the entire undertaking in a purely business-like manner. Teams have been formed to cover the entire field, and these teams are composed of men who have made it their business to sell. They are men of weight in their localities, and better than all they are giving their entire time to the placing of these bonds. They will do nothing else for the duration of the campaign. The names of the members of these teams appear below:

The TRAIL BLAZER to greater Motor Car Value

From the standpoint of dollar for dollar value there's not a car made which offers more for your money than the famous Chevrolet Four-Ninety A.

Before the Chevrolet was made in Canada, good cars were all high in price.

But our mammoth production and manufacturing efficiency enables us to sell the Chevrolet Four-Ninety A at a price much lower than its value when compared with other makes of cars.

With the surplus power developed by the famous valve-in-head motor the owner of a Four-Ninety A invariably is the "trail blazer."

Standard equipment includes speedometer, electric starting and lighting, ammeter, oil indicator light equipment, one man top, demountable rims, non-skid tires on rear wheels and many features usually looked for in cars much higher in price.

FOUR WOMEN STRIKERS

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate

After due mature deliberation Mrs. Henry Skaggs sent her son, Sammy, with three written notes to three wives in the neighborhood—Mrs. Perkins, Mrs. White and Mrs. Davis. They were asked to call at her house at 2 o'clock in the afternoon to help bring about a social revolution for the benefit of the female sex all over the world.

When the hour arrived the three women also arrived. They were very busy women, but anything that promised to benefit the sex aroused their sense of duty.

"What I have to say is this," began Mrs. Skaggs as she took the floor and cleared her voice. "The men are on a strike east, west, north and south. Some are striking for higher wages but most of them want eight hours work a day. Their claim is that no man can work more than eight hours a day and do his best and great numbers of them are completely tired out when the eight hours have expired.

"Have they given a thought to us women amid all this turmoil and confusion? Not a thought—not even one. We arise at 6 o'clock in the morning and are through with our housework about 9 in the evening. That makes fifteen hours' work for us, and most of the time we are on our feet. Poor men! He can't work more than eight hours a day without being tuckered out, and he thinks we can work fifteen without having the least cause for complaint. So it has always been and always will be unless we go at it and raise a revolution."

"Let us raise one!" was shouted in chorus.

"That's what I wanted to see you about, and I'm so glad you agree with me. We shall raise a revolution. We will raise it right here and now! From this village it will spread all over the known world, and if our sex in Eskimo land as well as at home do not bless us they deserve to be slaves forever."

So thought Mrs. Perkins, Mrs. Davis and Mrs. White, and the four women then and there entered into a conspiracy and perfected the details. Each one pledged herself to die rather than surrender, and each went home with a grim look on her face.

What befell Mrs. Skaggs befell the others. When her husband came home that evening she met him with a query:

"Henry, you are on a strike for eight hours a day?"

"Yes, dear," was the reply.

"Well, I want to say to you that, beginning Wednesday morning, I shall go on a strike myself. If you feel that you can't work more than eight hours a day I feel that I can't either. I work almost double that now and have worked so ever since we were married, and it's no wonder I look like an old woman at my age of thirty-eight. Have you any reasons to advance why I should not strike?"

"Not a single reason," he replied when she expected him to advance a dozen or more. "Your work is hard and long, and if you can manage to make it easier I shall do all I can to encourage you."

Mrs. Skaggs was much surprised and put out by the attitude of her husband, but she was grimly determined to carry out the conspiracy. When Wednesday morning came she said to her husband across the breakfast table:

"Henry, this is the day."

"Yes, this is the day," he quietly replied.

"But you will be home to lunch, as usual. But after that is cleared away the strike begins."

Soon after 2 o'clock and just as Mrs. Skaggs was getting into bed in a book Mrs. Jinks, a colored woman of very ample proportions, entered the house. She was chasing the three Skaggs children before her, and as she took off her hat and made herself at home she said to their mother:

"Dose chill'en need to have dar ears cuffed, an' I'll make a great improvement in less dan a week. Dis foah needs sweepin', an' I'll tackle dat fust."

"And who on earth are you?" demanded the surprised Mrs. Skaggs as she closed her book and stood up.

"Why, I's Mrs. Jinks, at co'se," was the reply.

"But I didn't send for you."

"Of co'se not, but your husband cum fur me an' said I was to be de second relief. I cum on at 2 o'clock an' leaves at 10. Dat makes my eight hours, an' durin' my time he don't you have too much to say about things. I knows all about runnin' a house an' don't need no bossin'."

"Now, then, Mrs. Jinks, or whatever your name is, you take yourself right out of here or I'll have a constable take you. You are not wanted here, and it's singular that my husband sent you."

"But you is all tired out wid your work an' am strikin' fur eight hours," was the reply.

"And I'll be striking you if you don't move on. When it is time to get supper for my husband I shall do so."

When Mrs. Skaggs came home he found a better supper than usual prepared for him, and his wife had slipped up a little in matters of dress. All he said as he took his accustomed seat was:

"I see, dear, that you have won your strike, and I am glad of it."

Mrs. Skaggs looked at him indifferently and reproachfully and made no reply. She had gone back to fifteen hours a day.

Tenders for Pulpwood Limit

Tenders will be received by the undersigned up to 6 o'clock on Tuesday, the twentieth day of October, 1917, for the purchase of pulpwood and pine timber on a certain area situated in the vicinity of the Kapuskasing River in the District of Timiskaming and adjacent to the Kapuskasing River. The tenderer shall be required to pay for the Red and White Pine on the limit a flat rate of $10 per thousand feet board measure.

The successful tenderer shall also be required to erect a mill or mills on or near the territory, and to manufacture the wood into pulp and paper in the Province of Ontario in accordance with the terms and conditions of sale which can be had on application to the Department.

Parties making tender will be required to deposit with their tender a marked cheque payable to the Honourable the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario, for Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00), which amount will be forfeited in the event of their not entering into agreement to carry out conditions, etc. The said Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00) will be held by the Department until such time as the terms and conditions of the agreement to be entered into have been complied with and the said mill erected, equipped and in operation.

The said sum may then be applied in such amounts and at such times as the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines may direct in payment of accounts for dues or of any other obligation due the Crown until the whole sum has been applied.

The highest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

For particulars as to description of territory, capital to be invested, etc., apply to the undersigned.

G. E. FERGUSON,
Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines,
Toronto, September 18th, 1917.

N.B.—No unauthorized publication of this notice will be paid for.

Letter From Food Controller

To Lady Hendrie, the Members of the Women's Auxiliary of the Organization of Resources Committee and their co-workers throughout Ontario:

Great Britain and her European Allies look to Canada for food. The King has notified the Canadian Government that "Increased supplies are absolutely essential to the defeat of the enemy's devices and to a speedy and successful termination of the war."

Lord Rhonda, the British Food Controller, has told the Dominion that Great Britain looks to "The resources of Canada and to the indomitable energy of Canadians for an answer that will shatter Germany's threat of starvation."

There is a world famine of wheat and a world shortage of beef and bacon. These are the commodities most required for overseas. It is to ensure supplies of these foods and other non-perishable and easily storable commodities that every housewife is being asked to sign the Food Pledge. Canada has abundance of other foodstuffs. By reducing domestic consumption of wheat, beef and bacon and by using substitutes the housewives of the Dominion can give vital war service. They will give it once they realize the necessity. All that is asked at present is that they do not use beef and bacon on two days a week or at more than one meal on any other day, that they reduce their consumption of wheat bread by one-quarter and that they use perishable and non-exportable products to the greatest possible extent as substitutes for the staple foods required for export. The appeal to the housewives is contained in the one word substitute. When they realize the great need of the fighting forces and our Allies they will also save every ounce of food possible in order to release more for export. To do this means the complete conservation of our food supplies and the elimination of waste.

To yourself, to the members of your Committee and to your co-workers I wish to express my great appreciation of the services you are giving in circulating the Food Service Pledges by a house-to-house canvass and thus bringing home directly to the people the imperative need for substituting other foods for those required for export. Your task is an arduous one, but I am confident that the housewives of Ontario will respond splendidly to your war appeal.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) W. J. Hanna,
Food Controller

BEGIN HOT WATER DRINKING IF YOU DON'T FEEL RIGHT

Says glass of hot water with phosphate before breakfast washes out poisons.

If you wake up with a bad taste, bad breath and tongue is coated; if your head is dull or aching; if what you eat sours and forms gas and acid in stomach, or you are bilious, constipated, nervous, shallow and can't get feeling just right, begin inside bathing. Drink before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will flush the poisons and toxins from stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels and cleanse, sweeten and purify the entire alimentary tract. Do your inside bathing immediately upon arising in the morning to wash out of the system all the previous day's poisonous waste, gases and sour bile before putting more food into the stomach.

To feel like young folks feel; like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became loaded with body impurities, get from your pharmacist a quarter pound of limestone phosphate which is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except for a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant.

Just as soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and freshening, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. Men and women who are usually constipated, bilious, headachy or have any stomach ailments should begin this inside bathing before breakfast. They are assured they will become real cranks on the subject shortly.

Stirling W. I.

The Meeting of the W. I. was held on Friday November 2nd. with an attendance of 28.

It was decided that no delegate be sent to Toronto to attend annual convention. Ways and means of raising money for Red Cross purposes were discussed.

A paper was given by Mrs. E. Parker "A Woman's Possessions". Next a courtship contest in which all took part, then followed discussions over questions contained in the question drawer. The Box Packing Com. reported fifty boxes having been sent overseas twenty seven to France the rest to England. The name of D. McGregor was added to the list of Stirling boys to be remembered in this way. All members were asked to sew or knit for the soldiers at least one hour a day.

Programme Com. for next month will be Mrs. G. G. Thrasher and Mrs. C. Baker.

Tired, Nervous Housewife TOOK VINOL

Now She is Strong and Well

Berkeley, Cal.—"I was nervous, irritable, no appetite, could not sleep, and was always tired, so my housework was a great effort. After many other medicines had failed Vinol built me up and made me strong. I have a good appetite and sleep well. Every nervous, weak, ailing woman should try it."—Mrs. N. Edmunds, 2107 Dwight Way, Berkeley, Cal.

We ask every nervous, weak, run-down, ailing woman in this town to try this cod liver and iron tonic on our guarantee to return their money if it fails to help them.

Bank of Montreal Celebrated Centenary

November 3rd. was the hundredth anniversary of the day when the Bank of Montreal, the oldest Bank in British North America, and one of the largest in the British Empire, commenced to do business with the public.

The history of the Bank of Montreal may well be said to be the history of Canada, for so intimately has the bank been associated with the development of business in the Dominion that no important event in the past 100 years in this country has failed to have its effect on the bank's affairs.

From earliest days it has played an important part in financing of Government operations, at no era more important than in the present time of great internal war loans. Like the Dominion it came of humble beginnings and progressed to a mighty consummation.

The Bank of Montreal has sent to the front of its total male staff 75 per cent. of those of military age. Fifty-one have been killed, 107 are wounded, missing or prisoners of war. Several have been decorated by the King for conspicuous valor.

Substitute for Butter

An order-in-council has been passed, upon the recommendation of the Food Controller, allowing on and after Nov. 14 the manufacture and sale in Canada of oleomargarine and its important free of duty. Suspension of the prohibition of its manufacture, import or sale is a war measure only and will remain in force until the present abnormal conditions continue. The recommendation of the Food Controller was made because the high cost of production and the demand for export were putting the price of butter so high that many people were unable to purchase it.

The Military

Service Act, 1917

DON'T DELAY! Do It TODAY

THE MILITARY SERVICE ACT is passed; the Proclamation issued October 13th. It is now the bounden duty of every man in Class One to report for service or claim exemption. This includes all bachelors and widowers without children (not otherwise excepted) who were 20 years old on the 13th October, 1917, and whose 34th birthday did not occur before January 1st, 1917.

What To Do

Go to your Post Office and ask for the form for reporting for service or for claiming exemption. The form contains clear instructions for filling in. Do this not later than NOVEMBER 10th.

Beware of the Last Minute Rush

With so many thousands of reports and claims to be dealt with, the rush of Class One Men will grow heavier day by day. You will waste less of your time and serve your own best interests if you avoid the inevitable rush on the last days.

The law is being enforced with the Government and the People firmly behind it. Obey the law. Do it today.

Discovery at the Front in France Proves Close German Watch on Canada

Ottawa, Nov. 6th.—A newspaper found on a German prisoner, who was taken by the Canadians on the Western front recently showed how close a watch the Huns keep on Canadian affairs. The paper contained a news despatch, purporting to come from Ottawa, which told of the passing of the Military Service Act just two days after the Act was passed by Parliament here.

This little discovery is regarded here as a proof of the importance Germany places upon the military benefit to the Allies which will flow from the adoption by Canada of the Military Service Act. Experience has proved that Germany is a close observer of enemy countries and that every sign of strengthening or weakening is noted with the keenest interest by the Huns.

War Is Declared

No one can accuse the gentleman who in 1914, by his reckless automobile, selfishness and disregard of no one's life and limb by attacking without warning! Bulletin from the seat of war are unfortunately lacking.

"Several times recently the life of my wife and my own life have been placed in jeopardy by reckless automobiles, selfishness and disregard of no one's life and limb by their own. To all such miserable whelps I wish to say, with all the emphasis which the law will permit me to use in print, that I have provided myself with a forty-eight calibre revolver and have it loaded. When I drive out behind my old family mare, and any Kansas City dude or wooden-headed resident of this or any other community tries recklessly to run me down, I will, to the best of my ability, endeavour to perform his tires and his legs. This is no idle threat, as any one who tests the matter will find to his sorrow. Things have come to a pretty pass when a law-biding, tax-paying citizen cannot use the highway except at the risk of being killed by some lout with a 2 x 4 brain and a 10x12 gall. I mean business—J. Stephenson.

Let Us Eat Our Potatoes

Get the potato habit. That advice sounds somewhat like advising a person to carry coals to Newcastle, because for generations the practice in Canadian homes and places of public entertainment has been to serve potatoes at every meal of which meat or eggs or fish formed a part. We have the potato habit. The suggestion now is to give it free rein, eat more potatoes and, therefore, less wheat, less food of which grain is the base—and in this connection in this country grain always means wheat. Wheat, wheat flour and bread—these are some forms of food needed by our fighting men, by the Homeland, and by France, the best of whose laborers are fighting the Huns, and among other things, fighting them for the purpose of keeping them off this continent and out of this Dominion.

Maple Leaf Mission Band Concert

On Nov. 7th, the Maple Leaf Mission Band of the Presbyterian Church, held their Annual Entertainment. It started in the afternoon with a sale of useful things to wear, good things to eat and many things to satisfy the eye. In the evening the historical pageant "The Making of Canada's Flag" was given by members of the Band with the assistance of Miss Hay of Campbellford and some of the High School Cadets. The curtain rose displaying Britannia beautifully arrayed in historic armor, long flowing robe draped with flags and carrying in one hand the trident and in the other the flag of Great Britain. This part was played by Miss Agnes Moron who gave a sketch of the flag past and present, then taking her stand on an elevation at the back of the stage. Then followed Miss Bessie Henson with the cross of St. George, Miss Helen Mather with the cross of St. Andrew and Miss Rosina McGee with St. Patrick's cross, each telling what part their cross took in the making of that one England holds so dear. They were dressed to represent their different countries and retiring out at the feet of Britannia. Then entered Miss Canada (Miss Amy Morrison) in flowing robes beautifully decked with Maple leaves and followed by her pages, two small boys, Alex Morrison and Allen McKeljohn, in real page outfits who had no small part to play and who did it well. Miss Canada introduces a reason why Canada should have a place on the historic flag of Great Britain. She is followed by an old woman whom the pages announce as the Spirit of Long Ago and who represents the old U. E. Loyalist stock to whom Canada owes so much. Miss Marybell Morton plays this part and certainly looked as if she came out of the long ago. Another out of the past was called to say why Canada should have some fitting emblem on that flag when the pages called "Laura Secord" (Miss Marion Fargy). She told in a most acceptable manner the part played by her at that time. There is loud rapping and the page goes to see what this means return with some verses of the Messrs. McGee and Allen who tell of that trouble-some time.

Then follow the South African veterans and our own boys in Khaki. As they come on the stage they perform a drill with much credit, taking up their position on either side of Britannia as the other performers have before them. As a little surprise, now enters a Red Cross Nurse (Miss Annie Haggerty) whose pleadings for our emblem must have won Britannia for she at last consents and two little girls, Leatha Spry and Nellie Tulloch, sweetly dressed, enter carrying the emblem and guarding it well. Canada receives it fastening it securely to the flag. Britannia then dips the flag and sings, "There's a corner of the flag for you to hold", some of the characters coming forward and taking hold of the corners. Then they leave the stage in groups singing, "We'll never let the old Flag Fall". This along with Miss Hay's selections, Mr. Willoughby Sharpe's solos, Miss Morrison's recitation and the old fashioned song by Miss Freida Matthews and Master Merle Todd and the address of the Pres of the Band, Miss Hazel Matthews, assisted by the Ses. Miss Eva Green, went to make up a most enjoyable evening.

Presentation and Address to Miss Annie Green and Mr. Lyman Moon

Stirling, Oct. 22, 1917.

Dear Miss Green:—

We gather here in your old home on the eve of your proposed protracted visit to the South to wish you a safe journey and express to you something of our appreciation of the noble life you have lived in our midst.

For years this old Green Homestead has been synonymous with brightness and good cheer. Very few of us here have not enjoyed the generous hospitality, and we all know that you have seen one of the spirits that has contributed largely to its good cheer, and although the shadows have darkened and deepened around this home of late years, your invincible spirit has continued to radiate gladness and cheer and we would like you to know that the example you have set before us of self-sacrifice to duty has not been lost upon us.

There is nothing more beautiful in life than the devotion of a child to its parent, of a sister to sister, it burns out the selfishness, purges the dross, and leaves the fine gold of noble character. Yours has been a self-denying path but you have trodden it in love and you have your reward—the happy consciousness that you lost yourself in ministering to the wants of loved ones dependent upon you.

We shall miss you, your bright face, your gay and flashing talk, your fun, but the gain of those to whom you go but we are not gathered here to say good-bye forever. We believe that you are bound to this spot, this community by cords of remembrance that will draw you back when your tired and devoted spirit has time to recover. We will not say good-bye for we believe we will have you back in this community your own bright self again.

As a slight remembrance of friends who have appreciated your life among them, we ask you to accept this purse.

Mr. Moon was presented with a pair of gold cuff links and tie clip.

The address was read by Mr. L. McKeljohn and the presentation made by Miss Emma Kingston.

NOTICE

The annual meeting of the Anson Farmers' Club, will be held in the Club room, on Tuesday evening, Nov. 20th 1917, at 8 o'clock for the election of officers and any other business that may come before the club.

What Will Canada's Answer Be?

OVER in the sodden trenches amid the bursting shells and the roar of artillery where Canada's boys are fighting and dying.

—they are waiting for Canada's answer when the sale of Victory Bonds begins.

CANADA'S soldiers expect that we at home will put up the millions they need to keep on fighting, —the millions they must have to win Victory for freedom, home and Canada.

What answer will Canada make?

What answer will you make?

Shall it be said that Canada spares not her sons from the sacrifice of battle, yet withholds her dollars to give them victory?

Rather will it be said that Canada once more, for the fourth time in three years, cheerfully puts up her millions upon millions for the cause of freedom, righteousness and justice.

Canada's answer must be,

—that the Canadian hand to the plow of Victory holds steadfast and firm.

—that Canada is in deadly earnest when she says the "last man and the last dollar."

That is the answer Canada will give to our boys in the trenches, our kinsmen in Britain, and our Allies everywhere.

That is the answer we will give to the Huns who thought and said that Canada would desert the Empire before she would fight or pay.

Every bond you buy is an answer. Let the millions of answers from Canada's loyal men and women make a chorus of Victory to ring around the world.

WELLMAN'S W. I.

The Nov. meeting of the Wellman branch of the W. I. met at the home of Mrs. Chas. Dracup. There were 45 present.

The meeting took the form of a reception to the Stirling branch. A large number of ladies motored out and a most enjoyable afternoon was spent. The ladies of Stirling gave the programme which was very much enjoyed by all.

The first number after the address of the Pres. Mrs. J. Lagrow, was the "Battle of France" which was dramatically rendered by Mrs. McDonald. Miss Hay sang beautifully "Mother Macree". Mrs. Corrigan gave a well prepared paper on "Economy" which was very much in line with the present high cost of living, and gave many helpful hints on how to practise economy. Mrs. W. S. Martin and Mrs. Mather gave a piano duet.

Then the ladies put on a play "How the story grew" which was true to nature if a little exaggerated. The costumes and acting were worthy of a large audience. The Wellman's branch served lunch and Mrs. Dracup served candy. The members of Wellman's formed a circle around Stirling ladies and sang "For They are Jolly Good Fellows". After a social hour all departed feeling the time was well spent. The latch string is always out for Stirling.

"BELA"

Not big Jack nor Shand, perhaps, but Joy was not to be trusted. But surely they would see he was a prisoner. Something of the kind must have been passing through Bela's mind. Putting down her paddle for a moment, she threw back the blankets and drew out her gun. It had been carefully protected from the water. She laid it on top convenient to her hand and resumed.

"She's a good plucky one," thought Sam, grimly. "As for me, I play a pretty poor part in this affair, which way you look at it. A kind of dummy figure, it seems."

So low were its shores that the intake of the river was hidden from them until they were almost in it. Finally it opened up before them, with its wide reaches of sand stretching the sand, and a pine ridge rising behind the willows.

Here the wind whistled harmlessly over their heads, and the surface of the water was quiet except for the cat-paws darting hither and thither. Before entering the river Bela paused again, and bent her head to listen.

"Too late!" she said. "We can't pass!"

At the same moment the horses lurched from behind the willows a quarter of a mile across the sand. They had the ford!

"We can't pass," Bela repeated, and then with a gasp, in which was more of anger than fear, she added: "Am they got guns, too?"

CHAPTER XI.

Seeing the dugout, the men raised a shout and bore down upon them across the sand. Bela was not yet in the river. She swiftly brought the dugout around and paddled down the shore across the river from the men.

They, suspecting her of a design to land in this side, pulled up their horses, and returning to the ford, plucked across. Whereupon Bela coolly paddled out into the lake. By this maneuver she was enabled to get out of range of their guns before they got to the water's edge.

Holding her paddle, she turned to watch them. The sounds of their curses came down the wind. They were directed against Sam, not Bela. Sam smiled bitterly. "I catch it both ways," he muttered.

"You want them catch you?" asked Bela, with an odd look.

Sam scowled at her helplessly. She rested on her paddle, looking up and down the shore and out on the lake, manifestly debating with herself what to do. To Sam, there was no seeming of hopelessness. Finally Bela took up the paddle with an air of resolution.

"Now, what the devil are you going to do?" demanded Sam.

"We go to the island," she answered coolly.

"Island? Sam's heart sank. He saw his escape indefinitely postponed. To be kept prisoner on an island by a girl! Intolerably humiliating prospect! How would he ever be able to hold up his head among men afterward?"

"What the devil are you going to do?" he asked, angrily again.

"Let you think this will do you any good? What do you expect to gain by it?"

"What you want me to do?" asked Bela, suddenly, without looking at him.

"Land, and tell them the truth about what happened!"

"They too man," said Bela. "Shoot you before they listen. Not believe, anyway."

Sam could not deny the reasonableness of this. "You, damn!" he cried, impatiently. "You've got me into a nice mess! Are you crazy, or just bad? Is it your whole idea to make trouble between men? I've heard of women like that. One would think you wanted— Say! I'll be likely to thank you for this, won't I? The sight of you is hateful to me!"

Bela made her face like a wall, and looked steadily over his head at her course. There is no satisfaction in flinging words against a wall. Sam's angry voice dwindled to a mutter, then fell silent.

Ignoring his black looks, Bela hastened to collect dry sticks.

"I make fire and dry everything," she said.

Sam turned her and strode off around the beach.

"Take dry matches if you want fire," Bela called after him.

He would not give any sign that he heard.

He sat down on the other side of the island, as far away as he could get from her. Here he was full in the path of the driving, unweary wind, which further irritated his exasperated nerves.

He swore at Bela; he swore at the cold, at the wind, at the matches which went out one after another. He felt that all things animate and inanimate were leagued against him.

Finally, in the lee of some willows, he did get a fire going, and crouched in the smoke, choking and sneezing, as angry and unhappy a specimen of young manhood as might have been found in the world that morning.

Finally he began to dry out, and a measure of warmth returned to his limbs. He got his pipe going, and felt a little less like a nihilist.

Suddenly a new, ugly thought made him spring up. Suppose she took advantage of his absence to steal away and leave him marooned on the island? Anything might be expected of such a woman. He hastened back around the beach.

She had not gone. From a distance he saw her busy by a great fire, with the blankets and all the goods hanging around to dry.

He squatted behind a clump of willows, where he could watch her, himself unseen. Her attitude suggested that she was cooking something, and at the sight hunger struck through him like a knife. Not for worlds would he have asked her for anything to eat.

By and by she arose with the frying pan in her hand, and looked up and down the beach.

"Oh, Sam!" she called. "Come and eat!"

He laid low, sneering miserably; bent on cutting off his nose to spite his face. He wondered if there were any berries on the island. No, it was too early in the season for berries. Edible roots, maybe, but he wouldn't have known an edible root from any other kind.

After calling a while, Bela sat down in the sand and proceeded to satisfy her own appetite. Fresh pangs attacked Sam.

"Selfish creature!" he muttered. "That woman is bad through and through!"

She arose and, filling another plate, started toward him, carrying it. Her eyes were following his tracks in the sand. Sam instinctively sprang up and took to his heels.

His cheeks burned at the realization that she would presently discover that he had been sitting there watching her. He had not thought of the tell-tale sand. Wherever he might seek to hide, it would betray him.

He made a complete circuit of the little island, Bela presumably following him. The circumference of the beach was about half a mile. He ran as hard as he could, and presently discovered her ahead of him. He had almost overtaken her.

Thereafter he followed more slowly, keeping her in sight from the cover of the bushes. The secret consciousness that he was acting like a wild child did not make him any happier.

When he came around to Bela's fire again, seeing the dugout drawn up on the sand, his heart leaped at the chance of escape. If he could push off in it, without capsizing, surely, even with his lack of skill, he could drive before the wind. Or even if he could keep it floating under the lee of the island, he could dictate terms.

Man's Staff of Life is the whole wheat grain—not the white, starchy centre of the wheat—make no mistake about that—but be sure you get the whole wheat grain in a digestible form.

Shredded Wheat Biscuit contains all the tissue-building, energy-creating material in the whole wheat, steam-cooked, shredded and baked. A perfect food for the nourishment of the human body. A better balanced ration than meat, or eggs, or starchy vegetables, supplying the greatest amount of body-building nutriment at lowest cost. For breakfast with milk or cream, or for any meal with fruits. Made in Canada.

He waited, hidden, until she passed out of sight ahead, then ran to it. But even as he put his hands on the bow, she reappeared, running back. He fled in the other direction.

"The chase went on reversed. He no longer heard her coming behind him. Now he could not tell whether she was before or behind. He passed the dugout and the camp fire again. No sign of her there. Rounding the point beyond, he came to the place where he had made his own fire.

"Trying to keep eyes in every side of his head at once, he walked around a bush and almost collided with her. There she stood with dimpled face, like a child, behind the door.

She burst out laughing. Sam turned beet color, and scowling like a pirate, tried to carry it off with dignity.

"Don't be mad at me," she begged, struggling with her laughter. "You go fony, run away. Here's your breakfast. It's sold now. You can bring it to the fire."

There was bread and smoked fish on the plate she was offering. Sam, though his stomach cried out, turned his back on her.

"You got eat," said Bela. "Take it."

"Not from you," he returned, bitterly.

There was a silence. He could not see how she took it. Presently he heard her put the plate down on the sand and walk off. Her steps died away around the point.

Sam eyed the food ravenously and began to argue with himself. In the end, of course, he ate it, but it went down like lead.

He might get away on a raft, he thought. If the wind changed and blew in a direction favorable to carry him ashore. The trouble was the nights were so short. He might build his raft one night, and escape on it the next. How to keep her from finding it in the meantime offered a problem.

He began to look about in the interior of the island for suitable pieces of dry timber. He could use a blanket for a sail, he thought. This reminded him that his blankets were at least his own, and he determined to go and get them.

Rounding the point, he saw her sitting in the sand, making something with her hands. Though she must have heard him coming, she did not look up until he addressed her. Sam, in his desire to assert his manhood, swaggered a bit as he came up.

She raised a face as bland as a baby's. Sam was disconcerted. Desiring to pick a quarrel, he roughly drew her by the hair, and she turned toward where they hung and went on with her work. She was making a trolling spoon.

So much for their second encounter. Sam retired from it, feeling that he had come off no better than from the first.

Later, back on his own side, bored and irritated beyond endurance, he rolled up in his blankets and sought sleep in an escape from his own company.

He slept and dreamed. The roaring of the wind and the beating of the waves woke themselves into his fancies. He dreamed he was engulfed in a murky tempest. He was tossing wildly in a shell of a boat, without oars or rudder, and the waves were smiling fields appeared close at hand, only to be swallowed up in the murky again.

The noise was deafening. When he endeavored to shout for aid, his tongue was clamped to his jaw. Behind him was a terror worse than the storm, and he dared not look around.

It was a whole frame, he awoke. For a moment he lay blinking, still wrapped in the dream. At any rate, the storm was real. The bushes still thrashed, and the waves beat. Before him stretched the same wide waste of gray water spashed with white.

The sight of the sea brought back recollection that he had been looking at it all day, and he hated it. It was a fine thing a man should have no better control over his emotions while he slept.

Beside him on the sand lay another plate, with bread and fish. The fish, the time, half a pink salmon trout lately pulled from the water. Touching the plate, he found it warm.

Was it possible— Looking in the sand beside where he had lain he saw the rounded depression made by two knees, on the other side of him was a hand print. Sam scowled and violently scrubbed his lips with the back of his hand. Even so, he would not admit to himself that the hateful thing had happened.

Nevertheless he ate the fish. "I've got to keep my strength up. I'm going to help myself," he excused it.

The sun was hidden, but he knew by that instinct which serves us when we give up mechanical contrivances, that it was no more than noon. He of this hideous day remained to be gotten over.

He sat dwelling on his grievances until the top of his head seemed about to fly off. Then he set to work to search for and collect dry logs and twigs, and he managed to fire himself out.

It was dusk, which is to say nearly 10 o'clock, when he awoke from another nap. A silence, astonishing after the day-long uproar, greeted him. The wind had gone down with the sun, and the world was infolded in a delicious peace.

The lake was like a polished floor. Above the tree-tops behind him the sky was still bright, while over across the water sat Night in robes, awaiting her cue. On the island there was not a cheep nor a flutter to break the spell.

Sam wondered idly what had become of the food beside him as before. He forgot that there was food beside him as before. But it had been there some time. It was cold, and sand had drifted into the plate.

It was still bright, while over across the water sat Night in robes, awaiting her cue. On the island there was not a cheep nor a flutter to break the spell.

Sam wondered idly what had become of the food beside him as before. But it had been there some time. It was cold, and sand had drifted into the plate.

At last he heard the sound which had awakened him to go to sleep. It was the air as the first breath of dawn. Sam's breast was like wax to music.

Without thinking what he was doing, he kicked himself free of the blankets, and he saw with a start that there was food beside him as before. But it had been there some time. It was cold, and sand had drifted into the plate.

He did not instantly recognize the source of the music. It might have been the song of a twilight bird, a thrush, a mockingbird. He forgot for the moment that there was no song-birds so far north.

Presently he knew it for the voice of a woman singing softly, and a good way off—Bela! Still he did not stop.

"I guess I can listen to her sing without giving anything away," he told himself. But his breast was dangerously reduced by the sweetness of the sound.

As he drew closer the detached notes associated themselves into a regular air. It had nothing in common with the rude, strident chants of the Indians that he had heard on the rivers. It was like a bird's song, but with a wild, irregular quality different from our airs. It was mournful, sweet, and artless, and it made his heart swell in his breast.

As he progressed around the beach he saw her fire. It was dark enough now for the blaze to shine. Drawing still closer, he saw her beside it, and forgot, remembering his injuries—but the song drew him still.

He began to listen for the words. Suddenly he recognized it—one of the loveliest of old English songs. Evidently it had been transmitted from ear to ear until it had acquired the character of a new race of singers.

He progressed from bush to bush. He wanted to have anything to do with her, he would have said, but she could sing. He came to a final stop only a few yards away, and watched her through the leaves with burning eyes. She was in her favorite attitude, sitting on her heels, her strong young back curving in to her awaying waist.

Her hair fell about, fell around her in shuffling masses like smoke. While she sang she combed it with long strokes, holding her head now on this side, now on that, and ever revealing a lovelier pose of her round arms. The half light lent her an unearthly beauty.

The sight was no less affecting than the sound. A great pain filled Sam's breast, and the old inward struggle dragged him back and forth. She was at once so desirable and so hateful in his eyes. It was the cry of bewildered youth: "What right has anything so bad to be beautiful!"

No doubt of her badness occurred to him. Had she not ruined his chances in that country? The old antagonism was there, the readiness of mutual fear. She had become the immortal elven in Sam's eyes, and he was fighting to save his soul. But she was beautiful enough to make a man wish to be damned.

She came to the end of her song, and presently another, a more rollicking air, still charged with witfulness. Who had taught her these hushed, thrilling tones? Sam recognized this air, too, and thought of the mother who had sung it to him years ago.

It was "Twickenham Ferry." Why that of all songs? he wondered rebelliously. It was not fair that she should be armed thus to seek out the weakest joints in his armor.

The first to take the song with his own mouth became more than he could bear. The struggle was almost over when she paused and bent her head to listen, and looked up and down the beach.

It broke the spell.

"She's just trying to bring you to her!" Sam told himself, against that "That's your hair is down and all. And you're falling for it, you fool!" He turned and fled back around the beach.

"The 1500-year-old life-and-death struggle with the races which surrounds them from the north, west and south, with a near-burial within the Austrian empire for the last three centuries, has failed to destroy or break the spirit of the little nation of Czechs or Slovaks."

"The Czechs are now more numerous, more accomplished, more patriotic than ever before, and the day is inevitably approaching when the shackles will fall and the nation take its place again at the council of free nations."

"The Czechs are the westernmost branch of the Slavs, their names being derived, according to tradition, from that of a noted ancestral chief. The term Bohemia was applied to the country probably during the Roman times and was derived, like that of Bavaria, from the Boli, who for some time before the Christian era occupied or claimed parts of these regions."

"Nature has favored Bohemia perhaps more than any other part of Europe. Its soil is so fertile and climate so favorable that more than half of the country is cultivated and produces richly. In its mountains almost every useful metal and mineral, except salt, is to be found. The geographical center of the European continent, equally distant from the Baltic, Adriatic and North Seas, and though inclosed by mountains, is so easily accessible, because of the valleys of the Danube and the Elbe rivers, that it served as an avenue for marauding hordes."

"Besides Bohemia the Czechs occupy Moravia and adjacent territory in Silesia. The Slovaks, who show merely dialect differences from the Czechs, extend from Moravia eastward over most of northern Hungary."

"The Czechs are a musical, loving song, poetry, art, nature, fellowship, the other sex. He is an intent thinker and restless seeker of truth, of learning, but not an schemer. He is ambitious and covetous of freedom in the broadest sense, but is not prone to domineering, or overbearing, power by force."

"He is a religious man, but his nature, he ardently searches for God and is inclined to be deeply religious, but is impatient of dogma, as of all other undue restraint. He may be opinionated, stubborn, but is ready to accept facts and recognize true superstition. He is easily hurt and does not forget the injury; will fight, but is not lastingly revengeful or vicious. He is not cold, calculating, thin-lipped, nor again as inflammable as the Pole or the southern Slav, but sympathetic and full of sympathy and through this open open to imposition."

"His endurance and bravery in war for a cause which he has approved were proverbial, as was also his hospitality in peace."

"He is a highly capable in language, science, literature and technical education, and is inventive as well as industrial, but not commercial, imaginative, artistic, creative, rather than really frigidly practical. Inclined at all times to melancholy, pessimism, he is yet, at heart, cheerful, buoyant, optimistic, hopeful—hopeful not of possessions, however, but of human happiness, and of the freedom and future golden age of not merely their own, but all people."

"The Czechs and Slovaks in Austria-Hungary felt only under compulsion; their unwilling regiments were decimated; their political and national leaders fell the Austrian and Hungarian prisons. Thousands of Bohemian and Slovak volunteers are fighting with distinction under the banner of France and Great Britain, and there are whole regiments of them attached to the Russian army."

"Here in the United States the very word Austria sounds strange and unfamiliar to the Bohemian. They have found their permanent home and while hoping and even working for the eventual freedom of Bohemia, and proud of their descent from the Czech people, they are citizens, or if not yet citizens, all loyal Americans."

"YOU ARE OLD, KAISER WILLIAM!"

(With appropriate apologies to the late Kaiser William, "You are old, Kaiser William," the Kaiser Prince said, "And you have done nothing about it. Yet now you incessantly prate about peace. Will the world understand the thing right?"

"When I started this war," he replied to his son, "I thought we were certain to win. But the terrible blunder you made at Verdun encouraged the allies like me."

"You are old," said the youth, "and I mentioned before. And he boasted of conquest for years. Yet now that you've gotten the world to talk peace with a voice full of tears."

Address and Presentation

The regular meeting of the Minto Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Wm. Donald on Wednesday, November 8th, 1917. There were 13 members present and a number of visitors. Mrs. Jas. Stout gave a paper entitled "Our Responsibilities as Women" which was enjoyed by all. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Jno. B. Hagerman.

At the close of the meeting a cut glass cream jug and sugar bowl was presented to Mrs. P. W. Hagerman, who is about to remove from our midst, and the following address read.

Harold, Nov. 8, 1917.

Dear Mrs. Hagerman:—

We the members of the Minto Women's Institute, learn with regret that you are soon to leave our neighborhood and remove to Peterboro, beg to take the present opportunity of expressing to you our appreciation of your efforts in behalf of our Institute.

At our inaugural meeting you were elected vice-president and later as president and it is largely through your untiring efforts that our organization is what it is to-day.

You have ever been ready to sacrifice your time, to give kindly advice, and generous assistance in every way to help us in carrying on any project we have in view, for the uplift of our community.

Your home has always been open to us and you have been lavish with hospitality to any one visiting our meetings and as a token of our esteem and as a souvenir of remembrance we ask you to accept this gift.

We hope that it may be a means of recalling to your mind pleasant remembrances of your sojourn in the Minto neighborhood and your association with the Minto Women's Institute and we assure you we shall always be interested in all that pertains to your prosperity and success, and wishing you happiness in your new home we are yours in best wishes.

Mrs. S. W. SINE

Mrs. Jno. B. HAGERMAN

Mrs. Hagerman replied suitably thanking them for their kindness and inviting them to her new home in Peterboro.

FATAL ACCIDENT

Robert Sprentall Instantly Killed at the Brighton Canning Co. Works

One of the most distressing accidents in the history of our village occurred at the Brighton Canning Co. Works last Tuesday evening just before 9 o'clock, when Robert Sprentall, of Brighton was instantly killed.

Deceased was very busy and much interested in a device for driving the steam from the building, and not waiting for the engine to be stopped he climbed up on a step ladder to take some measurements. Reaching over the shaft his loose sleeve caught on a set screw, and in an instant the unfortunate man was whirling around at the rate of 100 revolutions per minute. There was only fifteen inches space between the shaft and the joint above, and at every turn the body was threshed against the floor above. Naturally, the workman about were too horror-stricken for the moment to render any aid. The engine was quickly stopped and the body removed. On examination every bone in the body was said to have been broken, the clothing, with the exception of the boots, torn completely off.

Coroner Dure was summoned and after examination, the cause of death as told by those who were present, decided that an inquest was unnecessary. The body was removed to the undertaking establishment.

Shipment of Mr. B. E. Bruntell, and prepared for burial, which took place from his late residence, Prince Edward Street, on Thursday afternoon. A sad coincidence of Mr. Sprentall's death is that his son met death some years ago in almost the same manner. Besides his widow Mr. Sprentall leaves a family of grown up sons and daughters to all of whom sincere sympathy is extended. —Brighton Ensign.

to greater Motor Car Value

From the standpoint of dollar for dollar value there's not a car made which offers more for your money than the famous Chevrolet Four-Ninety A.

Before the Chevrolet was made in Canada, good cars were all high in price.

But our mammoth production and manufacturing efficiency enables us to sell the Chevrolet Four-Ninety A at a price much lower than its value when compared with other makes of cars.

With the surplus power developed by the famous valve-in-head motor the owner of a Four-Ninety A invariably is the "trail blazer."

Standard equipment includes speedometer, electric starting and lighting, ammeter, oil indicator light equipment, one man top, demountable rims, non-skid tires on rear wheels and many features usually looked for in cars much higher in price.

STOP CATARRH! OPEN NOSTRILS AND HEAD

Says Cream Applied in Nostrils Relieves Head-Colds at Once.

If your nostrils are clogged and your head is stuffed and you can't breathe freely because of a cold or catarrh, just get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm at any drug store. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic cream into your nostrils and let it penetrate through every air passage of your head, soothing and healing the inflamed, swollen mucous membrane and you get instant relief.

Ah! how good it feels. Your nostrils are open, your head is clear, no more hawking, snuffling, blowing; no more headaches, dryness or struggling for breath. Ely's Cream Balm is just what sufferers from head colds and catarrh need. It's a delight.

WARSHIPS IN THE HARBOR AIDED IN THE REVOLUTION

Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates Are In Full Control In Petrograd.

Kerensky Fled, But An Order Has Been Issued For His Arrest.

Petrograd again is in turmoil. The Provisional Government has been thrown out of power by the extreme Radicals, headed by Nikolai Leonid; Premier Kerensky has fled the capital; several of his Ministers have been placed under arrest, and the Winter Palace, the seat of the Government, has been bombarded by the guns of the cruiser Aurora and the St. Peter and St. Paul fortress and forced to capitulate to the revolutionists.

A Congress of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates of all Russia has convened in Petrograd, and was discussing the questions of organization of power, peace and war, and the formation of a constituent assembly. A delegation has been named by the congress to confer with other revolutionary and democratic organizations with a view to the initiating of peace negotiations for the purpose of taking steps to stop the bloodshed.

As yet the details of the disorders which followed the assumption of power by the Radical element are meagre, but it is known from its moorings in the Neva the cruiser Aurora fired shrapnel and solid shot against the Winter Palace for four hours, with the guns of the great fortress and machine guns stationed in front of the palace kept firing in accord with the shrapnel and solid shot. Deputies fighting also took place at various points inside the city, the revolutionists capturing points along the Nevsky Prospekt and various bridges over the Neva. It is possible that the casualties among the citizens were slight, as the Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates took precautions to warn the people to seek refuge in their homes.

Reports as to the whereabouts of Kerensky are various. Some of them say that he has sought safety in Moscow, while others assert that he has gone to the front in an endeavor to obtain the backing of the troops to forestall a debacle of his Government. Cossack regiments are being readied to have announced their readiness to support the Government on condition that no compromise with the revolutionists is made, but on the other hand, it is asserted that delegates from the Black and Baltic Sea fleets have declared themselves in favor of the Radicals.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

Petrograd Cable.—Another revolution has broken out. Extremists, led by Leonid, have wrested the reins of power from Premier Kerensky and the latter is reported to be fleeing to Moscow.

A Congress of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates of all Russia has convened in Petrograd and will discuss the questions of organization of power, peace and war, and the formation of a constituent assembly. A delegation has been named by the congress to confer with other revolutionary and democratic organizations with a view to initiating peace negotiations for the purpose of "taking steps to stop the bloodshed."

WOMAN'S BATTALION SURRIN-

DER.

Government forces holding the Winter Palace were compelled to capitulate early this morning under the fire of the cruiser Aurora and the cannon of the St. Peter and St. Paul fortress across the Neva River. At 2 o'clock this morning the Woman's Battalion, which had been defending the Winter Palace, surrendered.

The Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates are in complete control of the city.

Premier Kerensky was reported last night at Luga, 85 miles southwest of Petrograd.

Late yesterday evening, after the Government forces had been driven into the Winter Palace, the palace was besieged and a lively fire of machine guns and rifle began. The cruiser Aurora, which was moored at the Nicolai Bridge, moved up within range, firing shrapnel. Meanwhile the guns of the St. Peter and St. Paul fortress opened fire. The palace stood out under the glare of the searchlights of the cruiser and offered a good target for the guns. The defenders held out for four hours, replying as best they could with machine guns and rifles.

CITIZENS ARE PROTECTED.

There was spasmodic firing in other parts of the city, but the Workmen's and Soldiers' troops took every means to protect the citizens, who were ordered to their quarters. The bridges and the Nicolai Prospekt, which early in the afternoon were in the hands of the Government forces, were captured and held during the night by the Workmen's and Soldiers' troops.

The battle at the palace, which began shortly after six o'clock, was a spectacular one, armed cars of the revolutionaries swinging into action in front of the palace gates, while flashes from the Neva were followed by the explosion of shells from the guns of the Aurora.

The Russian cruiser Aurora is a vessel of 6,780 tons, and has a complement of 672 men. She was built in 1906 and carries ten 6-inch guns, twenty 12-pounders and eight small guns. She also is armed with two torpedo tubes.

"DISORDER" WITHOUT BLOODSHED

The military revolutionary committee of the Central Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates to a clamation to the army committees and to all Soldiers' and Workmen's Councils, says: "We have deposed without bloodshed the Government which rose against the revolution."

It proclaims the authority of the Military Revolutionary Committee, and says that the officers who do not openly join the movement must immediately be arrested.

Uncertain military detachments, the proclamation adds, must not be permitted to leave the front for Petrograd. Where persuasion fails, the statement says, force must be used without mercy.

The names of the Cabinet Ministers in the Kerensky Government arrested are as follows: I. Konovaloff, Minister of Trade and Industry; M. Kishkin, Minister of Public Welfare; M. I. Terestchenko; Minister of Foreign Affairs; M. Malyantovitch, Minister of Justice, and M. Nikitin, Minister of the Interior.

KERENSKY TO THE FRONT?

The city presented a normal aspect today. Even the noon-day bands accompanying the guard of relief under the previous administration continued its function. There were the customary lines in front of the provision stores, and children played in the parks and gardens. There was even a notable lessening of the patrols, only a few armed soldiers and sailors moving about the streets.

At the Winter Palace yesterday afternoon it was said that Premier Kerensky had gone to the front, delegating his authority to M. Kishkin, Minister of Public Welfare.

ARMISTICE DEMANDED.

"The Petrograd Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates held a meeting this afternoon, at which M. Trotsky made his declaration that the Government no longer existed, that some of the Ministers had been arrested, and that the preliminary Parliament had been dissolved.

Nikolai Leonid, who received prolonged cheers, outlined the three problems now before the Russian democracy: First, immediate conclusion of the war, for immediate peace; second, the handing over of the land to the peasants; third, settlement of the economic crisis.

"At the close of the sitting a declaration was read from the representative of the Democratic Minimalist party of the Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates stating that the party disapproved of the declaration, and withdrew from the Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates."

MAXIMALIST MANIFESTO.

A wireless despatch to-day from Petrograd says that the Council has announced that the split in the Council has been healed and that a call has been sent out for a delegate from each 25,000 of the population to express the will of the Russian army.

The Military Revolutionary Committee of the Central Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates, in a proclamation to the army committees and to all Soldiers' and Workmen's councils, says: "We have deposed without bloodshed the Government which rose against the revolution." It proclaims the authority of the Military Revolutionary Committee, and says that the officers who do not openly join the movement must immediately be arrested.

Uncertain military detachments, the proclamation adds, must not be permitted to leave the front for Petrograd. Where persuasion fails force must be used without mercy.

The Maximalist movement (towards solving authority, rumors of which had been agitating the public mind ever since the formation of the last coalition Cabinet, culminated last night when without disorder, Maximalist forces took possession of the Telegraph office and the Petrograd Telegraph Agency. Orders issued by the Government for the opening of the spans of the bridges across the Neva river were over-ruled by the Military Committee of the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates. Communication was restored after several hours of interruption. No where did the Maximalists meet with serious opposition.

PROGRAMME OUTLINED.

The General Congress of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates of all Russia was convened here last night with a large attendance. The chairman declared that the time was not propitious for political speeches, and the order of business of the congress approved was as follows: First, organization of power; second, peace and war; third, a constituent assembly.

The officers elected comprise fourteen Maximalists, including Nikolai Leonid, the Radical Socialist leader, and M. Zinovief, an associate of Leonid, and Leon Trotsky, president of the Central Executive Committee of the Petrograd Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates. In addition several revolutionary Socialists were appointed.

A delegation was named to initiate peace negotiations with the other revolutionary and democratic bodies "with a view to taking steps to stop bloodshed."

The official news agency to-day made public the following statement:

"The Congress of the Councils of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates of all Russia, which opened last evening, issued this morning the three following proclamations:

KERENSKY'S ARREST ORDERED.

"To all provincial Councils of Workmen's and Soldiers' and Peasants' Delegates: All power lies in the hands of the Councils of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates. The Government commissaries are relieved of their functions. Presidents of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates are to communicate direct with the revolutionary committees. All members of agricultural committees who have been arrested are to be set at liberty immediately and the commissaries who arrested them are in turn to be arrested."

The second proclamation reads as follows:

"The death penalty re-established at the front by Premier Kerensky is abolished and replaced by freedom of political propaganda has been established at the front. All revolutionary soldiers and officers who have been arrested for complicity in so-called political crimes are to be set at liberty immediately."

Third proclamation says:

"Former Ministers Konovaloff, Kishkin, Terestchenko, Malyantovitch, Nikitin and others have been arrested by the Revolutionary Committee. M. Kerensky has taken flight and all military bodies have been empowered to take all possible measures to arrest Kerensky and bring him back to Petrograd. All complicity with Kerensky will be dealt with as high treason."

Nikolai Leonid was introduced by Trotsky as "an old, old comrade, whom we welcome back."

SKETCH OF TROTSKY.

New York Report.—Leon Trotsky, president of the Central Executive Committee of the Petrograd Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates, was the editor for a few months of this year of the Novy Mir (New Russian) revolutionary paper published in this city. He arrived in New York January 15 last from Spain, and remained here until the overthrow of the Emperor, when he returned to Russia. While here he was prominent in radical circles on the East Side.

Period who knew him in this city declare that he established a paper in Russia more than fifteen years ago, and because of his revolutionary tendencies was often in jail. He was sent to Siberia in 1905 and in 1912 for participation in revolutionary plots. After his release he started to start a newspaper, but when the war broke out he was ordered to leave.

He lived a short time in Switzerland, then went to Paris and started a newspaper advocating peace. The Russian Ambassador had his paper suppressed and he fled to Spain, where he was completely arrested. At his release he came to the United States with his wife and two sons. The immigration authorities permitted him to land when he declared that he was not a revolutionist, but a disciple of Karl Marx, and desired to bring concord among the nations.

BRITISH GAINS IN MESOPOTAMIA

Heavy Fighting Ends in Rout of the Turks.

London Cable.—Teluk, on the Tigris River, in Mesopotamia, 90 miles north-west of Bagdad, was occupied by the British on Nov. 6th, the war office announced to-day.

The text of the statement reads: "Following the successful action fought near Dap on Nov. 2nd, our troops advanced further up the Tigris and on Nov. 5th captured the entrenched position covering Teluk. Under the fire of our artillery our troops with great gallantry crossed 1,200 yards of open country and the Indian Sikh and rifle regiments, pressing home the attack, captured the first two lines of the enemy's trenches, inflicting heavy casualties. The trenches were consolidated, and a Turkish counter-attack proved unsuccessful.

"In the meantime the cavalry attacked the enemy's right flank, and our artillery on the left bank of the Tigris obtained good targets on the Turkish communications leading to the north."

In the afternoon our troops attacked again and carried further lines of trenches with heavy losses to the Turks. In this attack our cavalry on the left flank took a prominent part. British and Indian cavalry, supported by a number of retraining troops. The fighting continued until nightfall, when the Turks retreated hurriedly under cover of darkness, burning some of their stores and blowing up three ammunition dumps. We occupied Teluk on the morning of November 6th.

The battlefield has not been cleared in time to report, but 132 wounded prisoners have been brought in. Much material has been captured, including gun and rifle ammunition, rifles, boats, bridging material and two aeroplanes.

AN EMDEN AIDE

Was Commander of the Marie, Sunk in Cattegat.

Amsterdam Cable.—Weza Zellung of Bremen says Capt. Lauterbach, commander of the German auxiliary cruiser Marie, which was sunk by British warships in the Cattegat last week, was commanded by a officer which accompanied the famous German raider Emden at the outbreak of the war. Lauterbach was captured at the time the Emden was destroyed on Cocos Island in the Pacific by the Australian cruiser Sydney, but succeeded with a number of other Germans in escaping from an internment camp in Singapore and returned to Germany by way of the Philippines, Japan and America.

FULL SUPPORT FOR ITALIANS FROM ALLIES

Alarmist Statement Sent Out is Absolutely Uncalled For.

STILL RETIRING

Teutonic Forces Occupying Territory in the Friulian Plains.

London Cable.—The following official announcement was issued to-night:

"A statement from a correspondent of the Associated Press at Italian headquarters appeared in the British press to-day. This statement set out to remind the allies that something more than assurances were needed for getting reinforcements in men and munitions to the threatened Italian lines, and purported to reflect the feeling of the Italians, who were represented as distrusting the allied efforts to help them. It was also stated that the enemy masses were so overwhelming that nothing but effective reinforcements will turn the tide."

"This alarmist statement is absolutely uncalled for, and is calculated to do grave harm by suggesting that the seriousness of the military situation in Italy is not appreciated by the allies, and that the latter are not giving the support she requires. There is no truth whatever in these assertions. The statement that the enemy masses are overwhelming is an absurd exaggeration."

The large units of the Italians are falling back without molestation, according to the Rome official communication, but considerable fighting has taken place in the hills of Vittorio and at other points in the north."

The Berlin War Office says on the middle Tagliamento River Italian troops who were still standing out against the invaders were captured. A general and 17,000 additional Italian troops are reported to have been captured, bringing the total prisoners since the retreat from the Isonzo began to more than 250,000, according to Berlin. It is asserted also that in excess of 2,300 guns have fallen into the hands of the Teutonic allies.

THE ITALIAN OFFICIAL.

The text of the Italian statement reads: "During yesterday we continued the withdrawal of our line. The larger units have retired without being molested by the enemy."

Numerous engagements took place between the hills of Vittorio and the confluence of the Montebello, and the Livorno, in the course of which our brave covering troops succeeded in detaining the enemy's advance. "In spite of strong resistance on the part of hostile machines, our aviators renewed their bombardments of enemy troops along the Tagliamento. Five enemy aeroplanes were brought down."

THE GERMAN OFFICIAL.

The text of the German War Office report reads:

"Italian front: Our detachments, advancing on the mountain roads, have broken the resistance of the enemy rear guard. By an outflanking movement our attack from the columns cut off the retreat of the enemy troops still holding out on the middle Tagliamento, between Tolmezzo and Gemona, and on permanent fortified works of Montebello, Silemeo."

"Up to the present, 17,000 Italians, among them general, with eighty guns, have been captured."

"In the plain, fighting has developed along the Livorno River. By a vigorous advance German and Austro-Hungarian divisions, in spite of destroyed bridges, have forced the crossing and have thrown the enemy back westward."

"The total number of prisoners captured has now been increased to more than 250,000, and the booty in guns to more than 2,300."

TEUTONS IN FRIULI.

Italian Army Headquarters, Cable.—The bulk of the Austro-German invading forces to-day presents a main frontage of about 35 miles back of and along the Tagliamento River, with reconnaissance parties thrust forward eight or ten miles west of the river for the purpose of feeling for the points of least resistance. This is producing detached engagements, but no battle in force has yet occurred.

The Livorno River, to which the Italian withdrawal is now progressing, is only one of a series of successive defense parallels. The Italian army still has in reserve large bodies of troops, which, however, naturally feel the effects produced by the recent retreat on their main body. Large reinforcements at this moment, therefore, would render invaluable assistance, in the opinion of the military authorities.

The enemy territorial occupation in Eastern Friuli presents a distinct aspect far beyond the military purpose, and, therefore, have been the Northern Teutonic and the Southern Latin races. The Austro-Germans recognize the Alpine boundary, except for Trent and Trieste.

Now, for the first time, the Teutonic forces are occupying territory in the Friulian Plains, which are the easternmost part of Venetia and are long possession of the Latins. Such an invasion strikes at the very heart of the people's nationality, and also thrusts a Teutonic wedge southwards into the Adriatic. This brings up the grave question of whether Germany will finally secure territorial lodgment with ports and naval bases on the Adriatic, thus realizing her aim to become a Mediterranean power, as well as a North Sea power, unless the Allies turn them back from the Friulian Plains. This would seem to be a warning to the Allies that no time is to be lost in reinforcing, concentrating and co-ordinating.

COAL FOR ONTARIO.

A Better Supply to Follow New York Conference.

Ottawa Report.—The officers of the Fuel Controller's department have returned from New York, where a conference was held with the chief officials of the railways handling anthracite coal. There were present on behalf of Canada, C. A. Magrath, fuel controller; W. Peterson, deputy controller; and C. P. MacIver, who represents the Canadian fuel controller in the United States.

The meeting was held as a result of the action recently taken by Dr. Garfield, United States fuel administrator, limiting coal shipments to Canada and placing such shipments on a permanent system. The question of rushing supplies of anthracite coal to the smaller centers of the coal fields of Ontario and of promoting the shipments for the Winnipeg market were taken up. The anthracite operators offered every assistance to the Canadian fuel controller, and it is expected that as a result of the conference the distribution of anthracite coal will be conducted on a more satisfactory and systematic basis than hitherto.

TURKS RETIRING FROM ABOUT GAZA

British Forces Continue to Gain in Palestine.

General Withdrawal of Forces Pointed To.

London Cable.—There are indications of a general retirement northward by the Turkish forces in Palestine.

The British pushed beyond Gaza, on the right and left, the advance penetrating as far as the mouth of the Wadi-El, eight miles north of the original British line. The British captures of prisoners, guns and stores are considerable in volume.

Gen. Allenby, in command, reports as follows: "About midnight Turkish troops assaulted the British works south of Gaza and captured them, finding them lightly held. "The advance was continued on the right to Alimuntar, the hill dominating the town to the south and southeast; on the left to the Sheikh Redman fortifications, about a mile outside the town on the north. During the day, we pushed forward through the Wadi and advanced to the mouth of the Wadi-El, eight miles north of our original line."

"Our forces from Sheri'Ah also successfully continued their advance to the northwest. "In the area east of Gaza the Turks still occupy some trenches, but there are indications of a general retirement northward."

"Our aeroplanes inflicted losses on the Turks retiring and on concentrations at railheads. On our right, about Khuwelth, the enemy has not renewed his counter-attacks."

Gen. Allenby reports that there were considerable captures of prisoners, guns, ammunition and stores, but no details are yet available.

HUNS KILLED BY OWN GUNS

Many Shot Down While in British Hands.

Foe Ran More Fought Less, at Passchendaele.

London Cable.—The Reuter correspondent at the British front says:

About four hundred prisoners were taken at Passchendaele. A considerable number were killed by the fire of their own guns as they were being brought back, whether by accident or design has not been learned, otherwise the total would have been much higher.

The order attributed to von Hindenburg that if Passchendaele was taken it must be retaken has not borne fruit, by nightfall the Canadians were reported well dug in around the half-moon of captured ground, and plentifully supplied with machine guns.

The principal feature of the fighting is the enemy's persistent refusal to allow our men to come to close quarters. Their resistance consisted mainly of long-range machine-gun fire, which owing to the unfavorable weather conditions was not very effective.

Our walking wounded agree that the Hun did more running this battle than usual.

Our line has been carried nearly due north and south along the Broodisden in very high observation over the plains of Belgium.

It's a good thing to keep your balance, in spite of the fact that some people fall in love, and others just tumble into luck.

KORNILOFF MAY BE MAN OF THE HOUR

Leader of Cossacks Might Restore Government in Russia.

NOT ALL LOST

Germans Will Still Have to Maintain a Strong Force.

Washington, D. C. Report.—Discouragement felt here over the news of the overthrow of the Kerensky Government at Petrograd is tempered by the hope that the extreme Radicals who have seized the capital may not be able to extend their control over the army or any considerable part of the country. However, it is feared that much blood must be shed and the nation further demoralized before any power rises above the turmoil strong enough to control the situation.

Both the Russian Department and the Russian Embassy in London are without official advice to-night. Consequently there was no official comment on the situation. Informally it was pointed out that with the telegraph lines at Petrograd in the hands of the Radicals it would be difficult to learn the true state of affairs, although there was no disposition to question the collapse of the Provisional Government's power in the capital.

Whether the situation of the channels of information will extend to interference with despatches which Ambassador Francis and other representatives undoubtedly are seeking to send their Governments is not known. The suggestion that the new power at Petrograd may be short-lived is based to an extent upon the fact that the Cossacks, the base of the military forces in Russia, though extremely jealous of their own local liberties, always have been ready to support a strong conservative Government. It was conceived in some quarters that if Kerensky, fleeing from the capital, should be able to bring to his support Gen. Korniloff, the strong man of the Russian army, with his Cossack backers, he might set up a new and stronger Government at Moscow, where he could count upon the loyalty of the majority of the large population of that ancient capital.

Obstacles to the success of such a plan is found in the possibility that Korniloff, embittered by the treatment he had received at the hands of Kerensky, when the latter was vacillating between the Radicals and the Conservatives, might refuse to risk his fate further in such an uncertain leader. Some officials think this compromising by Kerensky was largely responsible for his disaster.

In view of the intensity of the democratic spirit developed in Russia, since the overthrow of the Czar, it is regarded here as difficult to conceive of the appearance of any other form of government than a republic, yet in diplomatic circles, where the peculiar temperament of the masses is well understood, the opinion is expressed that out of sheer necessity the majority of the people might suddenly decide to confine their destinies in a dictator, thereby following in the footsteps of the Radicals in the French revolution.

Recalling that even the Bolsheviks have declared their opposition to a "dictatorship," which is opposed to the German idea, it is believed to be hardly possible that on this basis Germany could entertain proposals from the Maximalists for either a peace or an armistice.

It is pointed out, too, that even if the Germans did make a separate peace with the Maximalists, the fact that this party represents only a small section of the Russian people would make it necessary for the Central Powers to continue to maintain a large military force at the border to guard against an offensive from the other element.

Therefore, it is hoped that the military situation will not change materially for the worse for the result of these latest developments. A considerable portion of the Russian army can be kept in the trenches, the advent of winter troops operate to prevent the German troops who face them from taking advantage of any temporary weakness to start an offensive.

GERMANY NEAR RUIN.

Great Shipping Head Tells the Kaiser.

Copenhagen Cable.—There is a well-authenticated story of a conference between Emperor William, Field Marshal von Hindenburg, General von Ludendorff, and Albert Ballin, head of the Hamburg-American line, during last summer, in which the Hamburg shipping magnate, after listening to the views given by the military leaders, told the Emperor that "every extra month of the war meant an additional year in settling out of the slough of the ruin after the war." He declared he did not expect to live to see Germany out of her difficulties.

"I say," said the official boy to the emperor, "I think the nation ought to give me a dollar this week, but I suppose you won't." "What for?" I asked the emperor. "For everything, I suppose," he answered. "For everything, I suppose," he answered. "For everything, I suppose," he answered.

COBDEN'S PATCHWORK QUILT

By AUGUSTUS BRIDLE

Cobden—somewhere in Canada—is going to have a patchwork quilt the like of which never was known. There have been various sorts of patchwork quilts in this country. Cobden—wherever it is—will have such a quilt as any Premier or Lieutenant-Governor would be proud to sleep under, and if ever he will want to take a snip off the corner for a good-luck souvenir.

It's all because Cobden is enough like a thousand other such farming communities to want to do something distinctive on its own hook. Maybe the original idea of this coverlet came from some bright woman who has a home fire to keep burning for a boy at the front. Very likely. Well, whoever she is, she deserves the thanks, not only of Cobden, but of all who read this.

A Simple Record

Cobden's patchwork quilt is going to be an honor roll. Not merely of people who had each ten cents or something like it in their jeans and for the sake of seeing their names on the quilt wrote their autographs for the women to work them in with silk and wool. No, it's like that, but different.

Cobden's patchwork quilt will be a thing of great and lasting sentiment. It will be the mute story of a hundred high-minded intentions; the simple record in a hundred styles of handwriting, of men and women who knew a good thing when they saw it, and when the chance came to do something worth putting on permanent record—did it.

Cobden's patchwork quilt will be a perfect democracy. It will be a plebiscite; a sort of referendum. Some day a visiting orator will get hold of it and deliver an oration on that quilt. It will go down to history with the old flag that Stonewall Jackson saw flapping out of the window, or Joseph's coat of many colors, or the suit of armor hanging in the Abbey.

Cobden's patchwork quilt will be shown with pride to all the boys and girls of that community for a hundred years. If ever Cobden gets a museum that quilt will be the first thing to go into it, because it will express with marvelous eloquence the story of a united effort of Cobden in a common and glorious cause.

Cobden's patchwork quilt will be sold at auction. Somebody will bid a fancy sum for it. He will be as proud as Lucifer and as pleased as Punch when he gets it. And if somebody stamps him he will do like Mark Twain did with the red bathrobe in the streets of Coventry, wear it on the street in broad daylight.

Why? Because Cobden's patchwork quilt is to contain the autographs of one hundred people each of whom in the neighborhood of Cobden signed up for a Canada's Victory Bond.

Now you have the whole story of Cobden's Patchwork Quilt.

Generosity Appreciated

The Trustees of the National Sanitarium Association have established an Endowed Red at the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives to run a period of one year, to be known as the Sault St. Marie Red.

This is in appreciation of the splendid response given to the appeal of Field Secretary, Mr. J. H. Dyke, during his recent lecture in this town. $327.27 was the amount of cash remitted with a possibility of more to follow.

There are nearly 300 patients now in residence at the Muskoka Free Hospital, most of whom are unable to pay anything towards their own maintenance. Such generous assistance as that of the kindly citizens of Sault Ste. Marie goes far towards helping the work of caring for these poor sufferers.

Canada's Victory Loan

$150,000,000 5 1/2% Gold Bonds

Bearing interest from December 1st, 1917, and offered in three maturities, the choice of which is optional with the subscriber, as follows:

5 year Bonds due December 1st, 1922
10 year Bonds due December 1st, 1927
20 year Bonds due December 1st, 1937

This Loan is authorized under Act of the Parliament of Canada, and both principal and interest are a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The amount of this loan is $150,000,000, exclusive of the amount (if any) paid by the surrender of bonds of previous issues. The Minister of Finance, however, reserves the right to allot the whole or any part of the amount subscribed in excess of $150,000,000.

The Proceeds of this Loan will be used for War purposes only, and will be spent wholly in Canada.

Principal and interest payable in Gold

Denominations: $50, $100, $500 and $1,000

Subscriptions must be in sums of $50 or multiples thereof.

Principal payable without charge at the Office of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General at Ottawa, or at the Office of the Assistant Receiver General at Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary and Victoria.

Interest payable, without charge, half-yearly, June 1st and December 1st, at any branch in Canada of any Chartered Bank.

Bearer or Registered Bonds

Bonds may be registered as to principal or as to principal and interest.

Script certificates, non-negotiable, or payable to bearer, in accordance with the choice of the applicant for registered or bearer bonds, will be issued after allotment in exchange for provisional receipts. When these script certificates have been paid in full, and payment endorsed thereon by the bank receiving the money they may be exchanged for bonds, when prepared, with coupons attached, payable to bearer, or registered as to principal, or for fully registered bonds when prepared, without coupons, in accordance with the application.

Delivery of interim certificates and of definitive bonds will be made through the Chartered Banks.

Bearer bonds with coupons will be issued in denominations of $50, $100, $500, and $1,000, and may be registered as to principal only. Fully registered bonds, the interest on which is paid direct to the owner by Government cheque, will be issued in denominations of $1,000, $5,000, or any authorized multiples of $5,000.

Subject to the payment of 25 cents for each new bond issued, holders of fully registered bonds without coupons, will have the right to convert into bonds of the denomination of $1,000 with coupons, and holders of bonds with coupons will have the right to convert into fully registered bonds of authorized denominations without coupons, at any time, on application to the Minister of Finance.

Surrender of Bonds

Holders of Dominion of Canada Debenture Stock, due October 1st, 1919, and bonds of the three preceding Dominion of Canada War Loan Issues, have the privilege of surrendering their bonds in part payment for subscriptions to bonds of this issue, under the following conditions:

Debenture Stock, due October 1st, 1919, at Par and Accrued Interest.
War Loan Bonds, due December 1st, 1922, at 97 1/2% and Accrued Interest.
(The above will be accepted in part payment for bonds of any of the three maturities of this issue.)
War Loan Bonds, due October 1st, 1931, at 97 1/2% and Accrued Interest.
War Loan Bonds, due March 1st, 1937, at 90% and Accrued Interest.
(These will be accepted in part payment for bonds of the 1937 maturity ONLY of this issue.)

Bonds of the various maturities of this issue will, in the event of future issues of like maturity, or longer, made by the Government, other than issues made abroad, be accepted at par and accrued interest, as the equivalent of cash for the purpose of subscription to such issues.

Issue Price Par

Free from taxes—including any income tax—imposed in pursuance of legislation enacted by the Parliament of Canada.

Payment to be made as follows:

10% on December 1st, 1917
10% on January 2nd, 1918
20% on February 1st, 1918
20% on March 1st, 1918
20% on April 1st, 1918
20% on May 1st, 1918

A full half year's interest will be paid on 1st June, 1918.

The Bonds therefore give a net interest yield to the investor of about:

5.61% on the 20 year Bonds
5.68% on the 10 year Bonds
5.81% on the 5 year Bonds

All payments are to be made to a Chartered Bank for the credit of the Minister of Finance. Failure to pay any instalment when due will render previous payments liable to forfeiture, and the allotment to cancellation. Subscriptions accompanied by a deposit of 10% of the amount subscribed, must be forwarded through the medium of a Chartered Bank. Any branch in Canada of any Chartered Bank will forward subscriptions and issue provisional receipts.

In case of partial allotments the surplus deposit will be applied toward payment of the amount due on the January instalment. Subscriptions may be paid in full on January 2nd, 1918, or on any instalment due date thereafter under discount at the rate of 8 1/4% per annum. Under this provision payments of the balance of subscriptions may be made as follows:

If paid on January 2nd, 1918, at the rate of 90.1070% per $100.
If paid on February 1st, 1918, at the rate of 79.6000% per $100.
If paid on March 1st, 1918, at the rate of 53.7223% per $100.
If paid on April 1st, 1918, at the rate of 39.9089% per $100.

Forms of application may be obtained from any branch in Canada of any Chartered Bank, or from any Victory Loan Committee, or member thereof. The books of the Loan will be kept at the Department of Finance, Ottawa. Applications will be made in due course for the listing of this issue on the Montreal and Toronto Stock Exchanges.

Subscription Lists will close on or before December 1st, 1917.

E. GUSS PORTER ...IS THE... Win-the-War Candidate

Unanimously Nominated at Marmora on Friday

At a large, representative and enthusiastic convention of the Union Government and Win-the-War candidates, held at Marmora on Friday afternoon, Mr. E. G. Porter, K. C., the popular and able representative for West Hastings in the Parliament recently dissolved, was unanimously chosen as the Union Government and Win-the-War candidate. The gathering was thoroughly represented, as every municipality in the extensive riding was represented. When the meeting was called to order, every available seat in the square hall was filled and a number were compelled to stand. A few ladies graced the gathering by their attendance and evidenced keen interest in the proceeding and addresses given. The popularity of Mr. Porter was attested to by the fact that when the nomination of candidates was proposed, his was the only name mentioned; although every opportunity was given by the presiding officer for any person present to place in nomination another name if they desired, none was forthcoming.

The gathering, at the opening stages of the proceeding, was presided over by Mr. S. T. Vandervoort, of Belleville, and associated with him on the platform were the following gentlemen: Messrs. R. J. Cook, M. P. P. for North Hastings; E. G. Porter, K. C., ex-M. P., Mayor Ketcheson of Belleville, Mayor Ireland of Trenton, W. H. Matthews, Thomas Fuller, Robt. Davis, Chas. Collins, Reeve of Wallston, J. Sargeant, Geo. Bailey, Wm. Foster, Henry Wallace, W. Higgins, R. Weddell, W. H. Matthews and R. J. Graham.

Mr. S. T. Vandervoort, President of the Conservative Association, occupied the chair, and stated the business of the convention, namely, to select a candidate. The election of officers was proceeded with resulting as follows:

President—Walter Wiggins, of Bancroft.
Vice-President—John Sargeant, of Sidney.

Secretary—A. R. Walker, of Belleville.
Treasurer—C. W. Thompson, of Rawdon.

Mr. Walter Wiggins in accepting the office of President, thanked all present for the honor conferred upon him. He was not a speechmaker, but he would endeavor to forward the interest of the Conservative Association for greater West Hastings.

Mayor Ketcheson, of Belleville, was called upon and gave a brief but appropriate address in reference to Victory War Loans.

NOMINATION OF CANDIDATE
Mr. W. H. Matthews, of Trenton, nominated Mr. E. G. Porter and Mr. Thos. Fuller of Bancroft, seconded the nomination.

There was no other nomination and the President declared Mr. Porter was the unanimous choice of the convention, which was most enthusiastically received by all present.

Mr. R. J. Graham, was called upon and addressed the convention at considerable length. He spoke of the Victory Loan and the necessity there was of subscribing to the loan. He hoped every person would take out a Victory Loan bond. He thanked Mr. Porter for the privilege given him to speak at the meeting. Some months ago, he was approached by prominent Liberals to be their Win-the-War candidate, but he did not accept their proposition. He had always been a Conservative in principle, but was independent in his view. He had in the past voted against the Conservative party. The Liberal party say they will not allow Mr. E. G. Porter to be elected by nomination, and a nomination has been tendered to a Liberal. If there is to be a contest he, the speaker, would be the people's candidate. Why was he the laborer's friend? Because he employed more laborers than any man in the riding.

The Government placed a business tax on excess profits and the speaker had contributed over $246,000 which went into the coffers of the Dominion Government to assist in the war. He was not a profiteer. He did not put the money down in his pocket, but he had bonds of several of the allied governments engaged in the war. This is a time when there should be no party politics, but we should be one, Sir Robert has recognized this, and had taken nine Liberals into his cabinet. We are ready to sacrifice and must make sacrifices to win the war. He thought he could take upon himself another job, and would perhaps do it better than it has been done. In closing, Mr. Graham referred to the fact that he had considerable farm lands, and were developing the same to assist in winning the war. He had been approached by a Government organizer to see if an election in the riding could be avoided. He (the speaker) had the authority from Col. O'Flynn to say that he, Col. O'Flynn, would retire if Mr. Porter would retire and a union candidate be selected. Could not Mr. Porter withdraw and give him (the speaker) the seat by acclamation? I will withdraw if any other candidate than Mr. Porter is selected.

Mr. Walter Wiggins said he never knew there were two Conservative parties, but evidently there was according to Mr. Graham's arguments.

The reception tendered to Mr. Porter when he arose to speak was most cordial. He was repeatedly cheered and the assemblage arose and sang "For he's a jolly good fellow." In his opening remarks Mr. Porter stated that he was not appearing before those present to blow his own horn but to thank them for the unanimous support they had given him.

Death of Mr. E. B. Mullett

Edmund Baker Mullett, a highly respected citizen of Belleville, for some years died at his home, 12 Benjamin Street on Thursday evening last. He had been ill for some time and his demise was not unexpected.

He was the son of the late James C. Mullett and was born in Huntingdon township seventy-five years ago. For years he followed the business of blacksmith. His smithy was known far and wide and he built an extensive trade. Lately he had lived in Belleville, following a retired life. He was twice married, his second wife surviving. He was in religion a Methodist.

The late Mr. Mullett was an ardent member of the Masonic fraternity. He was a pastmaster of Stirling Lodge A. F. and A. M. and was a companion of Royal Arch Masonry, being a member of the chapter at Stirling.

Surviving are four brothers, Wm. and Henry of Huntingdon, John L. of Saskatchewan and Joseph, and two sisters—Mrs. Thomas Kerr of Ottawa and Mrs. A. Ayleworth of Chicago.

The remains were taken to Moira Church for service and to Vantassel's burying ground for interment.—Ontario

Greater Hog Production

The University Farm Press News says that the outlook for the hog market was never better than at the present time and recommends farmers to breed as many sows as they can take care of.

This same verdict was arrived at in Toronto at the conference of about two hundred prominent farmers who were conversant with and deeply interested in hog raising.

These delegates representing practically every county in Ontario are holding a conference similar to the one held in Belleville on Saturday last.

Some twenty prominent farmers representing the front townships assembled in Shire Hall and arranged with the District Representative to extend the campaign through every township. The slogan is "Save more bread sows and raise more pigs." An ample supply of feeding stuff is promised and good markets were never more sure.

Address and Presentation

S. S. No. 4 Rawdon
November 8, 1917.

To the Dankley Children,

R. R. No. 3, Stirling, Ontario.

Dear Mabel, Jennie, Charlie and Evelyn: We your fellow pupils, learning of your departure from our midst would think it thoughtless on our part if you were not remembered in some manner.

We feel that we are losing four, faithful pupils. As you go from our midst into your new home and section we wish you every success and we trust you will be as faithful there in the future as you have been here in the past.

We hope as you go from us that we will not be forgotten and you may trust, that even though a few miles of land may lie between us, still yet we will be thinking of you.

And, as for Charlie we know he will be greatly missed among the smaller pupils, as he was always a friend to everyone.

The girls, without saying more, know how much they will miss the three, were companions for us all.

Trust that your love and love and friendship may never be broken and if you ever have a chance to be with us again you may know that you will, indeed be greatly welcomed.

Kindly accept this gift as a slight token of our esteem.—
Signed on behalf of pupils and teacher of S. S. No. 4.

Appreciates Gifts

No. 16 Can. Gen. (Ontario) Hosp., Orrington, Kent.

To People of Stirling and Red Cross Society of West Huntingdon.

Dear people:—
We want you to know how much we appreciate all that has been done to help our men by Stirling and the Red Cross of Huntingdon. No doubt you have all felt at some time or other the desire to do work in the midst of all the activity here in France. But you have evidently realized how much can be done at home and there only, and the splendid interest you have shown, and the practical application of it, have done much to add to the comfort of the patients in this Hospital.

You will want to know how the money you sent us was spent; with part, we bought wheel chairs and hospital carriages. We have a Canadian who has been very ill since he was wounded at Vimy, and is just progressing towards convalescence and the journey home to Canada, now he can be lifted into a wheel chair and is still to weak to sit in a wheel chair and his one desire was to get out-doors and be moved about a little. As we had so many men for the few spinal carriages, we could never keep him up long at a time, and the moving exhausted him very much. When your carriage came, we gave it to him particularly, and since then he gets up at noon every day, and spends most of the afternoon in the grounds. If you could just see the place are this has given him, and the way he has gained strength, you would feel repaid for all your trouble.

Another purchase was an ice-chest for Miss Anderson's ward. The wards are not equipped with ice-chests, and this has been a great help in keeping jellies and other little delicacies for the sicker men.

These are just two instances of the many ways in which your kindness has helped our men, and we do thank you so much.

Yours very sincerely,
MARGARET SMITH, Matron.

Coal for Canada

Two million tons of coal will be delivered to the Grand Trunk railway of Canada within the next three months, passing over the St. Lawrence division of the New York Central. Whether the coal will be used in Canada or whether it will go to France for use there, is not known. It will require, however, six and one-half solid trains seven days a week for a period of three months from the time shipments are started, to carry out the contract which the New York Central has taken to move this coal. For many months there have been heavy shipments over the division of coal consigned to Canada and the most of it has been loaded on board ships transhipped to Europe for use by the entente allies.

PYROTECHNICS

If you should happen to meet in the purlieu of your metropolitan hamlet, a painful pessimist who would have you believe that the spirits of our lads at the front are at a low ebb, that their one desire in life is to end the war at any cost, then you have my full permission to answer him by brand him with a super-Anaxagoras, and let him protest too vigorously that his opinion is just as good as yours, then you may produce in evidence against him this little story of a night in front of the front line.

Working parties went out, the men putting every bit as much heart into their digging as they do into everything pertaining to the strafing of the Boche. The men in the front line were widening and deepening trenches. Covering parties and patrols peopled the mysterious darkness that hung over No Man's Land. Sentries were standing very watchful at their posts. In fact, it was just a typical night on the western front.

There was no actual warning of the thing at all. A few spasmodic bursts of rifle grenades that registered perilously near the diggers indicated that Fritz had some vague suspicion that we were not idle; but that all comes in the night's work, and worried nobody. A few hours in the front line breed a fine contempt for anything of less calibre than a rum jar. Then, about the hour before the working parties were due to return, the real thing happened. Three four-point two's that smashed into the front line

The publisher of the best Farmer's paper in the Maritime Provinces in writing to us states:

"I would say that I do not know of a medicine that has stood the test of time like MINARD'S LINIMENT. It has been an unfailing remedy in our household ever since I can remember, and has outlived dozens of would-be competitors and imitators."

opened the ball; and then it seemed as though the stars had commenced a game of general post. The sky was full of aweeping fiery tails, lunging in mighty parabolas towards us. Rum jars!

Now the rum jar, or giant trench mortar, is probably the most potent weapon of the Boche. It is no respecter of persons and makes game of the wisest of traverses. It is a thing distinctly to be avoided. It has its compensations, like all evils, and the greatest of these is that you can see it coming, and dodge it. But dodging is a difficult matter when a hundred rum jars are in the air at the same time. That is how it was on this night. The air was full of them! They came to earth with noise shattering eardrums. They made pandemonium of the calm of peaceful war.

But presently a strange thing happened. Instead of the devastating crash, there came scarcely any noise at all—a simple "pop," scarce more than the explosion of a puffed up paper bag banged between the hands of a child. "Duds" make a noise like that, but it was not conceivable that there should be so many "duds" all at once. There was only one other explanation, and, of course, it turned out to be the one case! We got our respirators ready, but at the same time the other way, and the bursts were at least a hundred and fifty yards from us, we carried on with the work.

The "strafe" lasted an hour all told. It was very heavy, and, I have no doubt, the Boche thought that it was highly demoralizing. As to that, this is what I want you to tell the painful pessimist!

A Cockney corporal who was working near where I stood turned round to a pal and said:

"Lumme, Bill, look at those bloom-

A subaltern stood on a heap of newly turned soil and muttered soulfully: "Pretty—oh, pretty! Best sight I've seen since I've been out! And they think they've got us running! I bet. With a will!"

We still went on working. Not for a single moment did the men lay down their tools. They paused for perhaps a moment at the beginning to see where the rum jars dropped. A quarter of an hour after the strafe ended they filed out, at the appointed time, and went home to sleep.

Tell that to your painful pessimist!

Metal Laces.

Many are French. And they are in vogue for gowns and hats alike.

There are dull gold, silver, bronze, copper and gun metal effects, as well as brightly lacquered in various colors. Metal nautical braiding on the metal net is both new and attractive.

They are all quite lovely in their gleaming richness.

A GRAND MEDICINE FOR LITTLE ONES

Baby's Own Tablets are a grand medicine for little ones. They are a mild but thorough laxative; are absolutely safe; easy to give and never fail to cure. One of the most reliable of little ones. Concerning them Mrs. Jas. S. Hasty, Gleason Road, N. B., writes:—"I have used Baby's Own Tablets and have found them perfectly satisfactory for my little one." The Tablets are sold in medicine bottles or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE AIRPLANE'S LIMIT.

Fliers as Big as Ocean Liners Are an Impossibility.

I am not one of those who entertain extravagant ideas concerning the future of the airplane. All sorts of ridiculous notions are afloat, largely fathered by people of lively imagination and of limited information. I do not believe that all transportation in future will be through the air. The airplane will not supplant the railroad, the trolley car or the motor car. It will merely be another agency for performing a similar kind of work.

There are certain things that it will do better than the railroad or the motor car, and its use will therefore be limited to these, for we must realize at the start that the airplane has decided limitations. We see enormous pictures, day after day, of aircraft as large as ocean liners, but these are merely vain imaginings. We shall have no airplanes as large as the Lusitania.

Anyone who understands the fundamentals of air mechanics will immediately understand why this is so. The airplane is built essentially upon the same principles as a bird. It has the same flying capabilities as a bird and, precisely the same limitations. The best flyer among birds is the hummingbird, and certain insects, which are much smaller, such as the dragon fly, are also wonderful fliers. It is a law of nature that the larger the bird the poorer its flying ability.

There are excellent mechanical reasons for this. The main one is that as a bird increases in size its weight increases at a much greater rate than the area of its wings. Thus if a bird doubles its size it would need to lift itself in the air, not twice as much power, but eight times as much—that is, its weight increases as its cube, whereas the area of the wings increases as its square. This is the principle that limits the size of birds, and it is also the principle that limits the size of airplanes, which fly just as birds fly. Each increase in size demands a much greater proportional increase in motive power, the result being that we have to add so enormously to the weight that the airplane soon reaches a size where it cannot leave the ground. From interviews with Orville Wright by Burton J. Hendrick in Harper's Magazine.

Spanking Doesn't Cure!

Don't think children can be cured of bed-wetting by spanking them. It is a trouble is constitutional, the child cannot help it. I will send to you a FREE mother my successful home treatment, with full instructions. If you want a trouble-free baby, you need no money, but write me to-day. My treatment is recommended to adults troubled with the difficulties of bed or night. Address:

SANTA CLAUS WRITES.

Dear North Pole, Nov. 1, 1917.

Many letters from you already, and most of them ask me, rather wisely, whether I am coming around this year (on account of the war, you know). So I thought I would answer a lot of your letters at once by writing in the paper in this way.

I have been busy for a long time now, making things for the soldiers and sailors and sending them away, across the ocean—and to the training camps in this country. I have also been making and sending things to the little orphan children in Belgium and France and all those other places where the terrible war is being fought.

Not many of these things have been toys and such. Most of them have been useful things, to wear, to eat, or to really use in other ways. It is a long time since I made so many useful things, instead of so many toys, and I can tell you that it was pretty hard for me to remember how to do it.

I know it was right for me to do it, even if it has made me short of the things that I usually have for you. I think—and I hope I am right—that you are glad to have me do it and that I had written to ask you about it you would have told me to go ahead.

So many of the soldiers and sailors were children like yourselves only a little while ago. Perhaps they don't look forward to Christmas with the same eagerness that you do, but I like to think that the things I have made and sent them make them happier and more comfortable while they are fighting for us.

And now to answer your questions about coming around this year. Of course, you all know what Christmas day is—that it was Christ's birthday, and that is why we make it a holiday. That is one reason why I have always looked upon Christmas as the children's special day. So, in spite of the war and of all the time I have spent sending things to the soldiers and sailors, I expect to come around this year as usual. No, not quite as usual, because I expect the things I can bring you will bear the marks of what I have been doing for the others. I shall not bring so many toys or such expensive ones—but what I do bring for you will, I hope, be more useful and just as pleasing. Certainly it will carry just as much love and good wishes as ever.

I don't see why I should forget you or pass you by entirely because of the war work I have been doing and expect still to do. After all, it is your day, and I am still

BRIDGE COLLAPSE RECALLS ROMANCE OF NORTHWEST

Telegraph Wire Laid by Overland Pioneers Was Used by Indians to Build This Remarkable Structure.

The suspension bridge constructed by the Hargreaves Indians across the Bulkley River in British Columbia has collapsed and now floats in the waters of Hargreaves Canyon, held by the cables on which it was suspended for more than twenty years. The news will be received with regret by engineers in all parts of the world. This frail structure was regarded as a remarkable example of Indian skill in bridge building and had been a subject of comment in many engineering magazines, while it was also regarded as one of the many features of interest seen from the trains of the Grand Trunk Pacific line. Conceived in the mind of a native and built by his fellow tribesmen, the true principles of the modern suspension bridge were carried into the construction work. The bridge was the third attempt to get a permanent crossing over the Bulkley River, the first two bridges having been swept away by high water. When the Indians built this bridge they had no modern tools, nor did they have nails, spikes or bolts, wooden spikes and telegraph wire being used at joints. The bridge had a span of 146 feet and was 10 feet wide.

Intertwined with the story of the Indian bridge is a romance of the Northwest. The telegraph wire used in its construction was discovered by the Indians a point some eight hundred miles west of Edmonton and 90 miles inland from the Pacific Coast, where it had been hidden for many years. This is how it happened: Between the date of the unsuccessful and the day of the successful attempts to lay a submarine cable which would connect New York and London, a plan was put forth for an overland telegraph line from New York to St. Petersburg. The close of the Civil War found the country full of men of mettle. Some of the old campaigners were selected and sent to work.

In the meantime, while these heroic explorers were working away in the wilderness, London and New York were coupled up by the submarine cable. Instantly, all interest in the overland disappeared, as the need of the line no longer existed. Away out on the Northern corner of this continent there is a line of fifty-year-old telegraph poles. It is easy to understand and appreciate the disappointment of these brave fellows who had fought the good fight in sun and rain for over a year and a half, only to be told to quit. And that is how they happened to leave the telegraph wire used in the bridge in a cache on the river, along whose banks the Grand Trunk Pacific transcontinental trains are now travelling.

When this enthusiastic band of workers went home, the "silent places" fell asleep again, and the younger generation forgot. After forty years more of unbroken sleep, other telegraph builders blazed the trail, planting poles and stringing wires. What was regarded as a worthless wilderness was hailed as the new Empire of the North, teeming with natural riches. This time they succeeded, for the men were on the payroll of the Grand Trunk Pacific Telegraph Company, and the wires follow the right-of-way of Canada's new line. This modern successor of the overland has become an important factor in handling the telegraph business of a large section of the continent.

Killed Soul of Germany

In the olden days somebody once asked, "What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" and Prussia, in these latter days, has answered—soldier, philosopher and economist alike—that it would profit immeasurably; that the loss of the soul was but a small price to pay for the winning of the whole world and the setting up of a state which, in power, wealth and prestige, should overtop even the Roman Empire itself in the most august days of the Caesars.

Just when it was that Prussia reached the conviction that the soul was being antagonistic to the principles of the infamous Machiavelli, of whom he was an avowed and delighted pupil.

Perhaps it will be as well, before we go any further, to define our terms. The soul of which we speak is the soul as recognized by the greatest moral teacher of all time, whom we have quoted above. And when He asked His question, nineteen hundred years ago, the world knew perfectly well what He meant by the soul; for the term had conveyed a clear idea of a man's mind from the very dawn of civilization. It means the soul that is throughout the civilized world to-day, except in those portions of it upon which has fallen the dark eclipse of so-called Prussian Kultur.

The Prussian, of course, would indignantly deny that he had lost his soul, judging from the Kaiser's soliloquy announcement of his partnership with the Almighty, he believes, doubtless, that in discarding the soul of Christianity he has found the super-soul of Kultur, the soul of the superman. Be that as it may, it is certain that the deceit, dishonor and trickery which, as our State Department has shown, marked everywhere the course of Prussian diplomacy before the war, and the murder, rapine, piracy and unprintable abominations which the Prussian army has perpetrated during the war, prove that Prussia, from Emperor down to the lowest man, has cast out of herself that very soul which has handed to her practically all the civilization of the earth to break down and blot out, once and for all, a military philosophy which reduced to the language of everyday life, stands for more burglary and brigandage.

The material things, at least, the Prussian is nothing if he is not logical; and when he set out to conquer the world by military methods he determined to apply to the problem the best of material efficiency. He passed in review the whole range of mundane life, all that goes to make up the sum total of human activity. Everything that would conduce to the winning of world domination he retained. Everything that would not be cast out. During this process of selection he came to consider the soul, with its attributes of honor, mercy, humanity, fidelity, chivalry, charity and moral rectitude. And he found that, far from contributing to the highest military success, the soul of Christianity and civilization, with its obligations to magnanimity, generosity and good faith, was utterly incompatible with that cold, remorseless, material and military efficiency of the development and exercise of which he hoped at once to Prussianize and possess the world.

And so, with deliberation and with clear-eyed knowledge of what he was doing, he put aside the soul as likely to prove not only unserviceable but utterly destructive both of his unholy philosophy and the barbaric dream which it cloaked but did not entirely conceal.

Now in our modern civilization, when a man deliberately casts out his soul, we class that man as a criminal. It matters not what particular form of outlawry he adopts; whether he become safe cracker, house burglar, honest thief or counterfeit—he is a criminal by choice and by profession. Nor does the possession of extraordinary mentality, of rare versatility, of many accomplishments in the arts and sciences, or of the social graces, serve to do anything more than make heavier his accountability and increase the detestation of his crime.

By the degree to which Germany has been fruitful in art, science, industry and social uplift, by so much the more was the murder of her own soul a foul deed, first against herself and then, as the present frightful catastrophe has shown, against all humanity.

Therefore, when we read of a Bernstorff using the privileges of his high and honorable office as a channel for treacherous intrigue—of a Hollweg announcing without a tremor of shame, that Prussia had torn up a treaty and invaded a small and friendly state because it suited her convenience to do so—of a Von Kluck standing silent and acquiescent while his soldiers fell upon the helpless peasants with rape, robbery and the threat of a "Fritz" describing the chivalric traditions of the sea by the deliberate drowning of unarmed and offending men, women and children—of the deliberate violation of that sacred symbol the Red Cross—of a Kaiser standing in the midst of his organized devilry and calling upon God to witness that he ever was, is now, and ever will be, the apostle of peace and good will—when we read of such doings, let us cease to cry, "How can these things be?" and remember that there is a nation in the midst of whose soul these are the very things that will inevitably happen.—Scientific American.

Watching through stress and strain,
There is the mind which directs them,
Back of the brawn—the Brain!

Quilted Japanese Vests With Satin Outside and Silk Inside.

Those quilted Japanese vests which so many women like to slip under their coats in cold weather now come with satin outside and beautiful silk inside. Some have sleeves and some haven't.

The long, shawl-shaped collar is particularly fashionable, and among the new pieces is one style of Georgette crepe in this popular shape. Real lace trimming and a touch of hand embroidery make it quite lovely.

An extremely handsome new fur coat was of Persian broadtail, with big collar and cuffs of the now fashionable skunk.

A great many women now wear bloomers in preference to petticoats—so says one shopkeeper who ought to know. If mildy prefers the bloomers she may have them in crepe or chine in light colors or black satin. If she wishes something more practical.

Counting the Salmon.

The Wood river in Alaska has been closed to fishing for many years and is resorted to for breeding purposes by red salmon escaping the nets in Nushagak bay. The counting of the salmon was first undertaken in 1908, and has been continued annually since that time, except in 1914.

The counting is made possible by throwing a rack across the stream and compelling the fish to pass through a narrow gate, where they are easily visible to persons immediately above. Agents of the fisheries bureau in relays are kept on duty day and night for the entire period of the run, and the tally is kept by an automatic counting device manipulated by hand. The highest count for any one day in recent years was 25,554.—New York Sun.

TURKS DRIVEN BACK 7 MILES IN PALESTINE

Gen. Allenby's Forces Score Decisively—Closing On Jerusalem.

SUNK BY U-BOAT

Destroyer and Monitor Tor- pedoed While Co-oper- ating There.

London cable: The British forces in Palestine yesterday attacked the new Turkish positions and drove back the enemy a distance of seven miles. It was announced to-day by Major-General Maurice, chief director of military operations at the War Office.

The Turkish force confronting General Allenby, the British commander, has now lost half its entire effectiveness, General Maurice continued. He said the number of prisoners and the booty taken in yesterday's attack had not yet been reported, but that one cavalry division, which was only a small part of the force engaged, took 1,100 prisoners, two guns and 14 machine-guns.

General Maurice said the British front in Palestine now ran along the Wadi Surar. This position immediately covers Jaffa and the railway junction on the route to Jerusalem. Wadi Surar was the Biblical brook Kedron, which Jesus went over with his disciples into the garden he was wont to frequent, and whether he was followed by Judas and betrayed.

"The keynote of our operations in the eastern theatre," said General Maurice, "is the defeat of Von Falkenhayn's preparations for the recapture of Baghdad. General Maude's latest move up the Tigris succeeded in destroying the Turkish stocks of ammunition piled up for this enterprise."

Having accomplished this, Maude has now fallen back on his old position, as there is no point in prolonging communications to no purpose. Meanwhile, General Allenby has been striking a powerful blow on the Palestine front. The forces opposing Allenby have been very roughly handled. They have lost half their effectives and must be reinforced from the army which Von Falkenhayn has been preparing at Aleppo for the Baghdad attack.

British destroyer and a small monitor which were operating in conjunction with the British army in Palestine have been sunk. It was officially announced this evening. A total of 33 men from the two vessels are missing. The text of the statement announcing the losses reads: "One of His Majesty's destroyers and a small monitor have been sunk by an enemy submarine while co-operating with the army in Palestine. Seven men are missing from the destroyer, and 26 from the monitor."

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

The official statement on the operations in Palestine says: "Gen. Allenby reported at 11 p.m. yesterday that after stiff fighting on the 12th with Turkish forces which had attempted to take new positions on the Wadi Sukereh, 12 miles north of Ascalon, the enemy were driven on the 13th by a combined attack of our mounted troops and infantry, from this position and forced to retire a distance of five miles to the Wadi-Surar, eight miles south of Jaffa. Our troops captured the enemy's strongly entrenched positions at Memiyeh, Katrah and Mughar, with magnificent dash, and now hold the line from Mt. Tineh, on the east, through Katrah and Yebnah to the sea."

"Full details of the captures are not yet available, but one mounted division alone reports having taken 7,100 prisoners, 14 machine guns and two guns."

KERENSKY NOW IN POWER AGAIN

Such is Latest News of Rus- sian Muddle.

Copenhagen cable: The Berlingske Tidende Haparanda correspondent in a despatch received here says: "Officers at Tornea, Finland, say that Siberia has declared its independence and proclaimed former Emperor Nicholas as Emperor."

"Cossacks have occupied Kiev."

London cable says: While only scanty despatches, and these of doubtful reliability, were received yesterday dealing with what is going on in Russia, all the advices reaching here agreed that the party of Kerensky is getting the upper hand of the Bolsheviks in Petrograd, and has the rest of the country behind it.

A conflict is believed to be raging in the Capital. In Moscow, according to the Petrograd correspondent of the Berlingske Tidende, a Copenhagen newspaper, General Korniloff's loyalist troops have captured the famous fortress, the Kremlin, after severe fighting. Despatches from a Swedish correspondent at Haparanda, on the Russian border, from Stockholm, quoting the Russian Embassy there, and from the Finnish News Bureau's Stockholm correspondent, yesterday, agreed that Premier Kerensky had entered Petrograd, after defeating the Bolsheviks, but doubt was cast on the freshness of the news

In these telegrams by the following despatch from Stockholm: "Telegraphic communication with Petrograd has been interrupted since Tuesday afternoon. The cable station at Nydalen, Finland, reports that no response could be obtained from Petrograd to its signals. It is presumed that the Petrograd station is occupied by military forces."

Kaledines, the Cossack leader, is said to be dictator of southern Russia. The orders of the Provisional Government are signed by M. Kerensky, General Kaledines and General Korniloff.

MARLBOROUGH RECONCILED. London, Cable: The Duke of Marlborough is at home. Both he and his Duchess are in London. In view of the fact that the Duke and Duchess, who was formerly General Korniloff, of New York, have been separated for a number of years, the children, spending part of the time with their mother and part with their father, this announcement is causing great interest in social circles.

CHILD HIT BY AUTO.

Chatham, Report: An 8-year-old child was run over by an automobile in front of an automobile garage on the beach at Chatham. The child is confined to St. Joseph's Hospital. The exact extent of the child's injuries have not been ascertained. The parents fear that the child may have been fractured.

TEUTONIC BLUFF ON FOOD SUPPLY

Suffering Hardships to Send Supplies to Neutrals.

But Occupied Territories Are Paying the Price.

London cable says: Much comment has appeared on Germany's action in supplying certain foodstuffs to neutrals, which is taken as evidence of much better food conditions throughout the central empire than in previous years. Facts show that this is untrue. Germany has been able to send food to the neutrals only by reducing, with truly Teutonic methods, all rations allowed the inhabitants of occupied territories. Such supplies as now are reaching Holland and Sweden are taken from the mouths of the Belgians, French and the Poles, while the Germans themselves continue suffering great hardships.

Just a few facts are sufficient to picture conditions. The most significant are the undying reports of children walking miles daily to get scraps from the prison camps where the British are confined. Prisoners sell soap at five francs a cake. The potato ration at this time last year. Hundreds of newly drafted men are being sent to neutral countries for feeding just prior to being sent into the line.

Besides such evidence, masses of press statements show that various diseases are prevalent all over the country and are traceable to malnutrition. Night blindness recently has become much more common. Cholera exists in many vicinities, but it is believed Germany's remarkable ability to prevent the spread of contagion eventually will overcome both cholera and typhus. German periodicals, candidly admit that while suffering severely the mass of the people will survive, and that only the weakest portion will die off.

HUN TREACHERY FOOLED ITALY

False News Circulated in Cadorna's Army.

Disguised Bulgars Gave Re- tirement Orders.

Washington despatch: While only thrown upon hitherto unexplained references to German intrigue in the ranks of the Italian army by an official despatch received here to-day from Rome.

"An investigation," says the despatch, "has brought to light the most treacherous ruse resorted to by the enemy in order to undermine the morale of our soldiers immediately before the inauguration of the present offensive. On the 20th of October the enemy succeeded in smuggling through our lines and caused to be distributed in specified sectors thousands of copies of Il Giornale Italia and Il Corriere della Sera, in which were reported tumults and rebellions in Naples, Florence, Sicily and Puglia, with hundreds of people killed in Turin."

By English soldiers bring upon women and children, and also describing French soldiers riding over the bodies of agitators, etc.

"It also was established that Italian sections Bulgarians and Croates, wearing Italian uniforms, penetrated among our troops, favored by a thick mist, and the ability of speaking Italian perfectly, having studied at the Turin Military Academy, and ordered our soldiers, through telephone communications, to abandon important defensive positions and thereby causing great confusion and anxiety."

Accounts of the Italian retreat before the Austro-German drive have told of the failure of the Italians at crucial points to make a show of fight against the invaders.

"What's what worth?" "That's not the question," replied Farmer Cornstovell. "When you can get $2 and more a bushel for wheat you've got to turn your business on your mind to permit you to indulge in abstract theories as to its actual value."

Washington Star.

GERMANS STILL BEING HELD BY ITALIANS ON THE PIAVE

London cable says: Everywhere along the battle-front, from Lake Garda eastward, and thence southward along the Piave River to the Adriatic Sea, the Italians are holding the enemy in check, except in the hilly regions in the vicinity of the Asiago Plateau, where additional gains have been made by the invaders. The new advances by the Teutonic allies, as observed in the war maps, do not indicate that points of extremely great strategic value have been won, but rather that the Italians on various sectors have given ground before superior numbers and at the same time have straightened out and lessened the length of their front.

In the hills north of the Venetian Plains General Diaz, the new commander-in-chief of the Italians, has withdrawn his advanced posts south of Montebelluna. On the Asiago Plateau, and thence eastward to where the battle-front meets the upper reaches of the Piave River the German and Austro-Hungarian forces are adding strength to their attacks, doubtless hoping to drive through the highest points of the range and to reach Venetia before the expected arrival of British and French reinforcements becomes a fact.

NORTHERN LINE REINFORCED.

Notwithstanding the arduous retreat north of the Isonzo westward, the Italians evidently have been able to reinforce their northern line sufficiently to give battle to the enemy in such strength as to prevent a precipitate invasion of the lowlands, where undoubtedly it is the ambition of the enemy to turn the flank of the defenders and force a withdrawal of their line still farther westward.

Along the Piave from the region of Feltre to the Adriatic the invaders at numerous points have endeavored to make new crossings of the river, but everywhere they have been thwarted. Those of them who already are on the west bank of the river are being hard held to their original positions, the artillery and rifle-fire of the Italians keeping them in check. Near Zenson the positions of the enemy gradually are being encroached upon, while near the mouth of the river at Grislerola the invaders in the swampy lowlands constantly are under a vigorous shell and rifle-fire.

The Italian lines were holding well at all points and everything indicated the thoroughness of the concentration that had been effected by the army along the new line.

Along the river bank, the men displayed the best of spirits and evidenced their determination in the desperate struggle for the holding of this Piave line, which is now reaching its climax.

General Foyville will command the French army now being sent to Italy. Lord Nye comments a report that troops of French and British troops are rolling constantly through that place on their way from France into Italy and are greeted with great popular enthusiasm.

ITALIANS STILL HOLDING MOST OF THE NEW LINE

London cable says: While the Italians continue to hold tenaciously to most of the new line along the Piave River, from the Adriatic Sea to the region of Feltre, and thence to the northern hills westward from Feltre to Lake Garda, they again have been compelled to give ground in both sectors to the Teutonic allied armies.

Along the shoulders of the Italians for several days must rest the security of the Piave line, and of historic Venice, for the information has been vouchsafed by Major-General Maurice, chief director of military operations at the British War Office, that it will be "some days yet" before British and French fighting forces can be placed in the field to reinforce the Italians.

Meanwhile the enemy is striving energetically to force passages of the Piave at various points and again has been successful on southern reaches in crossing the stream at Feltre, four miles distant from its mouth and some twenty miles northeast of Venice. The new line, in the swampy lowlands the Teutons are being held by the defending forces from further gains.

To the north around Zanssen, where the stream was negotiated by the Austro-Germans Tuesday, fighting is still in progress, with the Italians holding the upper hand, but not having been able to drive back the invaders to the eastern bank of the stream. Still farther north attempts to gain a foothold on the western bank of the Piave between Quero and Feltre were repulsed with heavy casualties.

In the hilly region from Feltre, on the Trentino front eastward to Feltre, a distance of twelve miles, the Italians have fallen back before the enemy, who also has gained additional vantage points on the Asiago plateau and the Setti Comuni.

The War Office announced: "Some misapprehensions appeared to have arisen with regard to the statement which recently appeared in the press that the Franco-British forces now in Italy are under the supreme command of Gen. Foyville. The British command will operate under their own commanders."

THE ITALIAN OFFICIAL REPORT. The Italian War Office report said: "After a short but intense artillery action at dawn yesterday the enemy made their way over the bridge, that all the bridges were burned and that the section returned leaving only one damaged machine with the enemy, although 12 of the 40 cars were in such crippled condition that it was necessary to abandon them after the bridges were burned.

At Santa Lucia the commander ordered one of his machines to advance against an enemy patrol which was dangerously near. The car rushed forward, sweeping the enemy from its double turrets, but when this mission was accomplished and the car turned back it was found that the bridge was on fire. The only way was to cross the burning bridge. The car was steered straight over the smoking structure while the burning planks creaked under its huge weight and crossed safely and in one of the cars brought back the ammunition of another car was exhausted after it had fired 30,000 rounds.

SHIP LOSSES LOWEST YET

Only One Briton of Over 1,600 Tons Sunk.

Five Under That and One Fishing Boat.

London cable: Only one British merchant vessel of more than 1,600 tons was sunk by mine or submarine last week, according to the weekly statement of shipping losses issued this evening. This is the lowest record since Germany began her submarine campaign.

Five vessels of less than 1,600 tons and one fishing boat were sunk during the week. Not since Germany began her intended submarine campaign in February has the total number of British merchantmen sunk by mine or submarine been as small as the above Admiralty statement shows. The previous lowest record was twelve merchantmen, eight of them of a tonnage in excess of 1,600, and four of less than 1,600 tons.

The high crest of the wave of British merchantmen sunk was during the week of April 22, when 40 ships of 1,600 tons and over and 15 of less tonnage were sunk—a total of 55. The next highest record was the following week, when 33 vessels of the larger and 13 of the smaller category were sent to the bottom.

The loss of French shipping was one vessel over 1,600 tons. Four unsuccessful attacks were made by U-boats. Only one small sailing vessel of Italian nationality was lost during the week ended Nov. 11. It was officially announced, as the result of the operations of hostile submarines.

BIGGER SUBS, WIDER RANGE

U-Boats to Fight Shy of British Waters.

Mid-Ocean Attacks On U. S. Shipping Likely.

London cable: The lowest record of submarine destruction of any week since German ruthlessness began brings forth an explanation likely to be of the utmost concern to America. It is stated that the British measures of fighting the submarines in narrow shallow waters around the British Isles have been so perfected that Germany is preparing to adopt entirely new tactics, and during the present situation the plans some time ago began constructing an unknown number of gigantic submarines, about 3,000 tons, capable of 25 knots on the surface. They carry several four or six-inch guns, and can cruise one thousand miles, remaining at sea two or three months. It is intended to send these on long distance cruises, avoiding the British waters and necessitating entirely different methods of fighting them. Having ample sea room and avoiding dangerous shallows, such craft would be almost immune from attack by the methods heretofore successful in combating the smaller U-boats near Britain. On the other hand, the bigger craft are slower in submerging and maneuvering, and present a bigger target. They would encounter much greater difficulty in gaining the open sea from their base. It is positively stated that a number of such craft are nearing completion, and that the new style of submarine warfare is expected to be inaugurated shortly by a spectacular mid-ocean attack on shipping from America, possibly even the resumption of efforts to operate on the west side of the Atlantic following the example of the U.S.

STILL DECLARE RUSSIA TURNS TO KERENSKY

Latest Reports Say Virtual- ly Whole Country is With Him.

IN PETROGRAD

Of Which Only a Portion is Now Held by Bol- sheviki.

Stockholm cable: Premier Kerensky has entered Petrograd, according to a despatch received from the correspondent of the Swedish News Agency at Haparanda, on the Russian border. The majority of Maximilian troops have joined the Premier, the correspondent adds.

London cable says: The Finnish Telegram Bureau says the whole of Russia except a small part of Petrograd is now in the hands of the provisional Government.

Premier Kerensky is now in Petrograd, and has taken virtually the entire city, the announcement of the Finnish Telegram Bureau says. The Finnish Telegram Bureau says Moscow is the headquarters of the provisional Government, and that Premier Kerensky has issued orders from Moscow which have appeared in the Petrograd, as well as the Helsinki, newspapers, with headlines announcing the Bolshevik movement is moving its downfall. General Kaledines, the Cossack leader, is said to be dictator of southern Russia. The orders of the provisional Government are signed by M. Kerensky, General Kaledines and General Korniloff.

According to these advices, which were received in a cablegram filed at Stockholm at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Premier Kerensky defeated the Bolsheviks at Taraske-Selo. The Cossacks are reported to have destroyed the "Red Guard." The telegraph lines are now in M. Kerensky's hands. The Telegram Bureau reports, stating that when they left the capital there was fighting in the streets between the Bolsheviks and the populace. The Petrograd garrison was reported to be deserting to the Bolsheviks, and the Allied embassies were said to have got into touch with Premier Kerensky. The people of Petrograd, the travelers said, were turning down the Bolshevik proclamations and hooting their leaders on the streets.

The provisional Russian Government referred to in the foregoing is the Government of Premier Kerensky, which the Bolsheviks attempted to overthrow.

The Finnish Telegram Bureau's advices so closely parallel the despatches received on Sunday and Monday stating that Premier Kerensky had overthrown the Bolsheviks as to suggest that they may be a delayed version of the same reports, which were contradicted by the announcement received from Petrograd that the Kerensky forces had been defeated in a battle near Taraske-Selo.

For the last three days reports have been coming from Scandinavian sources of the defeat of the Bolsheviks, but they have been contradicted by wireless despatches from Petrograd. This is the third time that an account has been received of Kerensky having been reported twice and a Bolshevik success on the other occasion.

CANADIANS SENT TO DO THE JOB

Gen. Currie Explains Pres- ence at Passchendaele.

Called On for "Certain Tac- tical Features."

Ottawa report: General Sir Arthur Currie, commanding the Canadian corps, in a communication to Sir George Perley in London, under date of Nov. 7, wrote:

"As the press will have told you this morning, we attacked all afternoon yesterday and succeeded in taking all our objectives, and doing it on time. The village of Passchendaele is ours. This has been the long fought for so hard all summer. Yesterday's fight made the third successful battle we have fought since coming up here. Before we came the situation was that certain tactical features had to be taken. Canadians were brought to do the job; so far they have done it. We have done it. Our success means everything to those who have to hold the line."

"The cost has been severe, yet I believe the results more than justify the cost. We came at a bad season, as the weather has been bad and the roads are bad, trails and communication lines are bad."

See That Your Name Is On List

Soldiers' mothers, wives, widows, daughters and sisters over 21 years of age, having lived in Canada one year and in the municipality 80 days may vote if their men or women are on active service overseas, naval or military, or if their men or women, living or dead, have honorably retired from service. Exception—This does not apply to those men or women who have joined after September 20th, 1917, and have not left Canada.

Voters' lists will be hung up in the post office or some other public place in your district. Look for your name. If not on it, see the officer whose name is on the list and have your name put on. Ten days before election day he will be in his office two hours each day and will give full information.

Women, The War, and The Election

(By a Woman)

Canada's Appeal:
Vote for Union Government and the Selective Draft.
The votes of women enfranchised to represent men at the front may decide this election. You must show that Canada is overwhelmingly in favor of Winning the War. Do not stay at home and refrain from voting because you feel sure that Union Government will win. A great majority will mean a united Canada. Do not be persuaded that any candidates except those endorsed by the Union Government, can help or will help to win the war. Union Government is pledged to carry out the Selective Draft without delay. The Opposition—in any constituency where there is an Opposition candidate—is pledged to grant delay. Vote for Union Government and the Selective Draft.

The Reply of the Women:
"We are coming, Mother Canada, a million women strong, to ensure our armies the most speedy possible Victory, and for ourselves the sparing of the lives of countless men."
To shorten this war for Righteous Peace by a single day means the saving of the most precious life in the world for thousands of women, and the prevention of misery which need not be added to an already incredible total.
Vote for Union Government and the Selective Draft.

to greater Motor Car Value

From the standpoint of dollar for dollar value there's not a car made which offers more for your money than the famous Chevrolet Four-Ninety A.

Before the Chevrolet was made in Canada, good cars were all high in price.

But our mammoth production and manufacturing efficiency enables us to sell the Chevrolet Four-Ninety A at a price much lower than its value when compared with other makes of cars.

With the surplus power developed by the famous valve-in-head motor the owner of a Four-Ninety A invariably is the "trail blazer."

Standard equipment includes speedometer, electric starting and lighting, ammeter, oil indicator light equipment, one man top, demountable rims, non-skid tires on rear wheels and many features usually looked for in cars much higher in price.

To the Electors of West Hastings:

Having been solicited to become a candidate for West Hastings in the present election by many prominent electors of the constituency both Conservatives and Liberals, and having been advised that the executive of the Conservative party refused to join the executive of the Liberal party in endeavoring to avoid an election by the selection of a candidate that would be acceptable to both parties, I have decided to offer myself for election, without any political party recognition, as an independent supporter of the present Government, to win the War, and solicit the support of all those who think it is time to drop party politics and unite our efforts to overthrow the Germans. I believe in this most serious time that we should adopt what the Romans did, "when none were for the party and all were for the State.

Two Candidates In The Field

Nomination for West Hastings was held on Monday in the Town Hall, Stirling, and it was apparent from an unbiased point of view that a large majority of these present were supporters of the able and popular ex-member Mr. E. Guss Porter, K. C., of Belleville, who is the recognized Union Government candidate. Many ladies were present and evidenced much interest in the addresses given, the key note of which were anti-war. The Hall was filled to overflowing, many having to stand during the meeting. At times, and especially at the close, there were warm discussions and the many salient points raised by Mr. Porter were loudly applauded. The challenge issued by Mr. Graham as to what Mr. Porter had done for the riding since he had been the member was accepted, and most satisfactorily answered by the member. He showed clearly that he had ever been alert to the interest of the riding, and had secured many concessions which were of great benefit.

The nomination proceedings opened at the hour of noon and closed at 2 o'clock. Sheriff Morrison, Returning Officer, presided over the gathering. Among those on the platform were Messrs. E. Guss Porter, K. C. M. P., R. J. Graham, S. Burrows, A. H. Deacon, Mayor Ketcheson, F. Mallory, ex-Alderman Ducks-worth, J. R. Cook, M. P. P., and J. A. Kerr.

Mr. R. J. Graham was the first speaker and said it was a pleasure to be present and discuss the vital questions which at the present time are being discussed all over Canada. He was an Independent Conservative, in favor of Union Government with Sir Robert Borden at the head. There should be but one issue and that was to win the war. He was the candidate of the people of all ranks. There was no party behind him. Mr. Porter, for 17 years has represented this constituency, and he will tell you what he has done.

Mr. Porter was next called upon and received a most flattering reception. He thanked all present and especially the ladies for their presence. In his opening remarks the speaker referred to the fact that Mr. Graham stated he was not brought out by any party. Who is he brought out by? Did he bring himself out? As the old sitting member he, the speaker, thought it only right to withhold holding a Conservative convention until it was ascertained what the Liberals would do. A convention was called by the Liberals, and it was a purely Liberal gathering. The situation was canvassed and no man could be found to be the nominee. A committee of three was appointed to wait upon Col. E. D. O'Flynn to tender him the nomination and he asked for 48 hours in which to decide. Col. O'Flynn has not yet accepted the nomination. Mr. Graham was waited upon by Liberals and he was brought out by the Ontario newspaper. At Marmora, Mr. Graham stated he had been waited upon by such Liberals as Mr. Herby, of the Ontario; Mr. F. E. O'Flynn and Mr. D. V. Sinclair. These were the men who were supporting Mr. Graham.

After several other speakers addressed the meeting, three rousing cheers were given the Government nominee, E. Guss Porter, and the meeting closed with the National Anthem.

Tenders for Pulpwood Limit

Tenders will be received by the undersigned up to and including the seventeenth day of December next for the right to cut pulpwood and pine timber on a certain area situate in the vicinity of the Kapuskasing River in the Districts of Timiskaming and Algoma.

Tenders are to offer a flat rate per cord for all classes of pulpwood, whether spruce or other woods. The successful tenderer shall be required to pay for the Red and White Pine on the limit a flat rate of $10 per thousand feet board measure.

The successful tenderer shall also be required to erect a mill or mills on or near the territory, and to manufacture the wood into pulp and paper in the Province of Ontario, in accordance with the terms and conditions of sale which can be had on application to the Department.

Parties making tender will be required to deposit with their tender a marked cheque payable to the Honourable the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario, for Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00), which amount will be forfeited in the event of their not entering into agreement to carry out conditions, etc. The said Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00) will be held by the Department until such time as the terms and conditions of the agreement to be entered into have been complied with and the said mills erected, equipped and in operation. The said sum may then be applied in such amounts and at such times as the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines may direct in payment of accounts for dues or of any other obligation due the Crown until the whole sum has been applied.

The highest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

For particulars as to description of territory, capital to be invested, etc., apply to the undersigned
G. E. FREESTON,
Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines,
Toronto, September 19th, 1917.

N.B.—No unauthorized publication of this notice will be paid for.

in the past and the selection of him as a candidate at this convention. Mr. Porter then spoke as follows:

MR. PORTER'S ADDRESS

We are meeting together today under very distressing conditions; conditions which have never before in the history of our country existed and which it is sincerely hoped will soon be ended in such a manner as to forever prevent its recurrence. We are meeting to make preparation to fight out with our fellow-citizens a general election when every true and loyal Canadian should be putting forth untiringly every effort to fight the common enemy of right, justice and civilization that has driven us into the sanguinary and devastating war which is now threatening our liberties and our Empire and the welfare of the world.

ELECTION UNNECESSARY

The Liberal-Conservative party, through its representatives in the last Parliament in Canada and in which I had the great honor of representing you, did all in their power to avoid the stress, confusion and waste of force which would be caused by a general election, our leader going so far even as to offer an equal representation with Sir Wilfrid and his followers in the Government of Canada during the war and extending the life of the Government for such time, but the Liberal leader, either through love or fear of his following in Quebec or the advantage he hoped to reap by causing dissension and bitter strife among our people, or by his disloyalty or indifference to the success of our common cause of Empire, would agree to no proposals made but instead adopted a course of delay and dissension which if succeeded to mount the everlasting disgrace and degradation of Canada and the abandonment of our brave men at the front who are fighting for our liberties and our homes and to uphold the principles of right and justice.

To any one who knows Sir Robert Borden and the principles he stands for it is no wonder that he did not agree to such a proposition as that made by Sir Wilfrid, and to every one who remembers the history of Sir Wilfrid's political career the course he took is and is now advocating and trying to force on the people of Canada is just what might have been expected for his course has ever been one of opposition to the Empire and Canada participating in its greatness, as evidenced in the North-West Rebellion, South African War and the present European war.

DEFEND THE EMPIRE

But Sir Robert Borden and his supporters were not to be denied the right to defend the Empire and the good name of Canada by Sir Wilfrid's refusal to take his part and help to do so and with the support of his loyal followers he set about to enlist the co-operation of Empire-loving Liberals who refused to follow the disloyal dictates and policy of Sir Wilfrid, and so persistently and effectively did he advocate the cause of Canada and Empire, the justice of our cause and the necessity of supplying men, money and everything possible to reinforce and support our gallant soldiers overseas to whom Canada had pledged herself to the full extent of her resources and not only to our soldiers, but to their loved ones whom they left behind them when they voluntarily took up arms, that he was successful in gathering around him the best and ablest element of the Liberal party in Canada with whom he has formed a Union Government pledged to carry out the policy of Win-the-War.

APPEALS TO LOYAL CANADIANS

For such a Government and such a policy he now appeals to you as loyal Canadians for support, and as your candidate I pledge you if elected to give such Government my fullest and best support.

RESOLUTIONS

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted. Moved by Mayor Ketcheson, seconded by C. S. Rollins, and resolved, that at a meeting of Liberal-Conservative electors of West Hastings, held at Marmora the sixteenth day of November, 1917, for the purpose of selecting a candidate to represent the Riding in the next Parliament, comprising all the qualifications of a Union Government, Win-the-War candidate, the conscription of wealth, the economic use and the nationalizing of all Dominion railway and transportation services together with war industries, in the best manner possible, for the public welfare and interest, to win the war, this being the true spirit of the resolution;

And this meeting seeing no object of a contest in this Riding at the present time until after the war;

The present member, E. Guss Porter, K. C., being the logical candidate of the Riding at present, and combining all the qualifications necessary in retaining such position, having performed his duties during the various terms as a member for this Riding faithfully and earnestly to the absolute satisfaction of his services were called and with honor to himself.

We the commissioned delegates and electors assembled, pledge the unanimous support of this convention to support E. Guss Porter, K. C., at the forthcoming election as a member of Parliament, believing it would be to the true interests of all parties in the Riding, the unanimous election by acclamation of E. Guss Porter, K. C., as member until after the war.

Moved by Mr. Robt. Cook, M. P. P. and seconded by Mayor Ireland of Trenton, that this convention assembled to select a Unionist candidate for West Hastings hereby record their appreciation and confidence in the record already established by the Union Government and desire and wish to record our determination to give it our most hearty support.

The meeting was brought to a close by cheers for the King, Mr. Porter and the singing of the National Anthem.

Canada's Victory Loan

Issue of

$150,000,000 5½% Gold Bonds

Bearing Interest from December 1st, 1917, and offered in three maturities, the choice of which is optional with the subscriber, as follows:

5 year Bonds due December 1st, 1922
10 year Bonds due December 1st, 1927
20 year Bonds due December 1st, 1937

This Loan is authorized under Act of the Parliament of Canada, and both principal and interest are a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The amount of this issue is $150,000,000, exclusive of the amount (if any) paid by the surrender of bonds of previous issues. The Minister of Finance however, reserves the right to allot the whole or any part of the amount subscribed in excess of $150,000,000.

The Proceeds of this Loan will be used for War purposes only, and will be spent wholly in Canada.

Principal and Interest payable in Gold
Denominations: $50, $100, $500 and $1,000

Subscriptions must be in sums of $50 or multiples thereof.

Principal payable without charge at the Office of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General at Ottawa, or at the Office of the Assistant Receiver General at Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary and Victoria.

Interest payable, without charge, half-yearly, June 1st and December 1st, at any branch in Canada of any Chartered Bank.

Bearer or Registered Bonds

Bonds may be registered as to principal or as to principal and interest.

Script certificates, non-negotiable, or payable to bearer. In accordance with the choice of the applicant for registered or bearer bonds, will be issued after allotment in exchange for provisional receipts. When these script certificates have been paid in full, and payment endorsed thereon by the bank receiving the money they may be exchanged for bonds, when prepared, with coupons attached, payable to bearer, or registered as to principal, or for fully registered bonds when prepared, without coupons, in accordance with the application.

Delivery of interim certificates and of definitive bonds will be made through the Chartered Banks. Bearer bonds with coupons will be issued in denominations of $50, $100, $500, and $1,000, and may be registered as to principal only. Fully registered bonds, the interest on which is paid direct to the owner by Government cheque, will be issued in denominations of $1,000, $5,000, or any authorized multiple of $5,000.

Subject to the payment of 25 cents for each new bond issued, holders of fully registered bonds without coupons, will have the right to convert into bonds of the denomination of $1,000 with coupons, and holders of bonds with coupons will have the right to convert into fully registered bonds of authorized denominations without coupons, at any time, on application to the Minister of Finance.

Surrender of Bonds

Holders of Dominion of Canada Debenture Stock, due October 1st, 1918, and bonds of the three preceding Dominion of Canada War Loan Issues, have the privilege of surrendering their bonds in part payment for subscriptions to bonds of this issue, under the following conditions:—

Debenture Stock, due October 1st, 1918, at Par and Accrued Interest.
War Loan Bonds, due December 1st, 1922, at 97½ and Accrued Interest.
(The above will be accepted in part payment for bonds of any of the three maturities of this issue)
War Loan Bonds, due October 1st, 1931, at 97½ and Accrued Interest.
War Loan Bonds, due March 1st, 1937, at 98 and Accrued Interest.
(These will be accepted in part payment for bonds of the 1937 maturity ONLY of this issue.)

Bonds of the various maturities of this issue will, in the event of future issues of like maturity, or longer, made by the Government, other than issues made abroad, be accepted at par and accrued interest, as the equivalent of cash for the purpose of subscription to such issues.

Issue Price Par

Free from taxes—including any income tax—imposed in pursuance of legislation enacted by the Parliament of Canada.

Payment to be made as follows:

10% on December 1st, 1917
10% on January 2nd, 1918
20% on February 1st, 1918
20% on March 1st, 1918
20% on April 1st, 1918
20% on May 1st, 1918
A full half year's interest will be paid on 1st June, 1918.

The Bonds therefore give a net interest yield to the investor of about:

5.61% on the 20 year Bonds
5.68% on the 10 year Bonds
5.81% on the 5 year Bonds

All payments are to be made to a Chartered Bank for the credit of the Minister of Finance. Failure to pay any instalment when due will render previous payments liable to forfeiture, and the allotment to cancellation. Subscriptions accompanied by a deposit of 10% of the amount subscribed, may be forwarded through the medium of a Chartered Bank. Any branch in Canada of any Chartered Bank will forward subscriptions and issue provisional receipts.

In case of partial allotments the surplus deposit will be applied toward payment of the amount due on the January instalment. Subscriptions may be paid in full on January 2nd, 1918, or on any instalment due date thereafter under discount at the rate of 5¼% per annum. Under this provision payments of the balance of subscriptions may be made as follows:

If paid on January 2nd, 1918, at the rate of 80.10705 per $100.
If paid on February 1st, 1918, at the rate of 79.40050 per $100.
If paid on March 1st, 1918, at the rate of 78.72274 per $100.
If paid on April 1st, 1918, at the rate of 78.00000 per $100.

Forms of application may be obtained from any branch in Canada of any Chartered Bank, or from any Victory Loan Committee, or member thereof. The books of the Loan will be kept at the Department of Finance, Ottawa.

Applications will be made in due course for the listing of this issue on the Montreal and Toronto Stock Exchanges.

Subscription Lists will close on or before December 1st, 1917.

AN OPEN LETTER

Belleville, 22nd November, 1917.

TO THE LADIES OF WEST HASTINGS:

The mother, wife, widow, daughters and sisters of Canadian heroes who have gone overseas to fight for the battle for freedom and liberty, right and justice and civilization of the world will for the first time be privileged to exercise the right to vote in the General Election to be held on the 17th of December next. Their names are now being enrolled on the Voters' Lists for that purpose. The sorrow and suffering those women have endured and the sacrifices they have made no words of mine could adequately describe—suffice it to say that the granting of the franchise is no adequate compensation, but at least it is an acknowledgement of the justice of your right to have a say as to what shall be the fate of your men and boys.

The Government of Sir Robert Borden, in which I had the honor of being the member for West Hastings, recognizing your right, passed the legislation which gives each of you the right to vote in this election.

No more sacred duty could be placed upon these ladies than that of exercising their right to vote and to vote in such a way and for such a candidate as will bring the greatest help to your men and boys and the greatest comfort to yourselves. Sir Robert Borden's Union Government promises you the only hope for relief of the men at the front and the return of your loved ones to your home and fireside. I am the chosen candidate of that Government in this election to advocate your cause, and I solemnly promise to stand by you and do all I can. Many of you during the past three years have had occasion to make use of my services in regard to your husband, your sons or yourselves, which you know has always been promptly and willingly and without any charge or fee given. You know how faithfully I have looked after the interests of returned men and boys in filling every position in the public service that has become vacant by one of them. I shall always use my best efforts and abilities in the same way. My opponent, Mr. R. J. Graham, poses as a supporter of the Union Government of Sir Robert Borden, but he has not the approval of that Government, and I have, and if any of you have been or are employed by him it is because it is to his own personal gain that you are employed and you have given faithful labor for all the pay you got and you are under no obligation to him. Nor do I wish it inferred that you are under any obligation to me. You know whether you want your men and boys back or not. You know who can help you to get them back, and I pledge you that I will do everything I can to help win the war and hasten the return of your husband or son or other relative who already have covered themselves with undying glory, back to their happy homes and to a grateful Canada.

In fulfilling your sacred duty I most respectfully ask you for your vote and influence in my behalf.

I have the honor to be,
Your obedient servant,
E. GUSSE PORTER.

WAS A FROSTY MEETING

R. J. Graham's Meeting in Stirling Opera House on Thursday Evening of Last Week Lacked Enthusiasm—House Only About Two-Thirds Full

The Belleville Ontario would have us believe that the Electors of Stirling showed enthusiasm at Mr. R. J. Graham's meeting on Thursday night, and that the Opera House was packed to the doors. The facts are, that lack of enthusiasm was very much in evidence. The house was not packed as the Ontario reports, it being scarcely two-thirds full and more than half of these were women and children. The discussions were not interesting enough to hold the small audience throughout the meeting and a number left before it was over.

If the people were so enthusiastic why was Mr. Graham unable to get a man in Stirling to act as chairman. One had to be imported, Mr. S. Burrows of Belleville acting in that capacity.

Mr. Graham the candidate, A. S. White, Manager of Marsh & Henthorn Co., Ltd., J. S. Higgs, Manager of Steel Co. of Canada Ltd., W. M. Mackintosh of the Mackintosh Rubber Co., who seemed to interest the children with his funny (?) jokes, and A. Abbott, Barrister of Belleville were the speakers. They received the applause of three persons in the audience. Even the Belleville band failed to draw a crowd to the Opera House.

In Flanders Fields

Two men were arguing. One claimed he had heard in Calgary the most stirring appeal for the Victory War Loan. The other said he had heard a better—in Sherbrooke, P. Q. A third man, taking his cigar from his mouth, said: "No, the best appeal for Victory Bonds doesn't once mention their name. Listen!" and he read from a clipping the poem by John McCrae, of Montreal:

In Flanders fields the poppies blow
Between the crosses, row on row,
That mark our place, and in the sky
The larks, still bravely singing, fly, Scarce heard amid the guns below.

We are the dead; short days ago
We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow,
Loved and were loved, and now we lie
In Flanders fields.

Take up our quarrel with the foe!
To you from falling hands we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high!
If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders fields.

HYMENEAL

McMULLEN—SHARP

A very quiet wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Sharp, Rawdon, when their only daughter Pearl, was united in marriage to James Edward McMullen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Elijah McMullen of Rawdon Township.

The bride, unattended, entered the parlor on her father's arm, Miss McMullen playing the wedding music. Rev. J. T. Hall of St. Andrew's Church, Stirling conducted the marriage service. Only the immediate friends of contracting parties were present, and the presents were valuable and useful.

The bride was charmingly gowned in ivory chiffon silk with pearl and embroidery trimmings, and the groom's gift to the bride was a superb suit of pearls.

After the marriage service was concluded and congratulations received, the company sat down to a bountiful wedding breakfast, after which the bridal party motored to Sydney en route for Toronto and other points west and north, the bride travelling in a suit of brown cheviot with hat to match.

Mr. and Mrs. McMullen on their return will reside on the McMullen homestead on the 4th line of Rawdon. The many friends of the estimable young couple unite in wishing them a happy and successful life.

Do Your Hens Pay?

A convenient and simple form (to help tell whether the flock is paying or not.) has been worked out by the Poultry Division, Experimental Farm, Ottawa.

This form, which may be hung up in the poultry house or the kitchen, provides space for marking down each day, the number of eggs laid. It also indicates space for recording the number of eggs and poultry sold or eaten, also space to note the least bought or taken from the farm, and columns for entering cash receipts, expense figures and balances.

The form is a convenient place to keep your poultry account each month, and may be had on application to the Poultry Division, Experimental Farm, Ottawa, free of cost, providing a duplicate copy is sent to the Poultry Division each month.

If you want to know what your hens are doing, write for them.

HOW many Victory Bonds have you bought?

Have you put yourself to any real inconvenience to buy Victory Bonds?

Have you denied yourself some purely personal gratification, so that you could invest the money saved in Victory Bonds?

Have you realized the urgent need for personal self-sacrifice to make the Victory Loan a great success?

Until you have bought Victory Bonds to the very limit of your ability, you have not done your duty.

Campaign Closes Saturday Night

What Answer Will You Give?

ITALIANS HOLD TEUTONS FIRMLY

Terrific Struggle Still Rages
in the North.

United States - to Declare War On Austria.

Rome Cable - Prevailing opinion here in well-informed circles is that declaration of war between the United States and Austria will follow immediately upon the Allied conference in Paris.

The Italian War Office report said: "Yesterday there was intense artillery activity on the whole front of the coastal zone. The national navy and British monitors lent effective co-operation."

"In the afternoon the enemy three times made violent attacks on Monte Pertica, northwest of Monte Grappa. He was repulsed each time with severe losses. On Monte Tomba and Monte Monfenera the infantry actions were not renewed.

"Our aircraft carried out effective bombing operations, and engaged in several duels with hostile aeroplanes, as a result of which two enemy machines were downed."

ON THREE MAIN FRONTS.
Italian Army Headquarters in Northern Italy Cable - The heavy fighting which began on Sunday in the north continues with great violence, controlled by the slopes of Monte Pertica. Enemy masses alternate fierce artillery attacks with infantry assaults, which have been repulsed by the heroic bravery of the Italian troops. The battle is taking over a wide range and gradually concentrating on three main fronts. It is not a question of gaining or losing kilometers, but it is a gigantic battle in which Italy's part in the war with its resultant effect on the Allies, is largely at stake.

An Austro-German offensive, which began three weeks ago, has not diminished, but is steadily intensifying. Frontal attacks thus far have failed on the Piave and the northern Asiago plain. This compels the enemy to attempt to make a breach by one of the Italian flanks, as the only resort after the checking of the frontal attacks. This explains the gradual shifting of the front to three main divisions: First, along the Piave; second, from the Piave to the Brenta; third, from the Brenta across the Asiago plateau.

The enemy's advance on the Piave and the menace to Venice is fairly well checked after the bloody repulses of the last few days, but the Austrians and Germans are still on the east bank of the river, with formidable forces pressing against the narrow stream.

WHERE CONDITIONS ARE GRAVE.
Behind Asiago, the Italians have made a splendid resistance, and the enemy attack has been worn down after he had suffered losses estimated at a good part of three divisions. But in the central section between the Piave and the Brenta, where the mountains meet the plains and the river valleys, that the greatest effort is now being made, near Monte Monfenera and Monte Tomba. This northern sector is very vital to the eastern front along the Piave, as a breach at the north would bring the enemy the rear of the Piave line, which, thus far, has resisted all frontal attacks. For this reason attention is being anxiously directed towards the north, not only as regards the immediate result there, but in connection with its effect on the Piave line.

ARMISTICE, NOT SEPARATE PEACE

Russia Will Fight Germans
If They Decline.

"Red" Looters Foiled by Bank Heads.

Petrograd Cable - The Russian Government yesterday ordered General Dukhonin, the commander-in-chief, to open negotiations for an armistice with the commanders of the enemy armies. The proposal to negotiate peace was officially conveyed to the Ambassadors of the Allied nations at Petrograd.

Petrograd Cable - The formal offer of an armistice to all the belligerents, which the Council of People's Commissaries of the All-Russian Workers' and Soldiers' Congress proposes to make shortly, is not intended to forestall an effort toward a separate peace. On the contrary, it is declared definitely here that not only is a separate peace not desired, but that the rejection of the armistice proposal by Germany, even should it be acceptable to the Allies, will but mean a continuation of the war by the new revolutionary army with vigor against German imperialism, until the German people, "inspired by Russian democratic ideas," overthrow their rulers and demand peace.

TRIED PLAIN ROBBERY.
London Cable - A body of troops and Red Guards, under command of Commissary Menzinsky and Col. Muraviev, commander of the Petrograd garrison, appeared before the State Bank in Petrograd yesterday, according to a Reuters dispatch, and demanded that 10,000,000 rubles be handed over within ten minutes. Menzinsky declared that anyone who opposed the execution of the order would be treated as a traitor. Officials of the bank and delegates of the Town Council and the Peasants' Union assembled in a room in which the doors and principal safes were guarded by sentries from the Semenofsky regiment and refused unanimously to cross the demand, whatever the consequences.

At the expiration of the ten minutes, further parleying disclosed that neither Menzinsky nor Muraviev had any order of requisition from the Council of Maximalist Commissioners. Delegates from the front who accompanied the soldiers joined in the protest against the invasion of the bank. Muraviev eventually withdrew his troops.

After a conference with the Council of Commissioners, Muraviev returned with a message that the Council demanded that the demand addressed to the bank and the form in which it was made was not in accordance with the law. He expressed regret for his share in the incident.

LOST FOR THE REBELS.
Petrograd Cable - The archives in the storehouse of the National Police Department have been turned over officially to the new authorities, including money aggregating 500,000 rubles.

The wife of Premier Kerensky is reported to have been arrested by the Red Guard while tearing down Bolshevik posters in which Kerensky was referred to in uncompromising terms.

CHASED THROUGH THE MINE FIELDS

British Admiralty Tells of Saturday's Fight.

Three Hun Cruisers Destroyed or Badly Hit.

London Cable - The British Admiralty this evening issued a report dealing with the engagements Saturday off Heligoland. The statement says: "The British forces sighted shortly before eight o'clock in the morning four light cruisers, accompanied by destroyers and minesweepers or patrol vessels. The latter made off to the north-east, a destroyer sinking one by gunfire. A number of the survivors were rescued."

"The enemy's light cruisers and destroyers turned off toward Heligoland and were pursued by the British advanced forces through the mine fields. A running engagement occurred under a heavy smoke screen until four enemy battleships were sighted. The British advanced forces then broke off the enemy engagement and turned back to their supporters outside the mine fields.

"The enemy did not follow our vessels outside the mine fields. Our vessels report that during the action they scored a number of hits on the enemy. One light cruiser was seen to explode, a heavy explosion was observed on another, while a third was dropped behind, evidently damaged, when the action was broken off.

"The destruction of these ships was prevented by the mine fields. Our vessels report that during the action they scored a number of hits on the enemy. One light cruiser was seen to explode, a heavy explosion was observed on another, while a third was dropped behind, evidently damaged, when the action was broken off.

FRENCH ALSO ON OFFENSIVE

Attack On 6-Mile Front
North of the Aisne.

May Compel Retreat On a Long Front.

London Cable - The French this afternoon launched an attack on their portion of the Rheims-St. Gobain-Cambrai salient. The offensive is on a six-mile front north of the Aisne.

While no details of this movement have been received, it doubtless has the object of pushing back the German line in the former sector and northward in the latter region toward Laon, strategic moves which, if successful, doubtless will compel that portion of the German line north of St. Quentin, which is still intact, to fall back precipitately eastward.

The French thrust may mean that the two Allies are making a combined operation to break in this salient and compel a German retreat between Verdun and Lille. This would mean the evacuation of practically all of Northern France.

The French troops to-day attacked in the region to the north of Craonne and Berry-au-Bac on a front of about two-thirds of a mile and penetrated the German positions to an average depth of about 400 yards, capturing strong defenses and taking 175 German prisoners, according to the French official communication issued this evening.

The communication says: "West of the Meuse River we attacked to-day at about 3 o'clock on the salient of the German line to the south of Juicourt, on a front of about one kilometer and to an average depth of 400 metres our troops reached all their objectives and captured strong enemy defenses."

BRITISH WIDEN THE SALIENT IN DEFENSES OF CAMBRAI

London Cable - Thursday's British official communication reads:

"On the southern battle front the day has been spent in consolidating the large area over which our troops advanced during the last two days. This has been successfully carried out, except at Fontaine Notre Dame, where we captured this morning, but the enemy subsequently retaken it by a counter-attack.

"Much credit is due to the transportation service for the rapidity with which the concentration for the operations of the last few days was effected. Roads and railways, both broad gauge and light, have been developed, and, since the advance, extended in a manner which has contributed largely to the success of our preparations and subsequent operations."

London Cable - The British are crying for reinforcements, their manoeuvre which has as its objective the encircling and capture of the important railroad junction of Cambrai, in Northern France. Cavalry, tanks and infantry are operating along the line running from west of Cambrai to south of the town. All of the vast area captured the past two days has been retained and consolidated with the exception of Fontaine Notre Dame, a village captured this morning but subsequently lost as the result of a counter-attack.

In addition to heavy losses in men killed or wounded more than 9,000 Germans had been made prisoner up to midday Thursday. The British casualties are declared to be considerably less than the number of prisoners taken by General Byng's men. To the south of Juicourt, in the Aisne region, where the French troops took several positions from the German line Wednesday, a counter-attack which cost the enemy serious losses has been effectively blocked, and General Petain's troops are still holding their vantage.

9,000 PRISONERS.
Reuters's correspondent telegraphs from British Headquarters in France under date of Thursday evening, Nov. 29:

"We have not yet reached the limit of our victory. The success grows hourly. The total of prisoners is approaching nine thousand. "Great stretches of new country and fresh villages are being captured. Besides increasing in depth the wedge is spreading at the base. A counter-attack, a heavy mist preventing an aeroplane observation. Nevertheless, the airman continue to fly over the battleground, penetrating far into the enemy territory at the level of the tree tops.

VILLAGES ARE INTACT.
"The latest village captured is Cantolung, and the troops are now in the neighborhood of Bourbon and Moeucourt, while fighting is promising in the region at the base. "The enemy attempted only a few small counter-attacks between Rumilly and Noyelles with troops hurried up for the purpose, but all were easily repulsed.

"At Cantolung and beyond Maisnières we have broken into sections of the last line of defence, and now hold the Hindenburg line with the famous tunnel, where the counter-attacks have been heavy and pressed with great determination. But we hold everything taken.

"Our casualties are almost incredibly small. The troops are most cheerful, and are roaming over new and unspoiled country, where villages have not been destroyed and tilled fields abound."

THE SALIENT WIDENED.
R. T. Small, telegrapher from British Headquarters this afternoon, writes: "British cavalry, tanks and infantry were to-day operating along a line running from west of Cambrai to the south of that town. Meanwhile, the offensive had been successfully prosecuted on the left and in the region of Bullecourt the German line had been pushed back considerably, thereby widening the salient which the British have driven into the enemy territory to the south and southwest of Cambrai. The attack around Bullecourt was a complete success, and something like 700 prisoners were captured here.

"Sanguinary hand-to-hand fighting has taken place at many points. During the night three German counter-attacks in Noyelles and Rumilly were beaten off and another thrust by the enemy near Bullecourt was smashed. "The number of prisoners is increasing steadily. More than eight thousand were in the hands of the British last night, and large contingents have been coming back during the early morning hours. This morning the cavalry, tanks and infantry at many points west and south of Cambrai were less than three miles from the outskirts of the town."

THE GERMAN RETREAT.
Berlin Cable - The text of the German statement reads: "The battle south-west of Cambrai continues. By the massed use of tanks and infantry and by launching his cavalry the enemy sought to effect a break through, which was denied him on the day's attack. He did not succeed in his objective. Although he was able to gain a little ground beyond our front lines, he was not able to attain greater successes.

"The enemy troops, which were effectively caught by the fire of our artillery and machine guns and greatly thinned, encountered the counter-thrust of our brave infantry. "On the western bank of the Scheldt our troops drove back the enemy to Annoux and Fontaine, and on the eastern bank to his positions of departure, south of Rumilly. "Before and behind our line, distributed over the whole battlefield, the wreckage of tanks which have been shot to pieces. Our aviators and motor guns took a prominent part in their destruction.

"At nightfall fighting activity on the battlefield diminished. South of Vendhuill the enemy did not repeat his attacks."

THE FRENCH FRONT. Heavy Artillery Action Again the Feature.

Paris, Cable - The War Office announcement to-night reads: "During the course of the day the artillery fighting took on the character of quite marked intensity in the region north of the Chemin-des-Dames, between the Aisne and the Meuse and at various points of our Champagne front. An enemy attack on our positions in the sector of Maisons de Champagne failed.

"On the right bank of the Meuse the artillery action was violent about mid-afternoon in the sector north of Chateau de la Marais. "The British War Office report says: "On November 21 quite marked artillery activity was displayed in the region of Lens and the Aisne. A strong German reconnoitering party attempted to break through our advanced positions in the neighborhood of Lens. Our tanks, which were immediately started, were marked by light artillery activity in the sector of Lens and the Aisne, and by quite intense artillery activity at other points."

ITALIANS ARE HOLDING THE TEUTONS BACK

Stand Firm in Desperate Battles Along the Northern Border.

AGAINST ODDS

All Along, the Enemy Has Three Men to Two of Defenders.

Headquarters of the Italian Army in Northern Italy Cable - The fourth Italian army, under General Robilant, is meeting the full force of the tremendous shock of the enemy has concentrated between the Piave and Brenta Rivers. In authoritative quarters the correspondent was told that the enemy forces delivering this blow are in the proportion of three to two as compared with the Italian forces and this is practically the relative strength of the two wings west of the Brenta, where General Pecori commands the first Italian army, and the right wing along the Piave, where the Duke of Aosta holds the enemy as in a vise.

It is in this position that the Fourth army is experiencing the intensest action, with attacks following in rapid succession. Reports early in the day were satisfactory, as the main fighting front was further north, on the enemy's positions, though at one point the enemy succeeded in breaking through the Italian lines on the foothills of Monte Fontana Secca, compelling the reformation of the defensive line a little further back.

These fortifications are marked by the bloodiest fighting, with the enemy reserves coming forward for three successive attacks, which were met at the point of the bayonet and driven back.

Just west of this main field of action the Italian first army rushed the enemy positions near the Brenta River, and in two attacks and counter-attacks held the occupied ground, which was strewn with enemy corpses.

On the lower Piave the enemy fought in the bushes on the west bank of Zanon, and at 700 metres from the river, who are being raked by the artillery, as they have tried to set up a line of machine-guns across the small area they occupy.

REACH MAXIMUM INTENSITY.
An officer accompanied by a civilian observer has just arrived here from the northern fighting front, where they have been watching the operations in the west of the point where the enemy's mass attacks were reaching their maximum intensity to-day. The centre of this section is along the Brenta River, leading to the large city of Bassano, and thence widening, fan-shaped, into the Venetian plains.

The observers were in the army automobile narrowly escaped falling into the hands of the enemy. The fighting ground gave evidence of the intensity of the struggle during the last few days. The positions and trenches lately occupied by the Austrians were strewn with bodies, which lay half-covered with snow, as it was impossible to bury the slain because of the rapid shifting of both lines.

The most desperate fighting was again at Monte Meletta, where the Italians held one side of the entrance and the Austro-Germans the other. The enemy's object was to advance through the two valleys of Frenzia and Valstagna which open directly into Bassano and the plains. Plans found on Austrian officers on the battlefield gave precise directions of the hour and minute at which the advance along these two valleys to Bassano shall be carried out, as though the enemy believed no doubt existed of his successful advance.

THE ITALIAN OFFENSIVE.
The Rome War Office reports "Yesterday the enemy launched several attacks between the Brenta and the Piave Rivers. He was singularly repulsed with the bayonet at the river lines of St. Martin, where he left prisoners and machine guns in our hands."

"At Monte Pertica the enemy fruitlessly renewed the attack three times. He was arrested completely by artillery fire at Monte Monfenera. A few outstanding elements of our advanced lines on Monte Fontana Secca were reached.

"During the early hours of last night enemy masses on the Asiago plateau attacked our positions at Camera and Meletta d'Avanti, but our troops, offering heroic resistance and counter-attacking promptly, drove them back to the positions whence they started."

"The summits of Monte Fontana and Monte Spaurica, on the northern Italian front between the Brenta and the Piave Rivers, were captured," the Berlin War Office report states.

BAYONETS AS KNIVES.

Italian Army Headquarters Cable - The action ebbs and flows around the Italian-held line mountains just west of the river—Monte Tomba, Monte Monfenera and Monte Cornella. Monte Monfenera is just on the edge of the river, and it is here that some of the most desperate fighting has occurred. It is the key to the situation at that point the river turns into the Venetian Plains, and the whole battle hinges on control of the river passage leading to the plains.

The first assault began five days ago when von Velow's Germans on the lower Piave were swung northward for this supreme blow. The attacks have intensified steadily each day until yesterday and to-day, when they reached their maximum.

Beginning with artillery preparation, the Austro-German infantry advances came in successive waves, first at the northernmost mountain, Cornella, where the Como Brigade of Italians held the line until crowded back by superior numbers. The enemy then took positions back of the town of Quero, and violent artillery and infantry attacks were centred on Monfenera and Tomba.

Much of the fighting in the mountain was at close quarters, with bayonet charges and desperate hand-to-hand struggles along an extended front. Through Monday, Tuesday and today charge followed charge, and counter-attack followed attack. In some of the bloodiest fighting ground has changed hands three or four times.

USE BAYONETS AS KNIVES.

At the little village of Naranzine, on the slopes of Monte Monfenera, the enemy first gained lodgment and sought to surround the large Italian force, but was thrown back by a splendid rally of the Italian line, which swept forward with cheers until the position was clear. It was the bloodiest kind of fighting, with bayonets first, and then with bayonets wrenched from their sockets and used as double-edged knives.

Again the enemy massed forces higher up on Monte Monfenera, backed by batteries concentrated from all points. Before this intense shellfire the Italian infantry gave ground slowly until the upper slopes were abandoned. But the fighting goes on with unabated desperation, and it is still too soon to say what the outcome may be of this latest blow to break through to the western Venetian plains.

The conduct of the Italian troops is above all praise. They are contesting every foot of the way, fighting like tigers and with spirit and confidence, even in the face of greatly superior numbers.

BRITISH WIN IS HEARTENING

Has Good Effect On Wall Street To-day.

Trade Predicts Lower Prices
On Coarse Grains.

(Supplied by Tomenson, Ferwood & Co., Merchants Bank Bldg.)

Chicago Report - Leading longs in corn are getting out, and the largest shorts are covering on an advancing market. It is regarded as for the best interest of the entire trade to go slowly, on the belief that an evening up of present prices and dropping of present large operations should be done. It is realized that no economic benefit can come to the market from extensive trading by any individual. The impression prevails that the market has had all the bulge it is entitled to for the present, unless there should be more aggressive covering. One trouble with the market is the absence of balance wheel and the disposition on the part of the bears to overstep on weak spots, as the closest market observers men it.

GRAIN OPINIONS.

Bartlett Frazier: There was some good selling of corn around the high point, and we believe that with the amount of short covering which has occurred, that the market is in shape to work lower. Oats ought to get fair reaction.

Ware & Leland: It is likely that reports of corn will have to increase materially and the market will be affected to any appreciable extent.

MORNING STOCK LETTER.
New York Cable - The British victory, which seems to grow, is bound to have a strong effect on the market. It will give the backbone to the market. We look for much higher prices in the latter part of the week. Some of the railroads are high enough. Reading has had a 25 per cent advance, and is selling as high as it should in the present market. Pennsylvania should be the do to buy on the weakness like yesterday.

LOSSES LESS THAN CAPTIVES

Great Record of British Troops in New Drive.

Italian Situation Much More Cheerful.

London Cable - The British casualties in the advance toward Cambrai are reported to be very considerably less than the number of prisoners taken. It was announced to-day by Major-General F. H. Maurice, Chief Director of Military Operations at the War Office.

The British, said Gen. Maurice, had advanced to a depth of 6 1/2 miles at the farthest point on a front of ten miles, which was a record advance in 24 hours on the western front, and was further than the progress made during three months' fighting at Ypres.

The victory at Cambrai, Gen. Maurice continued, was the direct result of the fighting at Ypres and therefore, the men who fought at Ypres deserve equal credit for the Cambrai success.

"We were able to give the Germans a surprise blow at Cambrai," said General Maurice, "because they had skinned this sector like they did along the remainder of the line, in order to prevent us from taking Flanderschelde. After we took Flanderschelde they brought up a division from the Russian front in an effort to retake it."

"The fighting in the Cambrai operations all in the morning, enabling the cavalry to assist the tanks and infantry. There are no German defenses prepared in this sector, and their next line evidently is beyond Cambrai."

"On the Italian front the chances of the Germans breaking through are diminishing hourly. The situation there is more satisfactory than it was a week ago, although it would be premature for me to say that Venice is safe."

"We have, however, reached the stage where there is every reason to have complete confidence in the situation. The Italians have been enabled to bring up guns, ammunition and supplies in ever-increasing quantities and every hour's time gained by them means a more favorable outlook. The time is drawing nearer when the Franco-British reinforcements will be brought into play."

Gen. Maurice announced that the operations in Palestine, near Jerusalem, were continuing with complete success. The British troops were still six miles distant from Jerusalem, fighting in the hills of Judea, he said, and it would be unwise to make an anticipatory statement regarding the fall of the city.

LONG FLIGHT TO HARRY THE TURK

Big Plane Flew From England to Raid Constantinople.

Made a Series of Eight Stops En Route.

London Cable - The Admiralty announces that a successful air attack in the vicinity of Constantinople has been fully accomplished by a large British bombing aeroplane, which flew from England to British base in the Mediterranean in a series of eight flights. The stopping places included Lyons and Rome, and the total distance covered was nearly two thousand miles.

The machine was actually in the air thirty-one hours. This is believed to be a world record for a cross-country journey, and for the weight carried. During some parts of the flight strong winds and heavy rainstorms were experienced, and there was one stretch of 200 miles over a mountainous country, where it would be impossible for any machine to land.

MANY CANADIANS RUNNING TANKS

London Cable - The Associated Press has received the following telegram from France: "Canada will be greatly interested in the splendidly successful attack on the River Scarpe. The credit of the victory goes to General Byng, the Canadians' former commander. With him are some Dominion Staff officers who are selected to go on Staff officers with him to the front, who, since the Pasmehdele battle, joined Byng's splendid army. The tanks, which broke through the German defenses, have hundreds of Canadian soldiers, who are becoming as popular with the Dominion troops as the Flying Corps."

ITALY'S TROOPS ARE CONFIDENT

Rome Cable - With all the Arctic rigors and bloody work at the front, the morale and confidence of the Italian troops is at the top notch. A brigade of Alpine troops, seen passing the front. They did not wear those jaunty Alpine hats with a cock's feather, as one sees them in Rome, but were figures in gray, topped with steel. They swung forward rapidly, as though eager to arrive, and to every enquiry they replied with confidence, lacking every trace of vainglory. It is this confidence which is Italy's greatest asset at this critical moment, for the heroic defenders really believe that they will hold the enemy back.

E. SYDNEY BENNETT, Editor and Prop.
Telephone 75

THURSDAY, NOV. 29, 1917

The Belleville Intelligencer is seem-ly perturbed over the fact that there were no Liberals present at the union convention held in Madoc on Thursday last. However, it is not likely that they hung any crepe on the office door.
What really ruffled the Intelligencer's feelings was the fact that Mr. W. B.
Northrup was not the choice of that convention. The Intelligencer has grown so accustomed to everything going Belle-ville's way that it cannot understand why there should ever be a change With all due respect to Mr. Northrup, who is recognized as one of the cleanest and ablest politicians in Canada to-day, the truth of the matter is, the electors of East Hastings have grown weary of being represented by a man living outside the constituency, and it seems to us that Mr.
Northrup showed very poor judgment when he tried to intimidate the delegates by telling them that he was the union candidate and only a union candidate would be endorsed by Sir Robert Borden and entitled to the votes of the boys overseas. Mr. T. H. Thompson of Madoc was the almost unanimous choice of the convention, and if he is elected, as he most assuredly will, we venture to say that no more consistent supporter of the Union Government will be found in the House of Commons.—Banner Times.

An Appeal For Sailors

On December 8th, an appeal will be made throughout the Dominion by the Navy League of Canada to raise funds for the relief of British and Canadian sailors and their dependents, and for the Sailors Homes, Institutes and Hospitals in Canada and throughout the Empire.
It is earnestly hoped that the appeal will meet with a generous response.

The Navy League of Canada is a branch of the Navy League of the Empire, and in addition to the object expressed in the appeal now being made, its work includes the spreading of knowledge and inspiration regarding the British Navy and the British Mercantile Marine.
It is supported by many of the most famous men and women in Great Britain, while its Canadian branch is under the patronage, and has the hearty sympathy of the Duke of Devonshire.

The present war has brought home to everybody as never before the immense value, and indeed the absolute necessity of Britain's naval power. But for the British Navy the Canadian farmer would have his crops on his hands to-day, the Canadian manufacturer would have a closed shop and the Canadian business man would be almost without business to do. An appeal on behalf of the men of the navy, therefore should and will be received with ready sympathy by the Canadian people, who now realize as never before that the foundation of the Empire's strength is in the Empire's ships.

But not less heroic—perhaps almost more heroic—than the work of the navy in the war has been the work of the sailors of the Mercantile Marine, who have risked their lives, and are risking them daily and nightly in order to keep the commerce of the Empire moving.

These men have no Government separation allowance or Government pensions, and their families and dependents deserve the support of every citizen because of the work the merchant sailors have done.

Branches of the Navy League are handling the appeal where such branches exist, but the Daughters of the Empire everywhere throughout Canada are also identified with it. Patriotic bodies of all kinds might well make a special effort for December 8th on behalf of the Empire's sailors.

Support Approved Union Govern- ment Candidate

The Toronto Globe in its issue of the 23rd inst. advises Canadians who wish to prevent the calamity of repeal of the Military Service Act by Sir Wilfrid Laurier "to rally to 'the candidate who bears the Government's seal of approval.'" Mr. Porter is the only candidate in West Hastings who has the Union Government's seal of approval. A vote for him is the only way to support Union Government.

MENIE

Mrs. Wm. Rennie and Miss Jean Donald visited Mrs. Roy Walker on Thursday.

Hastings County $1,421,400.00

Just as we go to press we received the following telegram from W. B. Evans, Hastings County Organizer.

Belleville, Nov. 28th, 1917

To the LEADER: Canada's Victory loan total result for Hastings County up to Tuesday evening
Nov. 27th, 1917, $1,421,400.00. Only three days left, will the people of every town, village and township in this county in every home and farm come to the aid of their country and buy to the limit of their resources, let us make our dollars back our boys at the front. The last day is Saturday, don't wait till then if you can help it. The canvassers in this District are—Dr. Bissonnette, Thomas Montgomery, T. J. Thompson. Headquarters office Belleville will be open till 12 Saturday night.

Stirling Cheese Company

HELP VICTORY LOAN BY PAYING YOUR BILLS

There are thousands of retail merchants throughout Canada, especially in the smaller towns and villages, who would gladly subscribe, or subscribe more, for Victory Bonds, if it were not for the amount of money they are carrying on their books and the uncertainty as to when much of it will be paid. The farmers who deal with these local merchants, are not the least blameable in this respect, for they are apt to let their accounts run until convenient to pay them, while the merchant, knowing that payment ultimately is certain, is unwilling to press them.

If everyone during the last week of the campaign would make an effort to pay his bill to the local merchant, the latter would be glad to increase his Victory Loan subscription. Thousands of farmers have received substantial sums of money for their crops and are able to pay their accounts before December 1st just as well as afterward.
If you are one of them, see that you pay up during the last week in November and thus give your merchant the opportunity he no doubt desires to subscribe for all the Victory Bonds that he possibly can, and do not forget to subscribe yourself to the utmost of your power.
Patriotism demands it and so does self-interest, for only by a heavy over-subscription of the Victory Bond issue can the prosperity of the farmers, the retailers and all other classes of Canada's population be assured.

An Apron Social

The River Valley W. I. are giving an Apron Social on Friday night Nov. 30th, at the School House. Aprons are being sent out to a number of ladies with the following invitation:

This neat little apron is sent to you
And this is what we wish you'd do
The little pocket you plainly see
For a special purpose is meant to be Now measure your waist-line inch by inch
And see that the waist-line does not pinch
For each small inch you measure around
In the pocket put a copper round
The game is fair, you will admit Your waist, your money, we pocket it Then bring it to the school house at the hour of eight
The 30th, Nov. remember the date There'll be a good programme and lots of cheer
And a real good time you need not fear
While the money you pocket so freely pay
For the debt will be used in the Red Cross way.

Those who have not received an apron also gentlemen, admission 25c, children under twelve 10c. Pie will be served.
Everybody welcome.

MISS T. J. SMITH, Pres.
MISS FANNIE HEASMAN, Sec. Treas.

This has been a banner year. Farmers have all had good crops and high prices and should be able to settle all outstanding accounts this fall.

Owing to the war and conditions of the money market we are going to ask all our customers in fact we must insist on having all accounts settled in full by cash or note before 1918.

To the Electors of West Has- tings:

Having been solicited to become a candidate for West Hastings in the present election by many prominent electors of the constituency both Conservatives and Liberals, and having been advised that the executive of the Conservative party refused to join the executive of the Liberal party in endeavoring to avoid an election by the selection of a candidate that would be acceptable to both parties, I have decided to offer myself for election, without any political party recognition, as an independent supporter of the present Government, to win the War, and solicit the support of all those who think it is time to drop party politics and unite our efforts to overthrow the Germans. I believe in this most serious time that we should adopt what the Romans did, "when none were for the party and all were for the State.

[Signed]

R. J. GRAHAM.

Notice

The annual meeting of L.O.L. No. 110 will be held on Friday Dec. 7th. A full attendance of members is requested.
J. S. MORTON, Secy. GEO. H. KINISTON, Secretary.

Mr. F. Guss Porter is the only candidate in West Hastings who has the Union Government's seal of approval and he should have the hearty support of the people in the coming election. A vote for him is the only way to support Union Government.

Trenton, Ont., Mayor's Office, Nov. 20th 1917.

To The Intelligence:

Last week in discussing the political situation in reference to candidates in West Hastings, the Ontario had the following lines in reference to myself: "The latest possibility along this line is Mr. W. H. Ireland, Mayor of Trenton, who is being seriously proposed by influential backers in that town, as an independent Liberal candidate. Mayor Ireland is exceedingly popular in his own town and well known outside. It has not been ascertained as yet whether he will favorably consider the proposal."

In a later issue, the Ontario was pleased to state that I had retired from the field and had announced myself as a supporter of R. J. Graham.

Permit me to say (1) that I never for a moment entertained the idea of being an independent Liberal candidate in West Hastings and (2) that I have not announced myself as a supporter of Mr. R. J. Graham.

W. H. IRELAND.

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. THOMAS SCOTT

1857-1917

The subject of this sketch, whose maiden name was Emma C. Lott, was born in the Township of Sidney, near Trenton, Ont., August 13th, 1857. She spent her girlhood days in the adjoining Township of Rawdon, where her parents resided for many years. Here she was happily married on November 14th, 1877, to her now sorrowing husband, and here she spent the early years of her married life. For the past fifteen years she resided in Wiaraton, Ont.

Following a severe operation ten years ago, a train of ills seemed to follow each other in almost continuous succession until it might be truly said from that time her life was that of an invalid.

She was converted in her early married life and shortly afterwards was instrumental in bringing her husband into a saving relationship with the Lord Jesus Christ. From that time forward she continued a consistent member of the Methodist Church.

Before she took to her bed in her last fatal illness, in answer to fervent and earnest prayer, she was wonderfully illuminated by an outpouring of the Divine Spirit enabling her to speak and sing with wonderful power and grace. The occasion will ever be a hallowed and inspiring memory to those who were present, as the influence left the most comforting assurance that she passed on the 31st day of October from a life of pain to one of glorious immortality.

Besides her husband there are left to mourn the loss of a most devoted and self-sacrificing mother, three sons, viz.:—Thos. J., Wilnot L., at home, and Bert, of Swan River, Man.; also three daughters, Mrs. J. P. Tinkens, of Wiaraton, Mrs. (Rev.) J. S. Cross, Sault St. Marie, Mich., and Ida M. at home. Beautiful floral tokens of sympathy and regard were in abundant profusion from the friends of the bereaved family.

A most impressive funeral service was conducted at the home by her pastor, the Rev. W. W. Prudham, basing his discourse on 1st Thess., 4th Chap., 13-18 verses, dwelling particularly on the words, "So shall we ever be with the Lord, therefore comfort ye one another with these words." By request he used her favorite hymn in closing the service, the last words of which are as follows:—

"Just a few more steps to follow
Just a few more days to roam
For the way grows more delightful
As I am drawing nearer home
When the storms of life are over
And the clouds have rolled away
I shall find the gates of Heaven
In the good old fashioned way."

Her remains rest in hope in the family plot in Bayview Cemetery, Wiaraton.

"BELA"

"Let them curse," said Bela. "Curse won't catch us. Already they rowed half an hour. Get tired!"

"They've got a spare man to change to," Sam reminded her. He was now a stout fellow, but he was not Bela. The manland ahead panted, freedom, not only freedom from his late masters, but freedom from her, too. Looking over their shoulders, they saw the steersman change to one of the oars. Thereafter the rowboat came on with renewed speed, but the stout seemed to draw steadily ahead. A sharp alarm rose. Bela, however, searching the wide sky and the water for weather signs, began to look anxious.

"What is it?" asked Sam.

"Wind going down," she replied, grimly.

Enough, presently the heavy sail began to sag, and they could feel the dugout lose way under their feet. At the same moment their pursuers perceived the slackening of the wind and shouted in a different key.

The wind freshened again, and once more died away. Now the rowboat began to overhaul them. It was nipping and tucked down the lake between sail and oar.

The shore they were making for began to loom nearer, but the puffs of wind were coming at longer and longer intervals, and finally they ran into a heavy calm, though the muffled strains of the wind all about them, a situation to drive pursued sailors frantic.

Bela paddled manfully, but her single blade was no match for two long oars. The sail was a handicap now. Bela had staked everything on it, and they could not take it down without expediting the dug-out. The oarsmen came up rapidly with derisive shouts in anticipation of a speedy triumph.

"You've got your gun," muttered Sam. "You're a better shot than any of us. Use it while you have the advantage."

She shook her head. "No shoot. Too much trouble make already."

"Plug their boat, then," said Sam. "They die in cold water if boat sink."

"We might as well jump overboard, then," he said, bitterly.

"Let's," she cried, suddenly. "Wind coming!"

Behind the rowboat a dark blue streak was creeping over the surface of the lake.

"Ah, wind, come quick! Come quick!" Bela murmured, imploringly, for candle for the altar. My rabbit-skin robe to Pere Lacombe!

At the same time she did not cease paddling.

The oarsmen saw the breeze coming, too, and turning their backs, sent the water flying from their oars. They managed to keep ahead of it. Both boats were now within a furlong of the river-head. The race seemed over. The rowboat drew even with the dug-out, and they looked into their pursuers' faces, red with exertion and distorted in cruel triumph.

The steersman was Joe. "Don't stop," he yelled to the heaving oarsmen, "or she'll give us the slip yet! Get ahead and cut her off! You damned ditch-washer, we've got you now!" he added, for Sam's benefit.

With a sharp crack, Big Jack's oar broke off short. He capsize backward into the water, knocking him off his seat as well. At the same instant the whirling breeze came up and the blanket belled out.

Shand and Jack were for the moment inextricably entangled in the bottom of the boat. Emotional Joe cursed and stamped and tore at his hair like a lunatic. Loud laughter broke from Sam and Bela as they slipped away.

Joe, beside himself, snatched up his gun and opened fire. A bullet went through the blanket. Bela and Sam instinctively ducked. Perhaps they were more likely they did not realize their danger until it was over. Other shots followed, but Joe was shooting wild. He could not aim directly at Sam, because Bela was between. He emptied his magazine without doing any damage.

In the reaction that followed Bela and Sam laughed. In that moment they were one.

Fools funny to have a fellow slinging lead at you, eh?" said Sam.

"Must be as he is grown," answered Bela.

A few minutes later the river revived them. There was a straight cut of a third of a mile, followed by a long, winding, corkscrew bend all the way to the head of the lake. Thirty miles or more. Out in the lake behind them, their pursuers

Sam, mockingly. "I'm going the other way. To the head of the lake."

"I'll be low till they're thrown off the scent. I'll walk around the north shore."

"You stay with me little while, pretty soon we meet police coming up," she suggested. "Then they can't touch you."

"Much obliged," replied Sam. "I've no fancy to be jumped on at night and tied up like a roasting fowl."

"I promise I not do that again," said Bela.

"Sure!" retorted Sam. "No doubt you've got plenty other tricks just as good."

"If you look at me you see I speak truth," she murmured. "I your friend, Sam."

The threatened break in her voice brought all his old disquiet surging up again. As he put it, he suspected her of "trying to put one over on him again." "I don't want to look at you," he returned, with a harsh laugh.

An adverse puff of wind blew them into an overhanging willow-bush, which became entangled with the sail and the stay-ropes. Sam saw his chance. Seizing the branches, he began to swing ashore at the cost only of wet ankles.

A sharp cry was wrung from Bela. "Sam, don't go!"

Gaining a sure footing on the bank, he faced her, laughing. "Well, how about it now?"

There was nothing insupportable about her face then. It worked with emotion like any woman's.

"Don't go by yourself," she pleaded. "You not know this country. You got nothing. No grub! No gun! No blanket!"

"I can walk it in two days or three," he said. "I'll build a fire to sleep by. You can give me a little grub if you want. I'll trade my pocket-knife for it. It's all I've got. You got me into this, anyhow."

"No sell grub," she answered, sullenly. "Give all you want if you come with me."

"Very well, I'll do it then," he snapped, turning away.

Her face broke up again. "No, no! I not mad at you," she cried, hurriedly. "I give you food. But wait; we not talk." She drove the canoe on a mud bank beyond the willows and scrambled out.

Sam, scowling and hardening at her approach, was careful to keep his distance. He suspected her of a design to detain him by force.

"There's been too much talk," he growled. "You'd better hustle on down. They'll be here soon."

"Sam, don't go!" she begged. "Wait you do at head of lake? Not get no job but cook. Stay with me. We got boat and gun and blankets. We need no more. I show you all way to do. I show you fishin' and huntin'. When winter come I show you how to trap good fur. You will be rich with me. I not better you no more. I do everything you want."

In her distress Sam's angry eyes chose to see only eagerness at the prospect of her escaping her. At the same time her beseeching face filled him with a wild conviction that he would not recognize. His only recourse lay in instant flight.

"What good does it do?" he cried, harshly. "I tell you I'm going to the head of the lake."

"All right, I take you there," she said eagerly. "You're quick as you can walk, too. Half a mile down the river there is little backwater to hide. We let those men go by and then come

SERIOUS ILLNESS AVOIDED

Many a serious illness has been avoided by the prompt use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills actually enrich and purify the blood, and in this way build up the system, tone and strengthen the nerves and invigorate the vital organs.

Serious diseases generally come from some simple disorder that has been neglected. Therefore any thinning of the blood should be looked upon as a warning sign, and more serious illness should be avoided by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. In the case of young girls and women the blood is peculiarly liable to get out of order—to become thin and watery—and to lead to a general breakdown in health. This can be avoided by the occasional use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which are suitable for the most delicate constitution.

These pills will give you a new appetite, improve your digestion, tone and strengthen weakened nerves, banish depression, and lack of energy, clear the complexion of pimples and blotches, cure pain in the back and general weakness, cause the disappearance of headaches, dizziness and heart fluttering. Give these pills a fair trial and you will soon note a wonderful change in your condition. Your spirits will brighten, good health and strength will return, and you will feel like a new person. You can confirm these statements by inquiring among your friends almost anywhere, as thousands and thousands of hopeless sufferers have been restored to new health and energy by using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. Brockville, Ont.

back I do what you want, Sam."

"Will you give me a little grub, or won't you?" he translated. "I'd rather starve than go with you!"

She burst into tears. "All right, I give you food," she said. She turned back to the dugout, and, throwing back the cover of the grub-box, put what bread and smoked fish she had left into a cotton bag.

Sam awaited her, raging with that intolerable bitterness that a tender and obstinate man feels at the sight of a woman's tears.

She offered him the little package of food, and a blanket at well. "Take my grub, blanket," she said, humbly. "I can get more."

He impatiently shook his head, refusing to meet the lovely, imploring eyes. "Here," he said, offering the pocket-knife. "For the food."

With a fresh burst of weeping she knocked it out of his hand, and covered her face with her arm. Sam strode away, blinded and deafened by the confusion of his feelings. His face was as stupor as stone.

CHAPTER XIII.

When Sam had passed out of sight around the willows, Bela, still shaken by sobbing, went down on her hands and knees to search for the penknife she had spurned. Finding it, she kissed it and thrust it inside her dress.

Going to the dugout, she stretched out in it, and gave herself up to grief. Not for very long, however. Gradually she subsided, and finally she sat up with the look of one who has something to do. For a long time thereafter she sat, chin in hand, thinking hard with tight lips and inward-looking eyes.

Sounds from around the bend aroused her. She heard the working of an oar in the water and the cautious voices of men. An alert look came into her face.

She glanced over the gunwale at her face in the water and disarranged her hair a little. Flushing herself down, she commenced to weep again, but with an altered note: this was self-conscious grief addressed to the ears of others.

The three men finding her thus, gaped in boundless astonishment. It was anything but what they expected to find. They peered into the bushes for a sign of Sam.

"What the devil is the matter?" demanded Big Jack.

"Where is Sam?" cried Joe.

Bela answered both questions at once. "He leave me," she sobbed, with heart-breaking effect.

"Left you?" they echoed, stupidly.

"Gone away," wailed Bela. "Say he done with me for good!"

Black Shand and Jack were genuinely decomposed at the sight of her tears. Joe, with more hardihood, laughed.

"Serve you well right!" said he.

Big Jack had the oar. He drove the boat on the bank alongside the dug-out, and they climbed out. Jack and Shand went up the bank.

"He can't have got far," said the former.

A wide sea of grass was revealed to them, stretching to pine ridges on the horizon. In all the expanse there was no sign of any figure, but the dense willows marking the tortuous course of the river provided plenty of cover both up and down stream.

"Which way did he go?" Jack called down.

"I don't know," said Bela. "Down river, I think."

Below, Joe, full of bitter jealousy, was still upbraiding Bela. Jack returned, scowling.

"Cut it out!" he said, peremptorily. "I will get to the bottom of this." To Bela he said, harshly: "What do you expect us to do for you, girl? You promised us a fair answer yesterday morning, and in the night you skipped with the cook."

Bela raised an innocent-seeming face.

"What you mean, skip?" she asked.

"Lift out, eloped, ran away," said Jack, grimly.

"I never did!" she cried, indignantly. "He carry me off."

They stared at her open-mouthed again.

"What I want wit' a cook?" she went on, quickly. "I want marry a man wit' something. He is a bad man. He tak' me away. Now he say he done wit' me! Now he threaten again. They were only half convinced.

"How did it happen?" Jack demanded.

"In the afternoon he find my canoe where I stay by the little creek," she said. "He talk to me like a friend. He think all right. But in the night he come back when I sleepin' and tie my hands and my feet and my mouth, and throw me in my boat and tak' away! I hate him!"

"Then it was you we heard cry out!" exclaimed Joe.

"Sure!" she assented, readily. "The handkerchief come loose. But soon he stop on."

"He did it just to spite us!" cried Joe, furiously. "He didn't want her himself. I always said he had too proud a stomach for a cook. Worked against us at night like a rat! I warned you often enough!"

"Hold on!" said Big Jack, scowling. "There's more to this." He turned to Bela, earnestly. "You were paddling the dugout when you came to the river yesterday. I saw you plain."

"Soon as the wind begin to blow he cut me loose," she said. "He can't tak' me no. He tak' my gun, and point to me and mak' me paddle."

"The damned blackguard!" muttered Shand.

Jack was still unconvinced. "But to-day," he said. "When my our boat you laughed. I was lookin' at you."

Bela hung her head. "He tak' me away," she murmured. "I like he marry me then. I good girl. I think got marry him."

"No marry!" cried Joe. "He think me down. Speak had to me! I hate him! I want punish!"

"Sounds fishy somehow," muttered Jack, hesitating.

"You come wit' me," she said, shrugging. "See all I do."

"Maybe the idea is to get us away for the boat so he can sneak back and swipe it," suggested Joe.

"You foolish!" said Bela, with a glance of scorn. "You can walk to Johnny Gagnon's and get your horses. Let one may stay here to watch the boats."

"Come on!" cried Shand, from the top of the bank. "Catch him first and decide what we'll do to him after."

"Go on," said Bela, sullenly. "I not track him wit'out you give me for punish."

"You swear you'll hand him over to the police?" demanded Jack, sternly.

"I swear it!" she replied, instantly looking him in the eye and holding up her hand.

"All right. Come on, I'm satisfied," assented Jack.

"Wait!" he said. "You promise to me you not hurt him. Give me your hand."

She forced all three to shake hands on it, Joe submitting with an ill grace.

"Now, come on," said Shand, impatiently.

"Leave your guns," commanded Bela. "Maybe he run. You got mad as a shoot. I want no blood."

Jack scowled at her with unwelcome suspicion. "I keep my gun with me," he growled.

"He no, no gun," sneered Bela, scornfully. "You 'fraid catch him wit' hands?"

"You said he had your gun," said Big Jack.

"He give it back," said Bela. "He is bad man; but no steal. My big gun, my little gun—see?" She exhibited them.

Jack knew that Sam owned no gun; still he was suspicious. "If you had your gun why didn't you plug him when he left you?" he demanded.

Bela paused for an instant. This was a poser, because in her heart she knew, supposing her story to be true, that she would have shot Sam. She had to think quickly. "I not want no blood," she murmured. "I 'fraid Pere Lacombe."

It was well done. Big Jack nodded. "You leave your guns, too," he stipulated.

"Sure!" she said, willingly putting them in the dugout. "Leave one man to watch the boats and the guns. Two men and a woman enough to catch a cook, I guess."

The laughed.

Bela was playing for high stakes and her faculties were sharpened to a sword-edge. Every look suggested the wronged woman thirsting for justice. She ostentatiously searched in her baggage, and drawing out a piece of moosehide, cut it into things for bonds. Clever men than Big Jack and his pals might have been taken in.

"Boys, she's right!" cried Jack. "We don't want no blood on our hands to start off with, if we can see him punished proper. Shand, you stay here. Lead off, girl!"

Shand shrugged with a sour look, and came down the bank. It was all ways tacitly understood between him and Jack that young Joe was not to be trusted alone, so he submitted.

THOSE AWFUL CRAMPS

Suggestions that may save Much Suffering

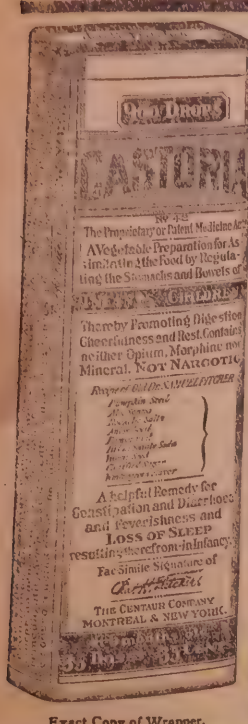

Maryville, Pa.—"For twelve years I suffered with terrible cramps. I would have to stay in bed several days every month. I tried all kinds of remedies and was treated by doctors, but my trouble continued until one day I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for others. I tried it and now I am never troubled with cramps and feel like a different woman. I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly and I am recommending it to my friends who suffer as I did."

—Mrs. GEORGE R. NAYLOR, Box 72, Maryville, Pa.

Young women who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, backache, headache, dragging-down sensations, fainting spells or indigestion should take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Thousands have been restored to health by this root and herb remedy.

COMMUNICATION

Toronto, Nov. 17, 1917

The following for the benefit of the "Excuses for men" of Stirling:

Do they know what war means? Is it they know why men make war? Is it for any other reason than to defend their homes, and protect from ravage and abuse, the mothers, wives and sweet hearts that make their homes so dear?

This brings up the question. Do the stalwarts of Stirling not consider their mothers and sweethearts worth fighting for? If so, we do not envy the Stirling girls their prospective husbands or their future happiness at his hands.

Such a girl for a mother! Whom to acknowledge to the world that her own blood is branded as unwholesome, that her own son is a coward, and that he is unworthy of her or any woman's love. He refuses them the protection which is theirs and thereby acknowledges his narrow, selfish and cowardly character. And then how much more humiliated must be the mothers of two or three sons to see them all decorated with the white feather.

Then girls, you who consider yourselves the sweethearts of these poor creatures, do you ever stop and realize how little he really cares for you and how little he must value your love, when he refuses to shoulder his share of the burden of your protection.

You cannot love what you cannot respect, and surely you aspire to higher ideals than bearing prematurely cursed offspring to these cowardly shrinking objects of shame and contempt.

And mothers of the girls who court the slackers! Have you no pride? You give your own and tolerate this? If so your crime is murder, for you have sent your sons to a far land to protect your honor, and in their hour of need you refuse your influence in support to their cry for help and reinforcements.

Girls and mothers of girls it's up to you, make him show his manhood and his worthiness. Either, he does not love his own mother and her influence is nil, or she is no better than her son. In the latter case they should be the subjects of your disdain, and be loathed as would a leper.

As daughters of our fair Dominion you have no choice, you must make him see his duty to you, to his King and to his country. Then if he fails in the test you have no alternative, he is unworthy of you and must be cast aside for the useless article of contempt that he is.

Otherwise, your curse is second not even to his, for your influence is evil and you were what might have been a man.

Your selfishness may be your own undoing, for if the Hun triumphs with your assistance he will have no more mercy for you than he had for the virgins of Lille.

Think girls, think. "Might better love what you cannot have, than have what you cannot love."

Thanking you Mr. Editor for your indulgence, I am,

Very truly yours,
FRANK F. ZWICK

GEORGE MARTIN
R. R. 1 Harold

Ontario Military Hospital,
Orpington, Kent,
England.

People of Stirling and Red Cross Society of West Huntingdon.

Dear friends:—

Your splendid gift of fifty-three pounds arrived safely as you know. I waited for a day, when Matron Smith could come to London with me, and I assure you she made the money count further than I could. We went to a wholesale house where Matron buys hundreds of pounds of hospital supplies. The first thing we got was a wonderful spinal basket chair. They are for patients who have to lie flat on their backs. Cushing, the man who will use it has not been able to get out, but this chair will put new life in his body and new light in his eyes.

He has been waiting for some good angel to donate a chair and the Stirling people have been that good angel, and no doubt will be many times blessed for their generosity. These chairs may be wheeled any place like a carriage. They are expensive but the very sickest find them a joy and comfort. With the money from West Huntingdon, I got a beautiful wheel chair. Also one with the money from the girls' club. With the Cheese Board money, I got a splendid refrigerator. With the remainder as follows: A surgical dressing table, a sterilizer, a cabinet for my chart room, to put my papers in, three pairs of scissors, and last but not least a gramophone, which the boys are enjoying immensely. I haven't got a great many records, but what I have are good. Then, Matron Smith was so kind in giving up her day to go in, that I felt sure you would like her to have something for her desk. So I chose a purple leather secretary and an ivory tray. I presented by Stirling Ontario. She is very pleased with it and finds it most useful. It was a great pleasure getting all these things and to know how much pleasure they bring. I heard one boy say, "Come on down to the concert," the other one said "I would rather stay here and listen to the gramophone." If the girls' club want to do anything more, a few dollars now and again for new records, would come in very handy. It helps to keep the boys contented and amused. I hope you will all feel and know, how much your efforts are appreciated and that you will know that whatever you send will be used to the very best advantage. One little chip here lives in a wheel chair for both his legs are gone, one above the knee, one just below. Again I thank you for bringing such comfort and happiness to the sick ones, who have so bravely done their bit at the front, while you are doing your bit at home, so faithfully.

Ever sincerely yours,
ETHEL ANDERSON, N. S.

Tenders are to offer a flat rate per cord for all classes of pulpwood, whether spruce or other woods. The successful tenderer shall be required to pay for the Red and White Pine on the limit a flat rate of $10 per thousand feet board measure.

The successful tenderer shall also be required to erect a mill or mills on or near the territory, and to manufacture the wood into pulp and paper in the Province of Ontario, in accordance with the terms and conditions of sale which may be had on application to the Department.

Parties making tender will be required to deposit with their tender a marked cheque payable to the Honourable the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario, for Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000), which amount will be forfeited in the event of their not entering into agreement to carry out conditions, etc. The said Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000) will be held by the Department until such time as the terms and conditions of the agreement to be entered into have been complied with and the said mills erected, equipped and in operation.

The said sum may then be applied in such amounts and at such times as the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines may direct in payment of accounts for dues or of any other obligation due the Crown until the whole sum has been applied.

The highest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

For particulars as to description of territory, capital to be invested, etc., apply to the undersigned.

G. E. FRIGGUSON,
Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines,
Toronto, September 19th, 1917.

DOCTOR SAYS VINOL IS THE BEST TONIC

Honest Opinion Doctor Gave His Patient

Bedford, Ohio.—"I was in a pitiful condition, weak, nervous and run down so I could not do my housework. I had doctored for years and tried everything under the sun. A friend told me about Vinol. I asked my doctor about it, and he replied, 'It certainly is the best medicine that can be had today. I couldn't give you any better.' I took it, and today I am as well and strong as any woman could wish to be, and it was Vinol that saved me."—Mrs. Frank A. Horkey, Ash St., Bedford, Ohio.

CHEVROLET

The TRAIL BLAZER
to greater Motor Car Value

From the standpoint of dollar for dollar value there's not a car made which offers more for your money than the famous Chevrolet Four-Ninety A.

Before the Chevrolet was made in Canada, good cars were all high in price.

But our mammoth production and manufacturing efficiency enables us to sell the Chevrolet Four-Ninety A at a price much lower than its value when compared with other makes of cars.

With the surplus power developed by the famous valve-in-head motor the owner of a Four-Ninety A invariably is the "trail blazer."

Standard equipment includes speedometer, electric starting and lighting, ammeter, oil indicator light equipment, one man top, demountable rims, non-skid tires on rear wheels and many features usually looked for in cars much higher in price.

TO BUY THEM

You want your Gifts to look just a little better than the money they cost. —and so this Christmas store has brought its prices down to rock bottom, has bought more closely than ever it bought before, and has given you the full benefit of its savings.

You want your Gifts to be a little better and different than the ordinary ones everybody gives, —and so this store has gone out of its way to pick up suitable and practical things that have the mark of distinction as having come from The Ritchie Store—gifts that impress one right away as being different.

You want your Gifts to come within the range of the amount you had planned for Christmas shopping —and if possible leave you a little over for the many unexpected needs of Xmas week.

—and so this store has made every effort to satisfy your wants at a price you want to pay, and that has been no small task when one considers the continually rising prices.

AN OPEN LETTER

Belleville, 22nd November, 1917.

TO THE LADIES OF WEST HASTINGS:

The mother, wife, widow, daughters and sisters of Canadian heroes who have gone overseas to fight for us the battle for freedom and liberty, right and justice and civilization of the world will for the first time be privileged to exercise the right to vote in the General Election to be held on the 17th of December next. Their names are now being enrolled on the Voters' Lists for that purpose. The sorrow and suffering these women have endured and the sacrifices they have made no words of mine could adequately describe—suffice it to say that the granting of the franchise is no adequate compensation, but at least it is an acknowledgement of the justice of your right to have a say as to what shall be the fate of your men and boys.

The Government of Sir Robert Borden, in which I had the honor of being the member for West Hastings, recognizing your right, passed the legislation which gives each of you the right to vote in this election.

No more sacred duty could be placed upon these ladies than that of exercising their right to vote and to vote in such a way and for such a candidate as will bring the greatest help to your men and boys and the greatest comfort to yourselves. Sir Robert Borden's Union Government promises you the only hope for relief of the men at the front and the return of your loved ones to your home and fireside. I am the chosen candidate of that Government in this election to advocate your cause, and I solemnly promise to stand by you and do all I can. Many of you during the past three years have had occasion to make use of my services in regard to your husband, your sons or yourselves, which you know has always been promptly and willingly and without any charge or fee given. You know how faithfully I have looked after the interests of returned men and boys in filling every position in the public service that has become vacant by one of them. I shall always use my best efforts and abilities in the same way. My opponent, Mr. R. J. Graham, poses as a supporter of the Union Government of Sir Robert Borden, but he has not the approval of that Government, and I have, and if any of you have been or are employed by him it is because it is to his own personal gain that you are so employed and you have given faithful labor for all the pay you got, and you are under no obligation to him. Nor do I wish it inferred that you are under any obligation to me. You know whether you want your men and boys back or not. You know who can help you to get them back, and I pledge you that I will do everything I can to help win the war and hasten the return of your husband or son or other relative who already have covered themselves with undying glory, back to their happy homes and to a grateful Canada.

In fulfilling your sacred duty I most respectfully ask you for your vote and influence in my behalf.

I have the honor to be,

Your obedient servant,

E. GUSS PORTER.

HYMENEAL

BRINK—MOORE

On Tuesday morning, November 27th, in St. John's Church, Stirling, the marriage was celebrated of Kathleen Moore, eldest daughter of the Rev. R. F. and Mrs. Byers, and Captain G. Claire Brink, C.A.M.C., London, Ont., recently returned from the front, only son of Mr. and Mrs. L. Brink, of Teeswater, Ontario. The bride, wearing her traveling suit of navy blue broadcloth and black fox fur, and carrying a shower bouquet of white roses and lilies, entered the church on the arm of her father, preceded by a full surpliced choir, singing "O, Perfect Love." The officiating clergyman was Major the Rev. R. Macnamara, of St. John's Church, West Toronto, a returned chaplain of the C.E.F. The church had been beautifully decorated with flags, evergreens and white chrysanthemums. As the bride and bridegroom, who were unattended, knelt at the Chancel steps to pledge their vows, never did the sun shine more brightly nor on a sweeter bride.

Immediately after the service the wedding party returned to the Rectory, only the immediate families being present at the breakfast.

Among the many beautiful and handsome gifts was a case of sterling silver forks from the Guild of St. John's Church, where the bride has always been a faithful member. Amid showers of confetti Capt. and Mrs. Brink left at ten o'clock for Ottawa and Montreal before returning to their home in London.

MORE FROST

The old saying, the further north you go the colder it gets proved true on Friday night last when R. J. Graham and his Co. of Spellbinders, held a one night engagement in Springbrook Hall. We have been informed from a very reliable source that the applause came from the platform with the exception of two Graham boosters in the audience. If hundreds were turned away as the Ontario states, why were there empty seats at the front of the hall?

Who are the two men, one from Belleville and one from Marmora, who are so ably supporting Mr. Graham's cause in Rawdon Township? What success have they met with so far.—A forlorn hope.

Springbrook, Dec. 4, 1917.

To the Editor of the Intelligencer.

Dear Sir:—As a reader of The Intelligencer I deem it my duty to check a false statement used in connection with the election.

In the report of the Springbrook Graham meeting published by Mr. Graham's newspaper, it opens up with a statement that hundreds were turned away for want of room in the hall. Now, sir, the fact is that not one man was turned away for want of room.

On the contrary the hall would have held from fifty to one hundred more. It is estimated that from 40 to 50 per cent of the electors present were Porter supporters, and some of the remarks made by Mr. Graham turned a number from him that intended to support him.

I enclose my name and address.

Yours for truth,

SPRINGBROOK SUBSCRIBER.

Special War Bulletin

The people of Coe Hill were (Pleased) to the vitals on Tuesday evening through the oratory of two celebrated gentlemen who were stumping the Country in the interests of one knows not what, because they were like "the flowers born to bluish unseen and waste their sweetness on the desert air". With all the oratory the good people of Coe Hill learnt nothing and consequently must have been pretty much disappointed through losing so much valuable time.

Economy is the one thing people of thought are advocating. Shall we continue to practice what we preach, or shall we say win the war boys? and waste the Funds our Country needs so badly.

Rev. J. H. Dyke the Field Secretary of the National Sanitarium Association, will give a lecture in the Town Hall on Wednesday evening December 12th, 1917. On the subject of Tuberculosis, its nature, treatment and prevention, illustrated with instructive lantern views. You will find this lecture both interesting and instructive. Not only those afflicted with this disease will learn how to help themselves, but the information gained may be the means of preventing you yourself from contracting the disease. Only a collection taken for the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives.

The Grahamville circus and medicine show which is playing one-night stands throughout the townships, carrying its own audience and enthusiasm, is meeting "heavy frosts" for the people do not consider the songs, jigs and music worth the price of admission, while the medicine they are asked to take is too unpalatable to be popular. At their recent meeting at Sidney Town Hall, Reeve Ketcheson who was acting as chairman for the Graham outfit stated from the platform that he did not want Mr. Graham deceived but wanted it thoroughly understood that he was supporting R. Guss Porter.

What Union Government Stands For

The Union Government offered the only solution for vigorous and sustained prosecution of the war. Opposed to this was the Quebec attitude of "not a man, not a dollar." To give them credit, they have fairly lived up to it.

Again, the platform enunciated by the Union Government is one that we can wholeheartedly support. It embraces:

- Abolition of patronage.
- Franchise to women.
- Adequate taxation of war profits.
- Progressive policy of immigration.
- Care and provision for returned soldiers.
- Development of transportation.
- Reduction of excess profits.
- Development of Canadian resources.
- Co-operation in agricultural production, with a view to the reduction of cost.
- Adequate consideration for the needs of the industrial population.
- Policy aimed at bringing the east and west to a closer understanding.

That platform is a commendable one. It appeals alike to the Liberal Conservative, Independent and Labor elements. It is broad enough for all to stand on. It is worthy of the support of all loyal Canadians. It should be given a fair trial. A vote for E. Guise Porter is a vote for Union Government and the larger Canadianism.

Loyal electors should consider well their duty to Canada and the Empire in the coming election and mark their ballots for candidates who are tried and true supporters of the Union Government, who worked faithfully in the last Parliament to protect the interests of Canada's soldiers overseas, and can be safely trusted to work even harder for them in the next Parliament. Vote for E. Guise Porter and Union Government.

In order to maintain the division up to full strength, men who have been wounded have been rushed back as soon as they are fit, without leave or rest to which they are entitled. The boys at the front are relying on the honour of Canada to be true and stand by them. You must vote. Reinforcements are needed at the front. Vote for Union Government. Only one question is to be decided by this election. Is Canada going in to win the war for freedom and right, or is she dropping out? Are the children of this country to grow up slaves under a German Military domination of untold evil? Never. Dec. 17th is the day of election, every vote is needed and every woman's vote must be polled for Union Government.

A Union Government carried the Federation of Canada. Liberals and Conservatives in a Union Government to-day will save Canada and help to save the world. Do what is right. Vote for Union Government and the candidate, E. Guise Porter, who is endorsed by Sir Robt. Borden. Vote for the men at the front.

A Woman Highwayman

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

I doubt if many women have made a greater swing of the pendulum of social condition than I. In the year 1790 I was put into a crib draped with Brussels lace. My father, the Duke of Montmarville, was a favorite of King Louis XVI., who showered him with favors. Ten years later my father had gone down in the reign of terror and I was an exile.

But I had in me the blood of warriors. The great Turenne was an ancestor of mine. Naturally when I found that I could not make a living as a woman I turned to the career of a man. I would have fought for France, but my ancestors had served their country under the royal standard bearing the fleur-de-lis. If I donned man's attire I must fight under the tricolor for the usurper Bonaparte, who was emperor by virtue of the blood of the king. No, I would not go into the army.

But I resolved to return to France. How I made my way there I can now hardly recall. I had become so used to hardship that the days I traveled on foot, the nights I slept in woods, my breakfasts of berries, my dinners—when I had them—given by some kindly farmer's wife, made no lasting impression on me.

I remember well that one day I found myself in boy's clothing at the gates of the chateau in which I was born. I asked a man passing who lived there. He said that an army contractor had bought the place from the government, which had confiscated it after cutting off the head of its owner, the Duke of Montmarville. Most women would have burst into tears. Instead, I was enraged.

"This is a world of robbery," I said, "and I will rob like the rest." I stole a pistol, but I could find no ammunition to steal and had no money to buy any. But I soon had money aplenty, for I lay in wait for the contractor who occupied my birthplace, and when he was being driven into the gate by his fat coachman I stopped the coach, ordered the driver to dismount from the box and, opening the door, presented my unloaded pistol at the occupant and demanded his money. He happened to have a well filled purse, which he tremblingly handed me.

I found money made by robbing so easy and so lucrative that I bought a horse and equipment for the road. I did not think to wear a mask. I had no cause to hide my visage. I was the daughter of a duke, but not a soul in France knew me as such or knew me at all, for that matter. I robbed only at night, and no one could see my features in the darkness. One night I stopped a coach, and after receiving the contribution of a man in it and was about to turn away he said:

"Mademoiselle, I shall know that voice if I ever hear it again. You are not a man, but a woman."

"I care not if you do," I replied, "nor if you should see my features or know who I am, for mine is a wrecked life. I would it had been ended, as was my father's, on the guillotine."

"Who was your father?" he asked.

But I could not bring myself to let him know of the disgrace I had brought upon my family, and, putting spurs to my horse, I rode away.

A love for a life of adventure grew upon me, and I caught the spirit of a Claude Duval.

Hearing that a bell was to be given by a person whom Bonaparte had announced as King Louis had executed my father, a desire seized me to attend it dressed in the apparel of my sex. Donning an ordinary woman's clothing, I went to Paris and bought a costume fit for the rank to which I was entitled. On the night of the ball I hired a coach and a maid and when the entertainment was in full swing drove up to the door, alighted, went to a robing room and then down into the drawing room to the host and hostess, who were receiving their guests.

Madame looked at me in wonder, having never seen me before and uncertain whether I had been hidden or had come without an invitation. Her husband, who did not know all the guests, looked at me curiously. Their son, a man bearing thirty years of age, gazed at me with admiration as well as surprise.

"Pardieu me," said his mother. "I do not recall your features."

"I am the Duchess of Mont what-you-like," I replied.

All looked at me in astonishment, but I saw the younger man start. He recovered his equanimity at once and, offering me his arm, led me away. As soon as we were out of hearing he turned to me and said:

"I told you that I would know your voice should I ever hear it again, and to convince you that I was right you are the highway woman who robbed me of 10 napoleons a few months ago."

I tried to disengage my arm from his that I might take to flight, but he was stronger than I and held me.

"Fear nothing," he said. "I will keep your secret."

I never again donned man's attire. My victim persuaded me to permit him through his father to plead my cause with Bonaparte, who was endeavoring to conciliate the old nobility of France. In the end I received back a portion of my estate, including the chateau, and I now live there peacefully with my husband, whom I robbed on the highway.

IF HAIR IS TURNING GRAY, USE SAGE TEA

Here's Grandmother's Recipe to Darken and Beautify Faded Hair.

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray or streaked, just an application or two of Sage and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundredfold.

Don't bother to prepare the mixture; you can get this famous old recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients for 50 cents a large bottle, all ready for use. It is called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural color and lustre of your hair.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time, by morning the gray hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy and lustrous.

This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Union Government

is concentrating its efforts to win the War. It has gone about raising reinforcements in the only practical way; under the Military Service Act, 1917.

Laurier, Bourassa and their adherents admit their intention of holding up reinforcements so urgently needed in the trenches.

Where do YOU stand?

To Back up the Boys— To Hasten Victory— To Win the War— SUPPORT UNION GOVERNMENT

The Only Way To Support Union Government

By Voting For Candidates Endorsed By Premier

When the Electors go to the Polls they will have to take one of two courses: they must either support the Union Government by marking their ballot for the Candidates endorsed by the Government, or aid the forces of Laurier by marking their ballots for Candidates opposing the endorsed candidates of the Government. There is no third course when it comes to marking the ballot. There is no such thing as an Independent Unionist or Independent Liberal. All Candidates are either the accredited representatives of the Union Government or opponents to that Government. It is for the people to say by their votes whether they favor a Union Government or the policy of Laurier.

This applies to the two Hastings and Prince Edward.

Mr. Porter is the accredited Representative for West Hastings.

Mr. Thompson is the accredited Representative for East Hastings.

Col. Hepburn is the accredited Representative for Prince Edward.

All who desire a Union Government and a successful termination of the War, should support and cast ballots for Porter, Thompson, and Hepburn, leaving the Independents and Opportunists at home.

If I Were A Voter

(From The Globe)

"If you want anything well done—do it yourself."

If I were a woman whom the bravery of father, brother, husband or son had made eligible for a vote, I would cast that vote though the heavens fell. I would be deeply ashamed not to cast it. And I would leave no possible doubt as to the fact of my name being on the voters' list. I would myself see to it that it was there. Next, I would learn the correct mode of casting my ballot, not from some amateur, but from one who knew for a surety.

Then I would find out that any other women voters of my household did the same. If you want a thing well done—do it yourself."

After that I would go after the women of my own neighborhood, and when they were lined up for service, after the women of my town or city, and beyond.

On election day I would have no other business, after casting my vote bright and early, but to see that others voted.

"Housework," I would say, "there will be plenty of time for it after you have done your bit for the boys at the front." Never mind if the dishes are not washed that day, nor the meal made ready, you have work ahead. It is "over the top" for you, into the trenches for you. What old Britisher was it cried: "Up boys, and at 'em!" Surely I can for one day forget everything but that I am blood relation to a soldier who doesn't know how to shirk, and that I am an active duty, fighting at home that he shall get fair play, as he is fighting far away that others shall get it.

Here's to victory for both! Vigilance is the watchword. Personal attention to the duty of the hour of the all-important thing. FEMINA.

Letter From France

The following letter was received by Miss Marjorie McGee, Secretary of the Rawdon Khaki Club, from Bomber, G. A. Richardson.

France, Friday, Nov. 9th, 1917.

Dear Marjorie:— Was most agreeably surprised to-night when I received the box sent by the Khaki Club. Have read in the Leader the accounts of the club's meetings with interest, but had no idea that I would be so fortunate as to be remembered in such a material way. The box was splendid and arrived in the best of condition.

One of the admirable features of the box was the variety which it displayed. This was due to the number of those concerned in the packing. Please convey my thanks to the members and tell them, I shall write them when opportunity permits. Spent last Christmas in England but it looks as if we're due to eat this year's dinner in sunny France. It isn't such a bad place after all! Expect in places, which become a wee bit too hot at times. Of course, on special occasions such as Christmas, the army goes out of its way a little and helps us to celebrate. This together with the remembrance of you kind friends at home enables us to maintain the spirit of cheerfulness which perhaps otherwise could not be.

Again thanking you and the club, for your thoughtfulness and sending you the best of Christmas greetings, I remain, Yours sincerely,

G. A. RICHARDSON

Christmas Gifts That Are Sure to Please

A CHRISTMAS gift that can't be used and enjoyed is a disappointment. The average man or woman would rather receive a post card with a cheerful "Merry Christmas" than a gift that is just perfunctory. The war has made us all alert this year for the cheer and welfare of our boys on the sea and in the army. So why not knit the young patriots gray wool sweaters and those excellent long-wristed mittens, with finger tips missing not to impede their work at the riggings and behind the guns?

Illustrated is a desk set for father, hubby or sweetheart. If you are clever you can saw it out of thin pine and enamel it beautifully, filling it with good paper, pens and stamps. Or you can make the frame of stiff cardboard and cover it with any attractive paper that matches his den or library.

Handmade lingerie is always a test of affection. So make sister an undervest made of crepe de chine. One yard and a quarter of a good quality of crepe, the same quantity of beading and a little more narrow ribbon are required. Cut the vest straight, hem on the bottom, put the beading across the top and run the ribbon through it. Six sachets filled with the favorite scent of the recipient and made, say, in heart shape edged with narrow lace, would be attractive, and they are always useful. Little lavender silk bags filled with dried lavender flowers would be appreciated by anyone with a linen closet.

FRANKFORD

Mrs. (Dr.) Malone and children have returned home after an extended visit with her brothers and sister in the Saskatchewan district.

The sale of Mr. Chas. Rose's household effects was very largely attended on Thursday.

Mr. Wm. Lyons is moving in his new home, he has purchased the hotel from Mr. Rose.

On Saturday afternoon Lieut. Will Lowery went through Trenton on the hospital train for Toronto, but owing to some misunderstanding of the message his parents and sisters were too late in arriving at the junction to see him, he was wounded some time ago while serving his King and Country.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Benedict and children motored to Rossmore on Sunday afternoon and spent a short time with Mr. and Mrs. Bellack.

Mr. and Mrs. Terrill of Wooler were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. S. Herrington on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Gainsforth of Trenton spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Ford in town.

The memorial service held in the Methodist Church on Sunday evening for Pte. J. Chard was very largely attended. Rev. Knox, taking charge of the service, Mr. and Mrs. Chard have the sympathy of the people as this is two of their sons that have paid the supreme sacrifice for their King and Country.

The remains of Mrs. Ward, formerly of the 7th of Murray arrived here on the 8.20 a.m. train on Monday from Campbellbell. New Brunswick and was laid beside her husband in the cemetery here. They were accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Alexander of Campbellbell and her son, Mr. Wm. Ward of Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Windover, daughter and son also Miss Bowen spent Monday afternoon in Belleville.

Miss Mary Haggerty of Murray is spending a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Johnston.

Mr. J. B. Lowery has returned home after spending Sunday with his son, Lieut. Will Lowery at the hospital in Toronto, he says Will is doing nicely.

MENIE

Mr. and Mrs. Trick Donald visited Mrs. Donald's parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. Gidley on Sunday.

A number of the W. I. ladies met at the home of Miss Ketcheson on Thursday to arrange for the Bazaar to be held in Laubs hall on Dec. 13th, and were treated to sandwich, cake and coffee.

Mrs. Wm. Stewart Sr. is visiting her daughter, Mrs. George Dunk, Pethericks Corners.

Mr. Will Russel of Campbellbell is in Stirling on Monday with Mr. James Parks.

Miss Sarah Hodgkinson is visiting Mrs. John Parks at Hards this week.

Hot Water for Sick Headaches

Tells why everyone should drink hot water with phosphate in it before breakfast.

Headache of any kind, is caused by auto-intoxication which means self-poisoning. Liver and bowel poisons called toxins, sucked into the blood, through the lymph ducts, excite the heart which pumps the blood so fast that it congests in the smaller arteries and veins of the head producing violent, throbbing pain and distress, called headache. You become nervous, dependent, sick, feverish and miserable, your meals sour and almost nauseous to you. Then you resort to acetanilide, aspirin or the bromides which temporarily relieve but do not rid the blood of these irritating toxins.

A glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, drunk before breakfast for awhile, will not only wash these poisons from your system and cure you of headache but will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary canal.

Ask your pharmacist for a quarter pound of limestone phosphate. It is inexpensive, harmless as sugar, and almost tasteless, except for a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant. If you aren't feeling your best, if tongue is coated or you wake up with bad taste, foul breath or have colds, indigestion, biliousness, constipation or sour, acid stomach, begin the phosphate hot water cure to rid your system of toxins and poisons.

Results are quick and it is claimed that those who continue to flush out the stomach, liver and bowels every morning never have any headache or know a miserable moment.

Stirling W. I.

The regular meeting of the W. I. will be held on Friday Dec. 7th, in the Agricultural Building.

Programme has been arranged by Mrs. G. G. Thrasher and Mrs. C. Baker.

Any members who do not thoroughly understand knitting, will have the opportunity of learning on that day, as needles, yarn and instructors will be provided.

"Don'ts" for knitters will be discussed. The demand for socks is much greater than the supply.

When the appeal for more and still more comes from our boys, who have been liberally supplied what must be the condition of our friendless soldiers.

We need more knitters in the village and it is to be hoped, that those who have not been sharing in this work, will take advantage of any instruction given. Visitors always welcome.

FOR SALE

Two buggies, nearly new, will be sold cheap for cash. Apply to E. BAKER.

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS

If your Back is aching or Bladder bothers, drink lots of water and eat less meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 600 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness. Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

Dooley on Graham

Mr. Graham is financially in the field. He is backed by much money made since the war began.

He is backed by many machines of the McLaughlin make.

He has turned turtle many times, going under, over, and between the fence.

He is some wobbler and has veered in many devious windings.

He travels through the country with brass bands which only crimes and very large profits can afford.

He is the independent supporter of dissipated onions.

He is not the Union Government candidate—he is the joy of the local Laurierites, and some soreheads.

He will be defeated December 17th. Dooley says so.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson No. 12, December 9, 1917.

Ezra and Nehemiah Teach the Law.

Ex. 1-18.

Commentary—4. Reading God's Word (vs. 1-8).

The completion of the walls marked an epoch in the life of the nation. The work had engaged the attention of all, and the people had realized the unifying effect of this common purpose. They also were convinced that God had been graciously favoring them. Before the water gate—the place of meeting the watergate, through which the water was carried off into the temple. Ezra the scribe—Ezra had returned to Jerusalem from the land of captivity thirteen years before this time, but in the record of the events of twelve years his name was not mentioned. The general opinion is that he returned to Babylon, where he remained for several years, possibly engaged in copying the law. Bring a book of the law. It is probable that Ezra's return prompted the people's request to have the law read to them. Which the Lord had commanded—it was the word of Jehovah. Ezra the priest, being a direct descendant of Aaron (Ezra 7:1-6). Brought the law before the congregation—They assembled included men, women and children, who could read the law intelligently. The later rabbinical teaching was to the effect that women should be excluded from hearing the law, but that teaching was opposed to the word of God. The seventh month—The month Tishri was the seventh month of the ecclesiastical year and the first month of the civil year, and the first of the month great day among the Jews. The month Tishri corresponds to the latter part of our September and the former part of our October. 3. From the morning until midday—The reading continued from early in the morning until noon. It is probable that the other reading in turn, thus relieving Ezra. They were attentive unto the book—The people were intensely interested in the word of the Lord. They were eager to know what he would understand their attitude toward him. This great interest showed that the religious life of the nation was being revived. 4. A wooden platform was constructed, raised sufficiently high to afford all in the congregation an opportunity to see the reader standing thereon. It was broad enough to accommodate Ezra and the persons mentioned in this verse.

5. opened the book—Books in those days were long strips of parchment rolled at either end upon a stick, and to open a book meant to unroll the scroll. All the people stood up—They had evidently been sitting while waiting for the reading to begin, and rose to their feet out of respect for the word of God. It is likely that they sat down after the exercises mentioned in the next verse, and remained sitting while Ezra read the book of the law. 6. blessed the Lord—Gave thanks. amen—The people's response to Ezra's words of thanksgiving and praise. The means of the law of God, standing up their hands—By this act they showed that they accepted the words read as the law of God and would be obedient to it. Lifting up the hands in worship is referred to in the scriptures (Psa. 63:4; 1 Tim. 2:8). bowed their heads—in the law of God, kneeling. They assumed an attitude of reverent humility. They were impressed with the goodness and mercy of God and the sacredness of his word. 7. The names here recorded are those of Levites who assisted in explaining the words of the law to the people. 8. Those who read were careful to speak clearly so that the great assembly could catch every word. The people were eager to hear and it was important they should, gave the sense—The Jews had been long in captivity and were unfamiliar with the law, hence explanations were needed that they might grasp the meaning of the words read. Some think that they had to a considerable extent lost the knowledge of the pure Hebrew language through their contact with their captors in Babylon, and caused them to understand—"So that they understood."—R. V.

11. Results of reading the law of God (vs. 9-12). 9. Tishbathah—This was a title given to Nehemiah representing his office as provincial governor. This day is holy unto the Lord—it was the day of the covenant. It was considered sacred. It was also a notable day because of the reading of the law. mourn not—The people wept upon hearing the law because it showed them how they had been sinning against God in the past. Mourning—Religious joy, properly tempered by dependence on the help of God, meekness of mind and self-diffidence, is a powerful means of strengthening the soul. In such a state every duty is practicable and delightful. In such a frame of mind no man ever felt—Clarke, 11. still all the people—Restrained from mourning, neither were they grieved—Sorrowful. 12. because they had understood—it was a source of grief to the people that they had been ignorant of God's law and had not lived according to its teachings. It became a cause of rejoicing to understand its requirements. Its warnings and its promises.

11. Observing the Feast of Tabernacles (vs. 13-18). On the second day the reading and explaining the law were continued with "the chief of the fathers of all the people, the priests, and the Levites" as hearers. When it was read and understood that the Feast of Tabernacles should be observed on the fifteenth of the month, preparations were at once commenced for its observance. They gathered booths upon the roofs of their houses, and in the courts of their own houses, and of the temple, and "in the street of the water gate" and "in the street of the gate of Ephraim," probably in the north wall of the city, and led toward the land of Ephraim. It appears that all those who had returned to Jerusalem from Babylon constructed booths and sat under them. This feast was in commemoration of the journey of the children of Israel from the land of Egypt to Canaan. Upon this journey they had no houses in which to lodge, and during the feast of tabernacles the people dwelt in booths constructed of branches, in memory of that great deed. The feast continued for eight days, beginning with the fifteenth day of the month Tishri and closing with the twenty-second. It was a season of great rejoicing. What purpose did the people assemble before the water gate at Jerusalem? What is meant by the law of God? Who was the reader, and how many assisted him? What was the reading of the law? In what manner was it read? What effect did the reading of the law have upon the hearers? How long did the study of God's law continue? What was observed? What did the feast commemorate? What was the Jews' religious condition?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic—Spiritual progress.

1. Quickened through instruction.

2. Attained by practical service.

The public reading and exposition of the law of Moses in the presence of all the people, as soon as possible after their settlement and the rebuilding of the wall around Jerusalem, took place on the anniversary of the restoration of the altar. The time was regarded with special interest. Through his labors Nehemiah had provided for the safety of the people. Ezra the scribe very appropriately gave instruction from the law, and the people sat down and listened attentively. It was in the faith that God has evermore blessed his own word as the chosen instrument of all revival progress in his church that Nehemiah sought to have the remnant of the law read to the people. Having been long scattered in a strange land deprived of their privileges, they were sadly defective in their knowledge of the divine law. Nehemiah's labors for their temporal security had inspired his brethren with patriotic love. He labored to inspire holy affection and devotion. To do that he depended upon the diffusion of the knowledge of the holy scriptures.

God had raised up Nehemiah to perform a great work. Ezra, though endowed with different gifts, was his God-given associate in the great cause. They meant to do the work of God, the revival of spiritual life in Judah. Nehemiah, having been invested with ruling power in the city, gave place to the ministers of the sanctuary in their proper work of teaching. On that occasion there was introduced a new element into the life of the people. Formerly the temple had filled the whole religious horizon to the Jew. It had been the place for sacrifice, not instruction. It was the sphere of the priest, not the scribe or prophet. God's ancient covenant with the people had largely passed from memory. When the congregation met, the law which it came before them as the revelation to a new discovery. They were overcome with penitential grief. Their tears were an expression of alarm and compunction, of apprehension for the consequences of their sins together with the holy law and the account of sin. Nehemiah gave direction and counsel. Their sorrow was not wrong or without foundation, but defective in its views of divine mercy, in an apprehension of the loving kindness of the Lord, their covenant, their God. The law and the love of God, the history of their fathers showed that they were gracious and forgiving. The instructions and exhortations of Nehemiah, Ezra and the Levites prevailed to assuage their sorrow and enabled them to celebrate the festival in accordance with its true design. The grief can be not be such as God demands if it hides from man the attributes of God and the arrangements divinely made for the pardon of sin. For the Jews at that time, feeble as they were, the law of the Lord would be their stronghold, their fortress against their enemies. It would serve to unite and inspire them and make them brave. It would animate them in God's service, which was their safety, as it would secure their protection and blessing. It would impart inward power to do and suffer the will of God.

11. Attended by practical service. Combined with an exposition of the law was an exhortation to duty. With the joy of the Lord there was to be an overflow in charity. Nehemiah set the people about the common duties of life. There was hard work for those Jews to do. The whole task of religious reformation lay before them. They were to be filled with rejoicing for what the Lord had done for them in bringing forth and providing for their future religious life. That tranquil satisfaction must be accomplished by the discharge of their practical duties, by the purification of their spiritual revival. Under the quickening of a faithful ministry and the consciousness of renewed spiritual life, they returned to a complete and hearty observance of the ancient festival, the feast of tabernacles, which was especially commemorative. The recalling of past evils and past sorrows and wrong-doing confirmed their hearts in gratitude and devotion. T. R. A.

ANNOUNCEMENT ON FUTURE HOG PRICES

Statement of U. S. Food Administration in Full—What It May Mean to Canada.

The following is an announcement regarding future hog prices which was made by the Food Administration of the United States Government on November 3rd. The statement in full is as follows:

The main purposes of the Food Administration as to hogs are four: To see that the producer at all times can count on a fair price for his hogs, so that the ultimate consumer shall at all times get an adequate supply of hogs at the lowest feasible prices.

We shall establish rigid control of the packer. Fair prices to the farmer for his hogs, we believe, will be brought about by the full control which the Food Administration has over the buying of the allies, our army and navy, the Red Cross, the Food Relief, and the neutrals, which together constitute a considerable factor in the market.

The first step is to stop the sudden breaks in prices paid for hogs at the central markets. These prices must become stable, so that the farmer knows where he stands and will not be tempted to raise his prices for next winter. The prices so far as we can effect them, will not go below a minimum of about $15.50 per cent. for the average of the packers' drives on the Chicago market until further notice.

We have had and shall have the advice of a board composed of practical hog growers and experts. That board advises that the best yard-stick to measure the cost of production of the hog is the cost of corn. That cost of corn price to hog price on the average of a series of years, has been about twelve to one (or a little less). In the past, when the ratio has gone lower than 12 to 1, the stock of hogs in the country has decreased. When it was higher than twelve, the hogs have increased. It is for this reason that we are endeavoring to bring the stock of hogs back to normal under present conditions, the ratio should be about thirteen to one. Therefore, as to the hogs farrowed next spring, we will try to stabilize prices so that the farmer can count on getting for each 100 pounds of hogs ready for market, thirteen bushels of the average cost of bushel of the corn fed into the hogs.

Let there be no misunderstanding of this statement. It is not a guarantee backed by money. It is not a promise by the packers. It is a statement of the intention and policy of the Food Administration, which means to do justice to the farmer.

This clear statement as to the intention of the Food Administration in the United States will be received with satisfaction by hog producers as Mr. Cotton frankly says, there is no money guarantee back of the minimum price of $15.50, but so far as the Food Administration can influence prices they will not go below the value of thirteen bushels of corn. Consequently, this statement, together with the fact that the Food Administration is controlling all reports of bacon, makes it probable that they will be able to hold the price at about $15.50 per cent. on the Chicago market until change seems necessary. The regulation of profits in the packing industry may also assist in stabilizing prices, and it remains to be seen whether the packers will do the square thing and let the force prices down to the minimum.

A very large share of credit is due to our esteemed contemporary "Wallaces Farmer" for getting the Food Administration in the States to see the necessity of having a definite ratio established between the price of hogs and the price of feed, if the campaign for increased hog production is to be a success. For approximately the last two years that paper has been publishing a chart and table showing the ratio of profits and losses in raising hogs, based on the relative prices of corn and hogs. As "Wallaces Farmer" says in its issue of November 9th:

"In adopting the value of corn as the measure for determining the price of hogs, the Food Administration has pointed the way to the only road which is safe to travel in this perilous venture of price-fixing. All prices are relative. The dollar is no longer a true measure of value. Prices must be fixed in terms of the cost of production. Any other method will be fatal to production, and will bring about world famine conditions. The adoption of the corn-hog ratio is the first recognition on the part of any government body that price-fixing must be in conformity with and not in violation of fundamental economic laws."

In establishing a ratio between the price of feed and the price of hogs here in Canada, it is better to use shorts or middlings rather than corn. In our last week's issue we published a chart showing the profit and loss in raising hogs during the last ten years, where the price of hogs was compared with the price of shorts in Toronto during this period. An interesting fact is that this chart, showing the profits and losses in hog raising for Canada, is in substantial agreement with the chart published in "Wallaces Farmer" for the corn belt of the United States. During 1908 and 1909, when hog raising was really unprofitable in Canada, it was relatively unprofitable in the U. S. In 1910 it was relatively unprofitable in both countries during 1913-1914 it was relatively profitable. During 1915, though the price of hogs was high, the price of feed was higher, also, and raising hogs was relatively unprofitable in both countries. In 1916 hog raising was profitable to both the farmer in the States and the farmer in Canada. In 1917, however, while hog raising was relatively unprofitable to the American farmer on account of the high price of corn, it was profitable to the Canadian farmer, as the price of shorts remained at a comparatively low level.

No statement has as yet been made by Mr. Hanna which applies to Canada where any price is mentioned at which he will endeavor to keep the price of hogs. He has, nevertheless, said that he and Mr. Hoover are working in perfect accord, so that we may expect fair prices at least for hogs produced in Canada. Moreover, the influence of hogs in United States finances to some extent, at least the price of hogs in Canada.

Hogs at the time of writing are selling on the Chicago market for about $17.50 per cent, which is about 50 cents above the price of shorts. The command on the Toronto market, if prices do go down to $15.50 in Chicago we would expect the price of hogs in Toronto to be about the same or a quarter or fifty cents per hundred less.

The average price of hogs for the last ten years was $9.25. The average price of shorts was $25.85 per ton. That is, it required the value of 7.17 hundredweight to induce farmers to stay in the hog raising business. When the price of hogs was higher than the price of 7.17 hundredweight of shorts, hog raising was relatively profitable when the price of hogs was lower than the value of 7.17 hundredweight of shorts, hog raising was relatively unprofitable. Since the Canadian Board of Grain Supervisors fix the price of feed in August, the price of shorts is fairly reasonably constant. It has been $42 per ton at Toronto for the past four months, practically without a break. As a rule, shorts are dearest during the months of September and October. During this period of 1917, it was selling for $42 per ton, so that we are apparently justified in assuming that if the price does not go down certainly will not go up. According to the short-hog ratio, when shorts are $42 per ton, the price of hogs should be at least $15.55 f. and w., Toronto, if even a normal supply is to be maintained. —The Canadian Countryman.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

Montreal Report—The offerings at the Canadian Pacific stock yards this morning amounted to 600 cattle, 100 sheep and lambs, and 100 calves. Trading was good during the week, and the market was pretty well cleaned out. There are so few choice cattle offering that prices paid for the best were comparatively high. The morning market was fairly brisk. Butcher cows were a little better in price, some choice selling at $9. There was a good demand for canners' cattle selling at from $5 to $5.50. Lambs went as high as $16.50, while some good sheep sold at $12.

"BELA"

The tracks led them parallel to the general direction of the river, cutting across from point to point of the willows on the outside of each bend. On the horizon ahead was the pine-clad ridge that bounded the lower end of the lake. Jack Knife Mountain rose over it, the sea of grass was dazzling in the sunlight.

Half an hour's swift walking gave them no glimpse ahead of their quarry.

"Waste too much time talking," said Bela.

"Well, you did the most of it," retorted Joe.

It was evident from the direction of the tracks that Sam was taking care. This convinced them all. They burst out in angry exclamations. It was not, however, for what they thought Bela had suffered. Each man was thinking of the wrong Sam had done him. Toward Bela their attitude had subtly changed. She was now a damaged article, though still desirable. Their awe of her was gone.

"I'll grind my heel in his face for this," snarled Joe. "I'll kill him slow!"

"Come on!" cried Shand. "We're losing time. He can't have got far." Bela scrambled out of the dugout. "I take you where he is," she said eagerly. "I can track him in the grass. I can't catch him myself. But you can give him to me for punishment."

"Well attend to that for you, my girl," said Jack, grimly.

"No blood!" she cried. "If he is kill for cause of me I get a bad name around. A girl can't have no bad name."

They laughed with light scorn. "You're done for already," Joe said. "Nobody knows him," said Jack. "He'll never be missed. We'll take good care he ain't found, neither."

"The police will know," insisted Bela. "They can smell blood. Baccy by maybe you mad at each other. One will tell."

"This was a shrewd shot. The three scowled at each other furtively. There was no confidence between them."

"Well—what do you want to do?" asked Jack, uneasily.

"I give him to the police," stated Bela, eagerly. "They come up the river now. Come every year this time. Then all will be known. It is not my fault he tak' me away. I good girl. Maybe she wants to get him to marry her," suggested Joe.

To keep under cover of each point of the willows until he reached the next one. Each point afforded his pursuers a new survey ahead. Not until they had walked another half-hour at that grueling pace were they in time to see a black spot just about to disappear ahead.

"Down!" cried Bela, and they dropped full length in the grass until it had gone.

Bela, springing up, led the way at a run across the intervening grass. She had to hold herself back for the men. Joe was too heavy to be a runner, and Jack was beginning to feel the handicap of his years.

Nearing the willows, she held up her hand for caution. They ran lightly in the grass. Neither man could see or hear anything; nevertheless, Bela indicated by signs that the one they sought was just around the bushes. At the last moment she held back and let them go first.

Sam, having decided that the danger of immediate pursuit was over, was sitting on the ground eating his lunch when, without warning, Jack and Joe fell on him, bowling him over on his back. He struggled desperately, but was helpless under their combined weight. Joe, with a snarl, lifted his clenched hand over Sam's face. Big Jack held it.

"Not while he's down," he muttered.

Bela, following close, drew Sam's hands together and bound his wrists with her strips of hide.

Sam, seeing her, cried out: "You've sold me out again! I might have known it!"

Bela, fearing his words might start Jack thinking things over, cried out hysterically: "I got you now! You think you run away, eh? You done wit' me! You laugh when I cry. I fix you for that! I put you where you can't hurt no more girls!"

To Jack and Joe it seemed natural under the circumstances. Sam glared at her in angry amazement, and opened his mouth to reply. But thinking better of it, he set his jaw and kept quiet.

He submitted to superior force, and they immediately started back on the long walk to the boats. There was little said en route. Only Joe, unable to contain his rancor, occasionally burst out in brutal reviling. Sam smiled at him. More than once Big Jack was called on to restrain Joe's list.

"A bargain is a bargain," he reminded him.

Bela, bringing up the rear, glared at the back of Joe's head with pure savage hatred. When any of them glanced to look at her, her face was wholly stolid.

It was now some time past noon, and the work was given to eat before embarking. Sam, with his bound hands in his lap, sat on a great rock which had fallen from the bank above, and watched the others curiously and warily.

He had cooled down. So many things had happened to him during the past two days that his capacity for anger and astonishment was pretty well used up. He now felt more like a spectator than the leading man in the drama.

Finally Bela, with a highly indifferent air, came to him with a plate of food which she put on his knees. Evidently he was expected to feed himself as best he could with his hands tied. Bela, avoiding his eyes, whispered swiftly:

"Your friend Sam. Jus' foolin' them. Wait and see."

Sam laughed scornfully. The other men looked over and Bela had to go back.

Sam had no compunction against eating their food. Scorning them all, he fully intended to get the better of them yet. Meanwhile he was wondering what had taken place between them. He could not interpret the relations between Bela and the three men. They were apparently neither friendly nor inimical.

Afterward a discussion arose as to their disposition between the two boats. The result was not big enough to carry them all.

"Lay him in the dugout," Bela said indifferently. "I paddle him."

"No you don't," said Joe quickly. "He goes with the men."

"All right," said Bela, shrugging. "You come wit' me."

This arrangement pleased Joe very well, and by it Bela succeeded in parting him from Sam.

The two boats proceeded together down the smoothly flowing, willow-bordered stream. Shand and Jack took turns at sculling the larger craft, and Bela loafed on her paddle that they might keep up with her.

The view was as confined and unvarying as the banks of a canal, except that canals commonly are straight, while the river here was twisted like Archimedes' screw. The only breaks in the endless panorama of cut-banks, mud-flats, willows, and grass were the occasional little inlets, gay with aquatic flowers.

Bela was most at home kneeling in the stern of her dugout. Joe, sitting opposite, watched her graceful action with a kindling eye.

"Drop behind a bit," he whispered. "I want to talk to you. Are you listening?"

She seemed not to have heard. Nevertheless, the other boat drew away a little.

"Look here," Joe began with what he intended to be an ingratiating air, "this is a bad business for you. I'm not saying I blame you. Just the same your price has gone down, see? Do you get me?"

Bela lowered her eyes and watched the little whirlpools in the train of her paddle. "I understand," she murmured.

"After an affair like this men look on a girl as fair game. I ain't saying it's right, but it's so. You want to look out for those other fellows now."

"I look out," said Bela.

"Come with me and I'll keep you from them. Joe went on, trying to speak carelessly, meanwhile his eyes were burning. "Of course, you can't expect me to marry you now, but I'll keep you in better style than you've ever known. There's nothing mean about it."

Bela raised her eyes and dropped them quickly. There was a spark in their depths that would have warned a man less vain than Joe. She said nothing.

"Well, is it a go?" he breathlessly demanded.

"I don't know," said Bela, slowly. Her voice gave nothing away. "I got get married if I can."

"When would marry you now?" cried Joe.

"I don't know. Somebody, I guess. Pretty near every man I see want marry me."

Joe sneered. "Not now! Not when this gets about."

"Maybe the big man want marry me," she suggested. "Or the black one."

Joe laughed scornfully. At the same time a horrible anxiety attacked him. Those two were old; they couldn't afford to be so particular as he. One of them might—

"Any 'ow I not go wit' you now," said Bela. "Plenty time."

"You'd better look out for yourself!" Joe burst out, "or you'll be worse than you are already. You'll be sorry then."

"All right," she returned calmly. Joe sat fuming. Anger and balked desire made his comely, brutal face look absurd and pitiful. It was like a wilful child denied the moon. Joe could never resist her emotions. Whether or not Bela had guessed it, it was bound to come.

"Oh, hell!" he cried. "Look here, if Joe or Shand offer to marry you, I'll smother them, see? Is that a go? You'd sooner have me, wouldn't you? I'm young."

Bela neither smiled nor frowned. "I think so," she said.

"No you don't!" he cried. "You've got to promise now or I'll withdraw!"

"I tell you something," said Bela, concealing the wicked sparkle in her eye. "I don't want the big man. Not want the black man either. I tell you, if I marry any of the three, I tak' you."

Conceding Joe swallowed it whole. "I'm satisfied," he cried. "By George, I'd like to bind it with a kiss!"

"Look out, you turn us over," said Bela coolly. "The water moon cold."

Joe was quite carried away. "You bear it," he cried. "Your skin is like cream. Your hair is like black velvet. You sit there as proud as a leading lady. I can't wait for you!"

"I ain't promise nothing yet," said Bela warily.

Johnny Gagnon's place was at the strategic point on Muesqueam, where the forest ended and the meadows began. In the winter-time the freighters left the ice here, and headed straight across the bottom lands for the lake.

Gagnon kept a stopping-house for the freighters. It was the last house on the route to the head of the lake seventy-five miles away, excepting the shack at Nisquam Point, which had never been occupied until Big Jack and his party camped there.

Besides being a strategic point, it was one of those natural sites for a homestead that men pick out when there is a whole land to choose from. The bank rolled up gradually from the water's edge, and Gagnon's establishment was revealed from the river—dwelling, bunk-house, stable—all built of logs and crouching low on the ground as if for warmth.

The buildings had been there so long they had become a part of the landscape. The log walls were weathered to a silvery gray, and the vigorously sprouting roof repeated the note of the surrounding grass.

On this particular afternoon there was something about at Johnny Gagnon's. The different members of the large family were running about like ants in a disturbed hill. A cloud of dust was issuing from the house door, propelled by a resolute broom.

Innumerable pails of water were being carried up from the river, and windows and doors were being washed. One of the boys was burning rubbish; another was making a landing-stage of logs on the muddy shore.

In any other place such a spasmodic house-cleaning need excite no remark, but among the happy-go-lucky natives of the north it is portentous. Clearly a festival was imminent.

Such was the sight that met the eyes of those in the rowboat and the dugout as they came around the bend above. Johnny Gagnon himself came running down to meet them. He was a little, purely Indian in feature and coloring, but betraying a vivacity which suggested the French ancestor who had provided him with a surname.

The surname lasts longer than most white characteristics. It is a prized possession. If a man has a surname he votes.

Johnny was a vivacious Indian. Such anomalies are not uncommon on the border of the wilderness. His sloe-black eyes were prone to snap and twinkle, and his lips to part over darning jests.

His hand helped out his tongue in the innumerable Latin style. Though he was the father of four strapping sons and several marriageable girls, not to speak of the smaller fry, time had left surprisingly few marks on him.

Johnny held up his hands at the sight of Sam. He was delighted to have this additional excitement added to his brimming store.

"What a prisoner!" he cried. "Good! we will have a trial. You must tell me all. You come back just right. Big tam! Big tam! Never was so much fun in my house before!"

"What's up?" asked Jack.

"Big crowd comin' to-morrow!" replied the excited Johnny Gagnon. "Tracking up rapids to-day. Send a fellow up ahead ask my wife take plenty bread."

"What all is it?"

Johnny counted them off on his fingers: "Bishop Lajeunesse and two priests. Every year come to marry and baptize. That's three. Four, Indian agent. Him come pay Indian government money by the treaty. Got to come. Five, come to see doctor. He look at him for sick. It is in the treaty. Six, seven, Sergeant Coulson and 'noter policeman. They go round wit' agent and ask all if any man do wrong to him. That is eight. Nine, come to see doctor. But wait! But wait! There is something else beside!"

"What?" asked Jack.

"A white woman!" announced Johnny, triumphantly.

Bela frowned and stole a side glance at Sam. The subject was lately come from the land of white women were not especially impressed.

"Only one white woman here before," Johnny went on. "Her com' y'all trader's wife. This her sister, Cal' Meos Macabell. Her old, but not no oases' at all. That is funny thing. I think. Boys say all talk laugh, nod head. Call her chickadee woman."

Bela looked relieved at this description.

Sam, hearing of the expected company, smiled. Surely with the law that the church at hand, an honest man had nothing to fear. He glanced at Bela a little triumphantly, but she made her face inscrutable to him.

Somewhat to his surprise, he perceived that Jack and the other men were also pleased at the news. There was something here he did not understand.

CHAPTER XIV.

Sam, tied hand and foot, was confined in the bunkhouse at Gagnon's. All the heavy hours of his imprisonment were charged up against Bela, and by morning the score was a heavy one.

Big Jack or one of the other men was always in the room or at the door, and Bela had no opportunity to approach the prisoner.

Bela slept in the main house with the Gagnon girls. Before the general turning in that night, Big Jack and Black Shand each ordered to separate her from the others long enough to make a proposal similar to Joe's. In each case Bela returned the same answer.

Next morning they were all early astir. The Gagnon boys put on clean blue-tinged shirts and red woolen washes, and the girls tied their sable locks with orange and cerise ribbons. The cheeks of both boys and girls bore a high polish.

Squaw Gagnon tucked up lace window curtains for a final touch and brought out a square of carpet for the bishop to rest his reverend feet upon. To this household it was the greatest day in the year, and the sun was shining like the blindest-checked Gagnon.

Johnny Gagnon himself was the most excited of the family. "You come just right!" he was continually exclaiming to Jack. "They stop all day now. Have trial in my house. Maybe we A, D, dance. But we can slap and sing 'ow." The girls giggled delightedly at this suggestion.

Each one of the white men thought: "Damn at my wedding, maybe!" and gazed covertly at Bela, who looked out of the window.

Each one of the white men thought: "Damn at my wedding, maybe!" and gazed covertly at Bela, who looked out of the window.

"What! dance with the bishop here?" said Jack, affecting to be scandalized.

"Sure!" said Johnny. "Bishop Lajeunesse no lang-chin religieuse. Bishop say let 'ow folks have a good time. Laugh and nak' fun wherever he go. He is a man!"

Early as they were, they no sooner finished breakfast than they heard a shrill call from down river. Even soul about the place, excepting Sam, dropped what he was about and scampered down to the water's edge.

Presently around the bend below appeared the tracking crew, slipping in the ooze, scrambling over fallen trunks, plunging through willows. Behind them trailed the long, thin line that must be kept taut, whatever the obstruction. Finally the York boat poked its nose lazily into view like a gigantic duck.

The other four of the crew stood upon the cargo with long poles to fend her off the shore, and the steersman was mounted on a little platform in the waist stood the passengers. As the celebrities were recognized a shout went up from the shore.

There was the bishop with red buttons and the ordinary priests with black. There were the police in their grey, scarlet and blue uniforms, and with his bag of tools. Finally there was the blue hat with ostrich feathers that was already famous in the country.

Before the summer was out, news of that hat travelled all the way to the Arctic Ocean. Any one of these passengers would have made a gala day for Johnny Gagnon's family. To have them all at once was almost more than they could take in.

The tracking crew was on the opposite bank. Coiling up their lines and jumping aboard, all hands poled her across. The bishop, gathering his cassock around his waist, was the first to leap ashore.

Wonderful Invention.

Thomas A. Edison was talking about some of the queer anti-submarine inventions that had been submitted to the national defence committee. "The best I can say for them," he declared, "is that they remind me of the lunatic. A lunatic in an asylum once said to a visitor: 'I ain't a lunatic, mister. I'm a sane as you are. I'm an inventor, I am. I've got an invention that is going to make me a second John D. Here, let me explain it to you.' 'The lunatic took out a pencil and an old envelope and drew a bird cage. 'There you are,' he said. 'That's the invention. Just a cage, an ordinary bird cage, but you'll observe that on this side there's a door with a heavy iron knob, and on the opposite side there's another door, also with a heavy knob. 'Now, then, you see, we take this bird cage and we put her on a bronze pedestal 17 feet high, the pedestal standing on a marble slab. We place a 17-foot ladder on the right side of the pedestal, leading up to this door, and a 17-foot ladder on the other side, leading to the opposite door. 'Now, what happens? A fly comes along and climbs up the right-hand ladder. It opens the right-hand door by means of an iron knob, walks through the cage, opens the left-hand door by means of the other iron knob, and starts down the ladder on the other side. And that's where we get him, sir.' 'The inventor in his excitement gave a wild leap into the air. 'Yes, sir, that's where we get him,' he yelled. 'That's where the inventor comes in. That's where I make money. You see, mister, the eighth rung is missing in this second ladder, but the fly doesn't know it, and he falls on the marble slab and breaks his neck.'—Exchange.

TORONTO FAT STOCK SHOW

Get Good Results With Either Flowers or Vegetables.

Never permit the surface of the soil in the garden to form a crust. Constant stirring with hand tools or a when cultivator should be practiced between the rows and about the plants. This permits air to penetrate the soil, where it facilitates chemical action and bacterial activity, destroys weeds which would utilize large amounts of plant food that the cultivated plants require, and finally it conserves the moisture supply. The hoe and rake are most generally used for this purpose. The advice applies with equal force to both the flower and vegetable gardens.

"Do you tell bedtime stories to your kids?"

"I used to, but my wife always calls me a liar in such a loud tone that the kids would wake and start to cry."

THE CAUSE OF BACKACHE

Every muscle in the body needs constantly a supply of rich, red blood in proportion to the work it does. The muscles of the back are under a heavy strain, and have but little rest. When the blood is thin they lack nourishment, and the result is a sensation of pain in those muscles. Some people think the pain in the back means kidney trouble, but the best medical authorities agree that backache seldom or never has anything to do with the kidneys. Organic kidney disease may have progressed to a critical point without developing a pain in the back. In the case of the ill-sufferer to look to the condition of his blood. It will be found in most cases that the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to build up the blood will stop the sensation of pain in the back. How nourished muscles of the back. ### Hard to Drop Meat?

All depends on what you eat as a substitute. It is a good time to study "food value." You may be eating the wrong foods, the foods that cost most and give the least nutriment. Shredded Wheat Biscuit contains more real, body-building nutriment, pound for pound, than meat, eggs or potatoes, and costs much less. Two of these Biscuits with milk and a little fruit make a nourishing meal at a cost of a few cents. Make Shredded Wheat your "meat." A satisfying breakfast on which to start the day's work. It is ready-cooked and ready-to-eat. Made in Canada.

MRS. KESSE SICK SEVEN MONTHS

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Aurora, Ill.—"For seven long months I suffered from a female trouble, with severe pains in my back and sides until I became so weak I could hardly walk. The doctor purely in vain, and got so nervous I would jump at the slightest noise. I was entirely unfit to do my work, and was giving up hope of ever being well, when my sister asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took six bottles and today I am a healthy woman able to do my own housework. I wish every suffering woman would try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and find out for themselves how good it is."—Mrs. C. A. KESSE, 538 North Ave., Aurora, Ill.

The great number of uncollected testimonials on file at the Pinkham Laboratory, many of which are from time to time published by permission, are proof of the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, in the treatment of female ills.

Every ailing woman in Canada is cordially invited to write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass., for special advice. It is free, will bring you health and may save your life.

THE FOOD CONTROLLER SAYS:

The Report of the Minister of Agriculture for France, which shows a total cereal crop of less than one half of that for a normal year, emphasizes the necessity that Canada should strain every effort to provide food needed overseas for the Armies and the populations behind the fighting lines. There is a large deficit among all the cereals with the exception of barley. Despite very great efforts to maintain production, the native wheat supply of France is the poorest on record for the last fifty years, amounting to only 39,482,160 quintals (1 quintal = 220.46 lb.), as compared with 86,919,400 quintals in 1913, 76,936,065 quintals in 1914, 60,630,200 quintals in 1915, and 65,767,320 quintals in 1916.

As a consequence of the greatly reduced production of food on the farms of France, the people of the Republic may have still further to reduce their consumption of bread. The bread card system has been adopted in Paris and the other large centres and the amount of wheat flour which may legally be used in bread is limited to 80 per cent. France has already made tremendous sacrifices and in this time of need is dependent more than ever before upon the people of North America for food. The call has come to us to ensure that so far as possible supplies will be forthcoming in order that the soldiers need not have their rations reduced below the efficiency minimum and that thousands of women and children may be saved from terrible suffering and even from actual starvation.

There are people available for the of Canada numerous wholesome substitutes for wheat flour. Let us remember that the waste of even a spoonful of flour means depriving our Allies of food which is urgently needed now and which may be desperately needed before the next harvest, unless we are prepared to do our utmost to reduce our own consumption of wheat and make greater use than we are making at present of substitutes.

To the Electors of West Hastings:

Having been solicited to become a candidate for West Hastings in the present election by many prominent electors of the constituency both Conservatives and Liberals, and having been advised that the executive of the Conservative party refused to join the executive of the Liberal party in endeavoring to avoid an election by the selection of a candidate that would be acceptable to both parties, I have decided to offer myself for election, without any political party recognition, as an independent supporter of the present Government, to win the War, and solicit the support of all those who think it is time to drop party politics and unite our efforts to overthrow the Germans. I believe in this most serious time that we should adopt what the Romans did, "when none were for the party and all were for the State."

Tenders for Pulpwood Limit

Tenders will be received by the undersigned up to and including the seventeenth day of December next for the right to cut pulpwood and pile it on a certain area situate in the vicinity of the Kapuskasing River in the District of Timiskaming and Algoma.

Tenderers are to offer a flat rate per cord for all classes of pulpwood, whether spruce or other woods. The successful tenderer shall be required to deliver the Red and White Pine on the limit a flat rate of $10 per thousand feet board measure.

The successful tenderer shall also be required to erect a mill or mills on or near the territory, and to manufacture the wood into pulp and paper in the Province of Ontario, in accordance with the terms and conditions of sale which can be had on application to the Department.

Parties making tender will be required to deposit with their tender a marked cheque payable to the Honourable the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario, for Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00), which amount will be forfeited in the event of their not entering into agreement to carry out conditions, etc. The said Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00) will be held by the Department until such time as the terms and conditions of the agreement to be entered into have been complied with and the said mills erected, equipped and in operation. The said sum may then be applied in such amounts and at such times as the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines may direct in payment of accounts for dues or of any other obligation due the Crown until the whole sum has been applied.

The highest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

For particulars as to description of territory, capital to be invested, etc., apply to the undersigned.

AN OPEN LETTER

Belleville, Nov. 22nd, 1917

TO THE LADIES OF WEST HASTINGS:

The mother, wife, widow, daughters and sisters of Canadian heroes who have gone overseas to fight for us the battle for freedom and liberty, right and justice and civilization of the world will for the first time be privileged to exercise the right to vote in the General Election to be held on the 17th of December next. Their names are now being enrolled on the Voter's Lists for that purpose. The sorrow and suffering these women have endured and the sacrifices they have made no words of mine could adequately describe—suffice it to say that the granting of the franchise is no adequate compensation, but at least it is an acknowledgement of the justice of your right to have a say as to what shall be the fate of our men and boys.

The Government of Sir Robert Borden, in which I had the honor of being the member for West Hastings, recognizing your right, passed the legislation which gives each of you the right to vote in this election.

No more sacred duty could be placed upon these ladies than that of exercising their right to vote and to vote in such a way and for such a candidate as will bring the greatest help to your men and boys and the greatest comfort to yourselves. Sir Robert Borden's Union Government promises you the only hope for relief of the men at the front and the return of your loved ones to your home and fireside. I am the chosen candidate of that Government in this election to advocate your cause, and I solemnly promise to stand by you and do all I can. Many of you during the past three years have had occasion to make use of my services in regard to your husband, your sons or yourselves, which you know has always been promptly and willingly and without any charge or fee given. You know how faithfully I have looked after the interests of returned men and boys in filling every position in the public service that has become vacant by one of them. I shall always use my best efforts and abilities in the same way. My opponent, Mr. R. J. Graham, poses as a supporter of the Union Government of Sir Robert Borden, but he has not the approval of that Government, and I have, and if any of you have been or are employed by him it is because it is to his own personal gain that you are so employed and you have given faithful labor for all the pay you got and you are under no obligation to him. Nor do I wish it inferred that you are under any obligation to me. You know whether you want your men and boys back or not. You know who can help you to get them back, and I pledge you that I will do everything I can to help win the war and hasten the return of your husband or son or other relative who already have covered themselves with undying glory, back to their happy homes and to a grateful Canada.

In fulfilling your sacred duty I most respectfully ask you for your vote and influence in my behalf.

I have the honor to be,

Your obedient servant,

E. GUSS PORTER.

Mr. E. Guss Porter's Meeting a Huge Success

Union Government Candidate Receives a Rousing Reception in Stirling

Certainly the loyalty of the citizens of Stirling and the adjacent districts was demonstrated in a truly patriotic manner when on Tuesday evening of this week, the Union Government Candidate, Mr. E. Guss Porter paid us his usual visit previous to election.

The Opera House, Stirling's spacious building, was not only taxed to its utmost capacity, but many many people were unable to gain admission and went away bitterly disappointed.

The people throughout the community are thinkers, and listening to the clear cut arguments, most forcible in every particular, went home with a feeling of satisfaction over having spent a thoroughly interesting evening.

Dr. Potts acted as chairman and in a few well chosen remarks introduced the speakers.

Mr. Henry Denyes in his usual fluent manner outlined the action of the Government in granting franchise to the women whose husbands or brothers were at the front. We are not discussing Political Parties now, but the one party who is interested in the future of the great Dominion of Canada,—namely the Unionists. Union government can only win the war. Let us stand true to our colors and vote for the Union candidate, Mr. E. Guss Porter who has so ably represented us during the last 17 years.

Sgt. Major Spafford was then called to give his ideas regarding the Union Government. He spoke of the battle of Vimy Ridge and the taking of Regina Trench in which so many gallant sons of Canada laid down their lives. They fought nobly and well, in spite of all the hardships they had to endure, in mud, in water, with dead bodies round about them, and finally those Canadian arms triumphed. Would you desert them when they need you so badly? Will they who have fallen have paid the supreme sacrifice for naught? Vote as if you are conscious of being in the very presence of the heroic dead whose life blood was given for you. France gave her all for freedom's cause. All her sons have gone. Let us stand side by side in this hour of trial. I say, vote for win the war. Vote for E. Guss Porter, the Union Government candidate.

Pte. Miller Carl a wounded soldier spoke of conditions at the Front saying, "Those boys need your help, vote for Union Government. When in Quebec Sir Wilfred Laurier found time to visit many places, but no time was found to visit Military headquarters. United we stand. Stand by the boys overseas."

Mayor Ketcheson of Belleville spoke of the loyalty and devotion of Stirling people. They had met every response in a truly patriotic manner. What stand were they now taking? Mr. Graham had called himself an Independent candidate. What did that mean? A Union Government man and an independent vote for the Union Government man.

All received hearty applause, but when Mr. E. Guss Porter rose to speak one could easily tell how the people of Stirling were going to mark their ballots. The people of this constituency are thinking people, as we say, and have been asking themselves a few things about Mr. R. J. Graham, the (Independent Candidate).

(1) Why does he travel through the country with a band in attend ance. What this extravagance? Why not give the surplus cash or the cash for which he has no use to the workingmen or to patriotic purposes?

(2) Mr. Graham says 75% of the profits are returned to the government. Why? Is it because of intense patriotism which he possesses, or because he is compelled to do so?

(3) Why, if from patriotic principles did he not give 75% of the money profits from this war in which tens of thousands of poor boys have died on the battlefield away from homes and kin instead of using such sums of money to erect a huge domicile on the Trenton Belleville road, fashioned after we understand the White House, Washington.

(4) Why is Mr. Graham anxious to represent West Hastings? Let the public stop and think for a moment. Mr. Voter you are not going to be made a millionaire nor do you wish it even though the opportunity came to you, out of this sad war. Of course some millionaires aspire to great things.

Now Mr. Voter, one question. Where did all Mr. Graham's wealth come from? Did this war create it or not? If so, who pays the profits Mr. Graham has made?

BIG DISTASTER AT HALIFAX

From 800 to 2,000 Dead—Whole Northern Section of City Laid Waste—35 Team Loads of Bodies at Inc. Morgue.

Halifax, N. S., Report.—Many hundreds of people are dead and thousands are injured and homeless because of a frightful explosion, and the fire which followed it to-day. All the extreme north end of the city is devastated. The city is cut off from telegraphic communication with the world, and this message is being sent by special train to Toronto, there to be put on the wire.

The disaster was caused primarily by the Belgian relief steamer, the Mont Blanc, entering the harbor coming into collision with the Dartmouth side, and soon after the ship blew up, with 5,000 tons of high explosives. The Belgian ship was beached on the shore of the Dartmouth side, and the fragments of the ship and her munitions were scattered all over the northern part of the city, and the violence of the explosion wrecked all the buildings in that part of the city.

HUNDREDS OF DEAD.

Great structures were roofed and demolished. Water-front was wrecked from the C. G. R. terminals northward to Fairview, two miles distance, and westward half a mile to the north. The houses, which were killed as they stood in their houses along the water-front and others met death by the crashing impact of the water-front. In a few minutes the houses were completely wrecked in the north end, and the buildings were completely wrecked. No house in the entire city escaped the destruction of its glass, some of the dwellings in the distant south end even losing all their glass and all of them a large portion of it. No man can yet tell the number of dead. Our correspondent counted 300 dead, and it is not likely that one.

The blame for the collision is placed on the pilot of the Belgian relief steamer, whose name is William Hayes, but this will have to be established by formal investigation by the authorities. The catastrophe either been seen since the pilot commission or his home.

DETAILS OF DISASTER.

Halifax, N. S., Report.—As the result of a terrific explosion aboard the French munition ship Mont Blanc in Halifax harbor this morning a large part of the north end of the city and along the water-front in ruins and the loss of life is appalling. Conservative estimates place the death toll at 800, although Chief of Police Hanrahan to-night estimated that the dead may reach two thousand. Twenty-five teams loaded with bodies have arrived at one of the morgues. On one ship alone 40 persons were killed. Thousands have been injured. The property damage is enormous, and there is scarcely a window left in a building in the city.

Among the dead are the fire chief and his deputy. They were hurled to death when the fire engine exploded. Fire followed the explosion and this added to the greatest catastrophe in the history of the city.

Two members of the crew of the H. M. C. Noble were killed and a number injured.

All business has been suspended and armed guards of soldiers and sailors are patrolling the city.

Not a street car is moving, and part of the city is in darkness. All the hospitals and many private houses are filled with injured.

The offices of the railway station, Arena Rink, Military gymnasium, sugar refinery and elevator collapsed and injured scores of people.

The Mont Blanc was bound from New York for Bedford Basin when she collided with a Belgian relief ship bound for sea. The crew of the munition ship was killed. The pilot claims the collision was due to confusion of signal whistles.

Following the collision the explosion occurred, and in an instant the whole city was shaken from its foundation. Thousands rushed for the open, and some of the little children in the schools became panic-stricken. On every street could be seen adults and children with blood streaming from their wounds rushing to the nearest doctor's office. The work of rescue was greatly impeded by the piles of debris in the devastated area. A part of the town of Dartmouth is also in ruins.

Nearly all the buildings in the dock yard are in ruins.

Practically all the north end of the city has been laid in waste.

TWO SQUARE MILES LEVELLED.—The destruction extends from North street railway station, north, as far north as Africville to Bedford basin, and covers about two square miles.

The buildings which were not destroyed by the explosion were laid waste by the fire which followed.

Thousands of people have been rendered homeless. The Academy of Music and many other public buildings have been thrown open to house the homeless.

Five hundred tents have been erected on the common, and these will be occupied by the troops, who have been ordered to the city.

Temporary hospitals and morgues have been opened in the school houses in the western section of the city. The doctors and nurses worked specially in rendering aid to the injured.

STREET AFTER STREET IN RUINS.—The main damage, however, was done in the north end of the city, known as Richmond, which was opposite the point of the vessels' collision.

The damage is so extensive as to be totally beyond the flood of description. The north end of the city is in ruins and flames swept over the district.

In this section many of the larger buildings are a smouldering heap of ruins and the ordinary frame houses are a more heap of shattered, flattened ruins.

Automobiles scurried here and there in this section of the city, each bearing a blanket-clad burden which told only too plainly of serious injuries or in many cases death.

The hospitals, each and every one with admirable order, were rendering aid, and in the military hospitals the soldiers who were on guard duty were being hurried into the wards to aid in the relief.

Five minutes after the explosion occurred the streets were filled with a terror-stricken mob of people, each one trying to make his way as best he might to the outer range of what they thought was a German raid.

"Women rushed in terror-stricken mobs through the streets, many of them with children clasped to their breasts. In their eyes was a look of horror, which in many cases held the bodies of loved ones. With dry eyes they watched their homes perish in the flames, and as others passed with enquiries as to whether they could render any aid they shook their heads in a dazed manner, and turned their gaze on only to the piles of wreckage which had withered all in its path.

By the side of many of the burning ruins were women, who watched with horror the flames as they consumed the houses, which in many cases held the bodies of loved ones. With dry eyes they watched their homes perish in the flames, and as others passed with enquiries as to whether they could render any aid they shook their heads in a dazed manner, and turned their gaze on only to the piles of wreckage which had withered all in its path.

Here and there by a cracked and shattered telegraph pole was a cloth-wrapped body, and a tiny, scared child, who was clinging to the pole, the horrible explosion which had withered all in its path.

By the side of many of the burning ruins were women, who watched with horror the flames as they consumed the houses, which in many cases held the bodies of loved ones. With dry eyes they watched their homes perish in the flames, and as others passed with enquiries as to whether they could render any aid they shook their heads in a dazed manner, and turned their gaze on only to the piles of wreckage which had withered all in its path.

WHOLE FAMILIES WIPED OUT.—Among the hundreds who were killed by the explosion was one particularly sad case of a Canadian Government employee named Macdonald, who, on rushing to his home after the explosion, found that all his family, consisting of his wife and four children, had perished. Before him on the roadway lay the mangled remains of his two-year-old child, who had not death while playing on the roadside.

Many of those composing the crews of ships in the harbor were killed and injured. The damage along the water front is very serious. On one steamer, the Picton, it is reported that 33 of the crew of 45 have been killed. Many bodies of seamen have been picked up in the harbor and rescue parties are at work among the ruins of buildings removing the bodies of the dead.

Pilot Frank MacKie, who was on the French munition ship, declares that the accident was due to a confusion of whistles sounded by the Belgian relief steamer.

CITY COMPLETELY ISOLATED

All the telegraph wires were destroyed, and when the explosion occurred the operators jumped from their keys and raced for the open. All the telephones were also put out of order. For a time Halifax was completely isolated from the outside world.

After the explosion the whole population was thrown into a state of excitement by the report that a second munition ship, or the magazine at the dockyard, might blow up. Automobiles rushed through the streets warning the people to rush to the open spaces in the south end of the city. In less than half an hour 5000 people, lightly clad, had gathered on the common, and hundreds of others sought refuge in the fields.

The magazine was flooded, and by moon all the danger was passed. Scores of people are reported missing, and it is not known whether they are dead or at the homes of friends.

The concussion shattered the big gasometer, and thousands of feet of gas escaped. All the power plants in the city are out of business and the newspaper offices have been badly wrecked that publication of the papers is impossible.

Bluejackets from an American warship are assisting in patrolling the streets to-night.

Among the dead is Lebrun Coleman, manager of the Canadian Express Company. He was killed at North street station when the roof collapsed.

AT THE HOSPITALS

It was a day of suffering at the Victoria General Hospital. Suffering for the unfortunate women, men and children who were so grievously injured, suffering for the unborn who waited within awaiting news of the condition of their loved ones, is a daily case to hear later that they had passed to the great beyond. Suffering for the doctors, nurses and volunteer workers, who so nobly administered aid to the wounded and dying.

Every available nook and cranny of the spacious building was made ready for those who had been injured. It was very shortly after the explosion occurred that the first cases were brought in, and from then during the day and evening, in fact, all night, the hospital workers were continually working their utmost, the showing of the most skilled people to all the serious cases which came in at all hours.

The slight casualties, those who suffered slight cuts from the falling glass in one of the streets, and those who were sent to their homes. But there were many very serious cases. Some of the most serious cases which came in at all hours. The slight casualties, those who suffered slight cuts from the falling glass in one of the streets, and those who were sent to their homes. But there were many very serious cases. Some of the most serious cases which came in at all hours.

Many DIED IN HOSPITAL.—For some who were brought in early no hopes of recovery were entertained, and before long the death-rattle received its first victims. Toward evening the hospital was crowded and had been brought to one of the morgues, and then there were other cases who, it was feared, would breathe their last before morning.

Despite the fact that many of the devoted doctors, each and every one, had an attention of whose fortunes they knew nothing, they bravely responded to the call of duty and stood to their guns day and night. There will be many men and women in Halifax who will speak of the care and attention which they received at the Victoria General Hospital.

SAV THE COLLISION.—Charles Best, gasoline engineer on the steamer Wasp, B., at the drydock, told the following story:

"We had 80 gallons of gasoline in both tanks, which exploded when a shell from the munition ship struck the Wasp. B. The latter had just left the drydock to go to Bedford Basin to get some plates from one of the troopers, and as the ship was opposite the Lorne Club, we saw the Belgian ship from the basin, and the Mont Blanc going up.

"I heard the Belgian steamer's whistle blowing, and the only thing I remember after was No. 1. I heard the munition ship on fire on the starboard side.

"We made an attempt to turn back toward the official at the drydock, but before reaching there a shell struck us. I think that I was the only one of the five on board the Wasp. B. to escape, as the ship was blown up. My son, Harold, perished.

What is known as Tuff's Cove. At 9 o'clock the city was enjoying its usual period of calm, and the streets were crowded with people wending their way, little thinking of what was in a few minutes to befall them.

Suddenly, like a bolt from the blue, there came an explosion. From the end of the city to the other glass fell and people were lifted from the sidewalks and thrown flat into the streets. In the downtown offices just beginning to hum with the usual day's activities, clerks and headclerks were covered under the shower of falling glass and plaster which fell about their heads.

The collision was a terrific one, the munition boat being pierced on the port side practically to the engine-room.

The relief vessel, which was practically uninjured, kept going ahead with the wounded craft, and when the fire was seen to break aboard her, backed away, and the crew started to abandon her.

The Mont Blanc drifted away, a burning wreck, while the relief boat, beached near Tuff's Cove, on the Dartmouth side of the harbor. Seven minutes after the collision the explosion occurred. Under the force of the explosion houses crumpled like decks of cards, while the unfortunate residents were swept to death in the debris.

In the main portion of the city, where the buildings are more or less of stone or concrete, the damage was confined to the blowing in of windows, and the injuries sustained by the falling glass. Proceeding south to the extreme end of the city, the same thing was observed.

In the west end, and northwest end, the damage was more extensive, and the walls of the houses were in places blown to atoms and the plaster and laths strewn on the streets more like a small section of Flanders than a town or city of Canada.

CREW ESCAPED IN BOATS.—In addition to her cargo of munitions the Mont Blanc carried a deck load of benzine, and this caught fire following the explosion. The captain of the Mont Blanc ordered his crew to take to the boats. The men hastily left the ship in two boats and rowed for the Halifax side of the harbor, which they reached in safety.

The men ran for safety as they felt that an explosion was inevitable. Less than 20 minutes later the explosion occurred and the men were hurled flat on the ground.

The munition ship after the crew left her veered in towards the harbor and the harbor and the city received the full force of the explosion.

The rescuers, who were early on the scene, say that the sights in the Public schools at the north end of the city were pitiable. They found the bodies of dozens of little children and scores of others with broken limbs and covered with blood.

ADMIT GUILT.—General Byng has realized Napoleon's definition of a general's greatest quality, "to know when to retreat and to do it."

"We have fallen back deliberately and successfully on a well-chosen line, which rules out the salient made by Bourlon Wood, and should enable us to maintain our hold upon the captured length of the Hinnenburg line against any pressure."

THE GERMAN VERSION.—In their retirement in the Cambrai sector the War Office says the British destroyed villages, leaving traces there and in the city of Cambrai previously damaged, which will long be visible on French soil.

The British are reported to have withdrawn to the heights north and east of Flasquies.

The losses suffered by the British in the Cambrai region are said to have been heavy. The number of prisoners taken has been increased to more than 9,000, and the number of guns captured to 145.

San Francisco Wire.—Three of the most prominent of the thirty-four defendants on trial, charged with conspiracy to foment revolution among British rule in India, pleaded guilty to the United States District Court.

They were Lieut. von Brincken, former military attaché of the German Consulate-General here; Geo. Rodiek, former German Consul at Honolulu, and H. A. Schroeder, who succeeded Rodiek as Consul at Honolulu.

Lieut. von Brincken furnished the reason for the sudden change in the plans of the former German consular agents, which came to a dramatic opening to court to-day.

"I think we can serve our country best by pleading guilty, and avoiding further exposures in court proceedings," he said. "The less said about the cases the better it will be for Germany."

Lieut.-Col. William A. Brooks, acting chief surgeon of the State Guard, was placed in charge of the unit of surgeons and nurses. Officials of the Boston and Maine Central and the Canadian railways promptly made all arrangements to put the train through in record time.

The War Department was asked to use its wireless to inform Mayor of Halifax that the relief train was coming. The train consists of two baggage cars, two sleepers, and a buffet car.

The decision to send the relief party was made at the meeting of the Public Safety Commission and officers of the State Guard, called by Governor McCall. President James H. Hustis, of the Boston and Maine Railroad, told the magazine that he would have the train ready by 10 p.m.

Chairman Victor Heath, of the Boston Public Safety Committee, promised the co-operation of the city authorities. He said the Boston committee funds which could be drawn upon.

On motion by Bernard J. Rothwell, former president of the Chamber of Commerce, the meeting went on record as ready to back by popular subscription any expenses that might be found necessary in the relief work.

MAINE ALSO IN LINE.—Augusta, Maine, Report.—Governor Milliken said the following telegram to the Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia and the Mayor of Halifax:

"I extend to you the deepest sympathy of the people of Maine in the terrible disaster that has stricken Halifax. Any help Maine can give is yours."

Five carloads of supplies, including additional telegraph material, groceries, and dry goods, left Portland to-night by special train for Halifax.

OCCURRED NEAR PIER EIGHT.—The collision, which occurred between the two steamers, took place near Pier Eight, which was between a French munition ship, the Mont Blanc, and an unnamed Belgian relief ship.

ENEMY UNAWARE OF WITHDRAWAL

Of British Troops From Bourlon Wood Salient.

Byng Showed General's Greatest Quality.

London Cable.—The withdrawal of the British from a small Cambrai salient, forehanded by Gen. Maurice, Chief Director of Military Operations at the British War Office, has been successfully carried out without the Germans appearing to be aware of the movement until the following morning.

The test of Sir Douglas Haig's statement from headquarters reads: "On the night of Tuesday our troops holding the salient formed by our positions in the neighborhood of Noyelles-Sur-Liscent and Bourlon Wood, were withdrawn a short distance to position southwest of these localities. The withdrawal was made successfully without interference from the enemy, who, until a late hour yesterday, appeared not to be aware of the movement."

"Prior to the withdrawal the enemy's field works in the abandoned area were systematically destroyed. Further hostile attacks yesterday evening in the neighborhood of La Vacquerie were repulsed. Losses inflicted continued in this locality during the night. Southwest of the village our line has been advanced slightly. The night report from Field Marshal Haig's headquarters says: 'Local fighting has taken place again to-day in the neighborhood of La Vacquerie without any change in the situation. In the area south of Bourlon Wood, minor hostile attacks were repulsed with several losses on the enemy from the fire of our artillery and infantry. The hostile infantry has been active at a number of points south of the Scarpe and also in the neighborhood of Armentieres.'"

The military correspondent at British headquarters in France sends the following:

"General Byng has realized Napoleon's definition of a general's greatest quality, 'to know when to retreat and to do it.'"

"We have fallen back deliberately and successfully on a well-chosen line, which rules out the salient made by Bourlon Wood, and should enable us to maintain our hold upon the captured length of the Hinnenburg line against any pressure."

THURSDAY, DEC. 13, 1917

We are passing through the greatest crisis in human history. If the free people of the earth are to win in this gigantic struggle: if freedom, liberty and justice are to triumph, all party differences must be sunk and we must all unite and support the Union Government. There is only one Canadian party with one supreme end in view and that is to win the war.

The formation of the Union Government is the greatest thing that has ever taken place in Canadian history. The action of our political leaders must be endorsed by the people of Canada. It is a duty every man and woman owes to their country. Every true patriot seeks first of all the good of his country, not for power or honor to himself; he is governed by the laws of the country and protected by these laws. At a time like the present when strenuous efforts are being made to help the Empire, and men and money so much needed. It is quite reasonable to infer that one who would act promptly and energetically is the one best fitted for the office and that E. Guss Porter the Union Government candidate.

The Only Way To Support Union Government Is by Voting for Candidates Endorsed by Premier

When the Electors go to the Polls they will have to take one of two courses—they must either support the Union Government by marking their ballots for the candidates endorsed by the Government, or aid the forces of Laurier by marking their ballots for candidates opposing the endorsed candidates of the Government. There is no third course when it comes to marking the ballot; There is no such thing as an Independent Unionist or Independent Liberal. All candidates are either the accredited representatives of the Union Government or opponents of that Government. It is for the people to say by their votes whether they favor a Union Government or the policy of Laurier.

This applies to West Hastings. Mr. Porter is the accredited representative for West Hastings.

All who desire Union Government and a successful termination of the War, should support and cast their ballots for Mr. E. Guss Porter.

RIVER VALLEY

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Boulton called on Mr. Alex Bush, Friday afternoon and spent the evening with Mr. Wm. Bush. A number of boys from here enjoyed themselves skating on the ice up at the Lake, Friday night.

An exceedingly good attendance of both visitors and members were present at our W.I. meeting held at Mrs. Howard's last Thursday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Alex Bush spent Saturday in the city.

Our S.S. is preparing for a Xmas Tree in the School-house, the 19th. inst. A splendid program of recitations, dialogues and drills, etc. will be given. Everybody welcome.

Miss Lucy Boulton visited her friend, Miss Eva Bird, Oak Lake last Friday evening.

There was no S. S. last Sunday on account of the blustery storm and impassable roads.

Quite a number in this neighborhood have heavy colds and some are suffering with the Grippe as well.

Mr. Robt. Bush spent the week end with his brother, George, at Ottawa.

FRANKFORD

On Tuesday evening a large crowd entered the home of Mrs. J. Carr and presented her niece Miss Ethel Carr with a miscellaneous shower. The gifts were both numerous and useful showing the high esteem in which she was held by the people of town and vicinity. After the prospective bride and groom, lunch was served and the evening very pleasantly spent.

Mr. and Mrs. Meyers also Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Johnston attended the funeral of Eva Cox at Stockdale on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Allen Latta of the 3rd Con. of Sidney spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Ed Prentice in town.

Rev. Knox spent Sunday in Maloe, preaching anniversary services there.

The funeral of Mr. Dan Carr was held at the home of Mr. Hiram Smith on Thursday afternoon at 2 p.m. interment in the cemetery here.

Miss Vernia Smith of Campbellford spent a few days in town attending the funeral of her uncle Mr. Carr.

Mrs. Vandervoort of Trenton was in town on Friday to attend the funeral of her niece Eva Cox of Stockdale.

Mr. W. H. Phillips had two car loads of coals arrive in town on Saturday and it was being hauled away as fast as it could be loaded in the wagons and weighed.

Mr. J. B. Ford spent a few days in Toronto last week.

The wedding of Mr. Herman They and Miss Ethel Carr was solemnized in Stirling on Wednesday by Rev. B. F. Byers. They left for a honeymoon trip and on their return they will reside in town. The best wishes of the community follow them for a happy and prosperous wedded life.

Mr. Giles our former druggist spent Thursday in town.

BELLVIEW

We are having a very cold snap in this vicinity just now. Tuesday morning the thermometer registered 14 degrees below zero.

It has been decided by St. Marks Sunday School to hold their annual Christmas Tree and concert in Springbrook on the Saturday before Christmas, Dec. 22nd.

A very pleasant evening was spent on Nov. 28th. at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Eastwood when their youngest son, Sapper D. Ross Eastwood and Sapper Vernon J. Reid, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Reid were presented with silver rings by their friends and neighbors from the 17th and 13th. lines of Rawdon. The boys enlisted some months ago with the Divisional Signallers and have been in barracks for quite a while at Ottawa. They were home this time on their last leave and their many friends were glad of the opportunity to see them again before they sail for England and France. Their was plenty of music and games and after the address was read and the presentation made, coffee, sandwiches and cake were served.

Will Serve Lunch

On the afternoon and evening, of Dec. 22nd and 24th, the members of the W.I. purpose serving lunch in the Agricultural Room.

This will be found a convenience to all Christmas shoppers, more especially perhaps to those from the country.

Call in and refresh the inner man before a cold drive home.

Proceeds entirely in aid of Red Cross.

River Valley Apron Social

The apron social held at River Valley school-house on Friday evening Nov. 30th, proved itself successful in every way. Considering the weather conditions, a good programme was given which seemed to be thoroughly enjoyed by all who were there. Mr. A. D. McIntosh acted as chairman for the evening. The opening chorus "Be British" was sung by a number of young people of River Valley. Recitations given by Miss Isabel Parks and Miss Ellen Shaw were well applauded. Solos were rendered by Miss May McIntosh. A quartette by Mr. and Mrs. Earl Morrow and Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh, also a song composed by five of River Valley gossips was well worth hearing. The Dialogue "Aunt Koberling's" given by seven young people of River Valley, deserved credit for the way in which each one played their part. The ticket was drawn on the quilt, Mrs. John Holmes of Anson, was the lucky winner.

Pie and sandwich was served by the members of the Institute. Proceeds amounted to $61.50 including quilt.

River Valley W.I. wish to acknowledge the receipt of $5.00, from Mrs. Geo. Myrington.

River Valley W.I. wish to thank Miss Maude Meggison for the donation of a crocheted yoke to our Institute, which brought the sum of $4.70. Mr. Guy Boulton was the lucky winner.

MISS FANNIE HESMAN Sec. Treas.

Notice is hereby given pursuant to the statute in that behalf, that all persons having claims against the Estate of WILLIAM POLLOCK, late of the Township of Rawdon in the County of Hastings, Yeoman, deceased, who died on or about the 3rd day of July 1917, are hereby required to send to G. A. Payne, Campbellford, Ontario, Solicitor for Elvin Chester Pollock and John Pollock, Executors of the Estate of the said WILLIAM POLLOCK, full particulars in writing of their claims, duly verified, on or before the 12th. day of January 1918, after which date the said Executors will proceed to distribute the assets of the said Estate among the parties entitled thereto, regard being had only to the claims of which the said Executors shall then have had notice.

Dated at Campbellford this 6th. day of December A. D. 1917.

G. A. Payne, Solicitor for Executors.

To Women Voters.

If your husband or brother or father is on the fighting line he will have less chance of being killed or injured if we send more men to help them, so that those in the field will not be overworked or over exposed. Vote to save your kindred. Don't desert the men who are risking their lives to defend you against enemy whose brutalities to women have shocked the civilized world? Vote for E. Guss Porter, the candidate endorsed by the Union Government.

WEST HUNTINGDON

A number from here attended the political meeting held at Ivanhoe on Friday evening in the interest of Mr. E. Guss Porter.

Mrs. Sill's sale was largely attended and everything sold at a high price.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Sexsmith and Miss Helen Scott of Selby were visitors here last week.

Master Gordon Clarke is on the sick list.

Mr. Jack York visited his friend Mr. Morley Haggerty last week.

Mrs. C. B. Hunt of Rayside is visiting her parents Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Wilson.

St. Andrews Sunday School is preparing an excellent programme for their Christmas Tree on 22nd. inst.

Winter seems to be here in all earnestness.

Mr. George Dufor had the misfortune to cut his foot while chopping down a tree recently. We are glad to report he is improving nicely under Dr. Zwick's care.

Practice Makes Perfect.

They were at the theater, and the young lady was immensely taken with the leading man. "Watch," she said, "with what precision he steps across the stage. Every stride is of exactly the same length." Her escort was just a little jealous. "Yes," he said cruelly. "I imagine that habit was acquired from walking the railroad ties."—New York Times.

Nothing Dull About It.

"It's funny that you poets speak of 'dull care,' isn't it?" "Why, what's funny about that?" "Well, every care I ever had was most awfully sharp."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Graham's Gramophone

Will Billy Deacon please change the record and substitute "The Dead March in Saul".

Now don't you forget I'm Graham From just down Belleville way, I've made more money since the war began Than lots of farmers made hay.

I've bought a great big Victory Bond Just to help the cause you bet And if I get every vote in Hastings West I'll beat out Porter yet.

Why just look what I've done for Belleville With my factories and employment too If I should ever leave that burg What would Deacon and Burrows do.

Just look what I do for labor For the farmer and his son Why don't you think Mallory's tickled He's stayed with me since I begun.

So with Deacon, Burrows and Mallory And the Fillion Factory's guns I'll just churn up old Hastings West To show you what I've done.

Of course I carry my own circus train And Patent medicine show And I always carry an audience To cheer me where 'ere I go.

And if you fellows don't vote for me After all that I have done I'll blow you all to smithereens With the fiction factory's gun.

IN WEST HASTINGS.

Some of the Things Mr. Porter has Done for West Hastings :

He was instrumental in securing the expenditure of $250,000 for the new wharf and warehouse at Belleville for the use of the business men and producers of the district.

Arranged to have the Belleville Post Office raised to the status of the city office with a house-to-house mail delivery twice daily by letter carriers.

Secured the establishment of Rural Free Mail Delivery throughout the country district.

Secured $87,000 to assist in the erection of the fine bridge which spans the river at Trenton, and had the Post Office in that town enlarged.

The British Chemical Works, which has brought thousands of dollars to West Hastings was secured through the persistent efforts of Mr. Porter.

The welfare of returned soldiers and their dependents has always been the first thought of Mr. Porter and he has always been at their service. Good positions have been secured for many returned soldiers through Mr. Porter's efforts, and he has been able to help the returned heroes and their dependents in many ways.

Compelled the Government to pay proper compensation for land taken for and damages sustained by reason of the Trent Canal.

Procured a remission of duty on raw mineral products shipped to the United States for refining and reshipment into Canada in the finished article.

Advocated a re-survey for mineral products in Hastings County (none having been made for 30 years) and work will begin this next spring.

Has given thousands of dollars for Patriotic and Red Cross work and bought War Bonds to the extent of his ability, being a man of very moderate means.

Fought the city's case to compel the C.N.R. and C.P.R. to build subways on Front St. South Belleville, and on the west side of the river, spending weeks of time and making many journeys to Ottawa free of any cost or charge to the city.

Secured the dredging of the harbours of Belleville and Trenton.

Insisted on and procured increased railway facilities for North Hastings, keeping up daily mail service after service had been reduced to three trains per week owing to war conditions.

Had established a number of new post offices where there was no rural mail delivery.

GIVE
YOUR VOTE

Procured contracts for local contractors on Trent Canal and the finishing of the Trenton end of the Canal first; whether large amounts for material and labor was expended to the advantage of the people of West Hastings.

Procured inter-switching of freight between all railways running through Belleville.

Procured by his advocacy orders from the Railway Commission to properly protect the Railway Crossings of the C.N.R. and C.P.R. in Sidney township near the cemetery and at the Bay Bridge.

Procured the abolition of net fishing in the Bay of Quinte from the Murray Canal to the Telegraph Light for the benefit of sportsmen and the protection of fishing interests.

Procured the dredging of the Narrows at Telegraph Light to allow deep draught boats to navigate, the bay.

Advocated and was one of a Special Committee to urge upon the Government the construction of a National Highway from Montreal to Detroit, which would pass through Hastings County, but the Bill was killed by the Senate.

Secured the appointment of an Immigration Agent in West Hastings to encourage British labourers, to locate here; many scores of whom did so.

Procured Belleville to be made a Military Headquarters for recruiting and mobilizing by which many thousands of dollars were expended there; the merchants getting the benefit.

Was instrumental in procuring contracts for various local manufacturers to produce clothing, munitions and war material, which brought many more thousands of dollars to Belleville.

Nearly all this, has it is true, been done in the last six years, for during the remainder of the time, Mr. Porter was in opposition to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Government, with which he had little chance to do anything.

Arranged to have the marble, quarried at the Baneroff quarries, used in the new wing of the Parliament Buildings, thus giving great prominence and valuable advertising to that product.

Obtained grant of $22,500 for construction of steel bridge at Frankford and the free use of the Government grounds there for a Recreation Park for the citizens.

Even this does not exhaust the list of Mr. Porter's activities, and he has reason to be proud of his record, and West Hastings should show its gratitude for it—and it WILL DO IT.

Win the War

A Laurier-Bourassa Victory means deserting our boys in the trenches for over a year, throwing up our hands and quitting! Don't shout "Kamerad" under the Referendum proposal. Come out and fight for Union Government.

Make No Mistake

IF LAURIER WINS:

(1) Canada will send no more reinforcements to the front, which practically means quitting the war and placing the country in the same class as Russia.

(2) The French-Canadians who have shirked their duty in this war will be the dominating force in the Government of the country.

ARE THE ENGLISH-SPEAKING PEOPLE PREPARED TO STAND FOR THAT?

It is because the French-Canadians have not done their duty that Conscription had to be resorted to.

The French-Canadians have made it perfectly clear that they do not like the war and are against Canada participating in it further. Some of them even go to the length of saying that the soldiers should be brought back from the front. The Nationalists are demanding that the men who have been enrolled under the Military Service Act be disbanded and sent back to their homes. To secure the Nationalist support Laurier-Liberal candidates in Quebec have signed the following pledge:

"I, the undersigned, candidate in the Federal Elections, undertake by these presents, if I am elected, to demand the immediate suspension of the Military Service Act, 1917, and of all its effects until Canadian electors have pronounced by way of plebiscite; and should the majority of the electors condemn it, that it be considered as null from its origin and that in consequence all conscripts be disbanded."

"I also undertake to vote against any Government which should refuse to adopt the above enunciated policy."

What the Peon Likes.
The peon of southern Mexico has various appetizers that are unknown to the peons of the north. One of the queerest is "water wheat," which is not exactly what its name suggests, but the eggs of a kind of fly. The "water wheat" fields are ponds in which the peon places bundles of reeds a few feet apart so that their tops are just above the surface. On these reeds, or rushes, the insects deposit their eggs in incredible numbers. The peon then removes the rushes and shakes off the crop.
The Mexicans make the eggs, which resemble fine fish roe, into small cakes and sell them in the markets. The purchasers eat them either as they are, or mixed with cornmeal and the eggs of fowls. The peons also eat the insects, which are about the size of our houseflies. Their method of preparing them is to pound a quantity of the flies into a paste and boil them with corn husks.

Pay of Bank Presidents.
John Skelton Williams, comptroller of the currency, in an official report says the national banks with a capital of $5,000,000 or more pay their presidents an average salary of $44,400 a year, while the presidents of national banks with a capital of $500,000 or less receive on the average a salary of only $1,008 a year.

There are 7,774 national banks. Most of them have a capitalization of more than $50,000. It may be surprising to the twenty dollar a week clerk to know that so many bank presidents get an average of only $10.38 a week, yet there is no pronounced movement on the part of bank presidents to retire from office and enter the field of clerkdom. Possibly the poor bank president finds ways of adding to his modest salary. If he does not he must find it hard to keep up appearances in these days of high costs of living.—New York Mail.

Selling a Pair of Shoes.
I spent a couple of hours the other day in a shoe factory.
"These," said the head of the firm, pointing to a dainty pair of boots, "we sell wholesale at $10."
"What does the customer pay for them in a store?" I inquired.
"Sometimes not less than $20," he replied.

So it appears to cost as much to sell a shoe as to make a shoe.
The farmer who raised the calf that yielded the hide, the butcher who removed the hide, the tanner who converted it into leather, the railroad which hauled it 2,000 miles and the factory which carefully made the leather into a shoe, together split fifty-fifty with the exclusive shop which retails it to your wife.—Glasgow in Philadelphia Ledger.

Employees Are Investments.
In the American Magazine J. O. Armour says:

"To me every boy, every young man who enters our employ is an investment. If he fails to grow, to advance, if he makes a mistake, instead of criticizing him we try to find out what led him to make the mistake and aid him in avoiding its repetition."

NOSE CLOGGED FROM A COLD OR CATARRH
Apply Cream in Nostrils To Open Up Air Passages.

Ah! What relief! Your clogged nostrils open right up, the air passages of your head are clear and you can breathe freely. No more hawking, snuffling, mucous discharge, headache, dizziness—no struggling for breath at night, your cold or catarrh is gone.

Don't stay stuffed up! Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic cream in your nostrils, let it penetrate through every air passage of the head; soothe and heal the swollen, inflamed mucous membrane, giving you instant relief. Ely's Cream Balm is just what every cold and catarrh sufferer has been seeking. It's just splendid.

A Present for Santa Claus

By ELINOR MARSH

EDWINA'S mother was busy putting mince pies into the oven, so she did not notice the little girl when she passed through the room. Edwinna wore her warm winter coat and fur hat and her fingers were snugled up in red mittens.

"I've got Christmas errands to do, mother," said Edwinna when she reached the door. "Tomorrow's Christmas, and I'm going to buy a present for Santa Claus."

"Well, I declare," Mrs. Ray sank into a chair and began to laugh. "A present for Santa Claus himself?"

"A real present. I've got 12 cents. I earned this money my own self, and I want to buy something for Santa with my own money."

"Very well, dear. I am sure Santa Claus will be pleased enough to be remembered. You had better go to Smith's store."

"All right," called Edwinna as she went out.

It was snowing a little—just little. Light, flitting flakes like tiny feathers. Inside the kitchen it had been warm and cozy, with a delicious smell of mince meat, fresh cookies and apples. Outside it was cold, and the stinging snowflakes made her cheeks tingle.

"What can I do for you, Edwinna?" asked Mr. Smith.

"I want a pair of slippers—for a man," said Edwinna, primly.

"What size?" asked the storekeeper.

"Very big ones," said Edwinna in a grownup's manner.

"Hum!" smiled Mr. Smith in a mysterious way. "Well, you can change them after Christmas if they don't fit."

Edwinna wondered if Santa Claus could come all the way back from the north pole just to change a pair of slippers, but she said nothing until Mr. Smith showed her a very large pair of flowered slippers.

How good old Santa would enjoy those comfortable slippers!

"Will 12 cents be enough?" asked Edwinna, anxiously.

"Ho, ho, ho!" laughed Mr. Smith. "Twelve cents? No, Edwinna. The price of these slippers is $2."

"I—guess I won't take them," faltered Edwinna as she left the store.

Edwinna hurried away from Smith's store and went to a little 10-cent store. There were all sorts of things she could buy with her money, but it was hard to choose something Santa Claus might like. There were books—such nice stories, too. One in particular, called "Patty and Her Patches," was so delightful that Edwinna was sure Santa Claus would like it. So she paid 10 cents for that, and with the remaining 2 cents she bought two sticks of red and white striped candy.

When she showed these things to her father and mother they did not even smile, but they said they were sure Santa Claus would be pleased.

"I shall hang a stocking for Santa and put these things in it," said Edwinna, and on the stocking she pinned a note saying:

"From a little girl who loves you."

She went happily to bed, and the next thing Edwinna knew it was Christmas morning. She hopped out of bed and ran into the warm living room to see if Santa had been there.

What a wonderful array of toys—dolls and doll house and furniture, books and games and toy dishes—a little fur muff and a rocking chair and so many other things!

Edwinna clapped her hands and jumped for joy. "Santa has taken the book and candy," she cried, and then she found a little note signed "Santa Claus."

"Thank you, dear little Edwinna, and a Merry Christmas to you," it read.

Like the one pictured, cover this with silver lace and handkerchief linen in strips that are striped with satin blue ribbon set off with two soft rosettes. A delightful carriage pillow is this.

For the children an "evergreen pie" served at the Christmas breakfast table always causes great excitement. To make it fashion an immense pie dish of cardboard, paint it leaf green and cover thickly with sprays of evergreen. Put in the presents—all prettily wrapped and labeled—and then put on the lid. The latter is shaped in cardboard and covered with nice evergreens.

The wee baby makes a new appeal to our gift instincts. Cover a downy square pillow with palest pink silk and form with leather, cretonne or any durable material and hang it by silk cords. Crimson is a suitable color scheme. Apply an easily read calendar near the top center and with celluloid tabs index the lower part so daddy may fill his advance engagements in proper style.

For daddy and brother a child can enamel gayly the handles of garden and carpenter's tools. This adds an attractive touch to cold steel.

Some Good Things For the Christmas Stocking

Too often the days immediately before Christmas are spent in worrying over the buying of gifts which the giver can but ill afford and which are going to people whom she cares little about. These are what we all "duty" presents and of all gifts they give the least pleasure to the giver.

So try to put yourself in your gifts this year. Begin early and knit the cherub a play suit. Nothing is so soft, so warm and so comfortable for robust children outdoors in early winter weather.

For big brother get ribbon two and one-half inches wide, eight inches long; fringe both ends, then embroider initial in center or have gold letters put on. The band can be glued inside of its hat to identify it.

Father will need a new desk calendar and file for his office. So cover a form with leather, cretonne or any durable material and hang it by silk cords. Crimson is a suitable color scheme. Apply an easily read calendar near the top center and with celluloid tabs index the lower part so daddy may fill his advance engagements in proper style.

For daddy and brother a child can enamel gayly the handles of garden and carpenter's tools. This adds an attractive touch to cold steel.

For the children an "evergreen pie" served at the Christmas breakfast table always causes great excitement. To make it fashion an immense pie dish of cardboard, paint it leaf green and cover thickly with sprays of evergreen. Put in the presents—all prettily wrapped and labeled—and then put on the lid. The latter is shaped in cardboard and covered with nice evergreens.

The wee baby makes a new appeal to our gift instincts. Cover a downy square pillow with palest pink silk and form with leather, cretonne or any durable material and hang it by silk cords. Crimson is a suitable color scheme. Apply an easily read calendar near the top center and with celluloid tabs index the lower part so daddy may fill his advance engagements in proper style.

"A Visit From St. Nicholas"

WHAT is the best known poem in the world? Not Gray's "Elegy," nor "The Raven," but "The Night Before Christmas." The author is not so well known as his poem.

One recent Christmas the name of Clement Clarke Moore was honored as never before. Above his grave in the chapel of Holy Trinity cemetery, New York, the choir boys sang carols on the night before Christmas, and a service of remembrance was held. This beautiful ceremony was a procession of torchbearers whose torches are kindled from the lender's flame, and as the line winds through the graveyard the fire is passed back from one to another until the lights grow in number and dispel the surrounding darkness.

The father of Clement Clarke Moore was once the bishop of New York.

"The Night Before Christmas" was published originally without the author's knowledge in the Troy Sentinel two days before Christmas, 1822.

Moore had written it the preceding Christmas just for the delight of his own children, but its circulation slipped beyond the family circle, and an unknown friend sent it for publication.

The Sentinel readers paid no attention to it, and it passed without comment until seven years later, when the newspaper reprinted it. The second version was very different from the first.

"A Visit From St. Nicholas," as it is then entitled, was copied, browned, and its author asked to find his name if not himself, famous.

Although Clement Clarke Moore was educated for the ministry, he never took orders. For the greater part of his life he was identified with the New York General Theological seminary, being professor of Biblical lectionary and Greek and later of oriental languages.

Clement Moore's family life had many sorrows. His wife died at the early age of thirty-five, and the two little daughters, for whom he wrote "The Night Before Christmas," both died in their childhood. His son and namesake lived to the age of sixty-eight and is buried in the family plot.

When "The Night Before Christmas" was first published in the Troy Sentinel the editor wrote:

"We do not know to whom we are indebted for the following description of that unwearied patron of children, that homely but delightful personification of parental kindness, Santa Claus, his custom and his equippage, as he goes about visiting the firesides of this happy land, laden with Christmas bounties, but from whomsoever it may have come we give thanks for it. There is to our apprehension a spirit of cordial goodness in it, a playfulness as of fancy and a benevolent alacrity to enter into the feelings and promote the simple pleasures of children which are altogether charming. We hope our little patrons, both lads and lassies, will accept it as a proof of our unforgotten good will toward them, a token of our warmest wish that they may have many a merry Christmas; that they may long retain their beautiful remembrance of these unthought, home bred joys, which derive their flavor from filial piety and fraternal love and which, they may be assured, are the least alloyed that time can furnish them."

VINOL MAKES GOOD BLOOD

Positive—Convincing Proof

Many so-called remedies for anemia are only so in name. Their makers are afraid to prove their claims by telling what their medicines contain.

The only way to be honest with the people is to let them know what they are paying for. Here is the Vinol formula. When the doctor knows what a medicine contains, it ceases to be a "patent" medicine.

It Cod Liver and Beef Peptone, Iron and Manganese Phosphates, Iron and Ammonium Citrate, Lime and Soda Glycophosphates, Cacao.

Any doctor will tell you that the ingredients of Vinol, as named above, will enrich the blood and banish anemia and create strength. When the blood is pure and rich and red, the body is strong and robust.

You can prove this at our expense because your money will be returned if Vinol does not improve your health.

Tenders for Pulpwood Limit

Tenders will be received by the undersigned up to and including the seventeenth day of December next for the right to cut pulpwood and pine timber on a certain area situated in the vicinity of the Kapuskasing River in the Districts of Timiskaming and Algoma.

Tenders are to offer a flat rate per cord for all classes of pulpwood, whether spruce or other woods. The successful tenderer shall be required to pay for the Red and White Pine on the limit a flat rate of $10 per thousand feet board measure.

The successful tenderer shall also be required to erect a mill or mills on or near the territory, and to manufacture the wood into pulp and paper in the Province of Ontario, in accordance with the terms and conditions of sale which can be had on application to the Department.

Parties making tender will be required to deposit with their tender a marked cheque payable to the Honourable the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario, for Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00), which amount will be forfeited in the event of their not entering into agreement to carry out conditions, etc.

The said Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00) will be held by the Department until such time as the terms and conditions of the agreement to be entered into have been completed with and the said mills erected, equipped and in operation. The said sum may then be applied in such amounts and at such times as the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines may direct in payment of accounts for dues or of any other obligations due the Crown until the whole sum has been applied.

The highest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

For particulars as to description of territory, capital to be invested, etc., apply to the undersigned.

G. E. FERGUSON,

Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines,
Toronto, September 19th, 1917.

N.B.—No unauthorized publication of this notice will be paid for.

THE Hospital for Sick Children College St., Toronto

ITS CHRISTMAS MESSAGE

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing to your readers this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, the "Sweetest of all Charities," which has as its mission the care of the helpless, the sick, the crippled and the deformed.

There never was a year in the history of the Hospital when funds to carry on the work were more needed than now.

Your purse is the Hospital's Hope. Your money lights the candles of mercy on the Christmas trees of health that the Hospital plants along the troubled roadway of many a little life.

So I am asking you for aid, for the open purse of the Hospital's friend is the hope of the Hospital at Christmas, just as the open door of the Hospital's mercy is the hope of the little children throughout the year.

Call on generous hearts are many in these times. Calls on the Hospital are many at all times, and especially when food and fuel and drugs and service costs are soaring high. YOU know the high cost of living. Do you know the high cost of healing—of helping the helpless to happiness? What you do to assist is the best investment you will ever make.

Do you realize what this charity is doing for sick children, not only of Toronto, but for all Ontario, for out of a total of 3,740 in-patients last year 446 came from 254 places outside of Toronto. The field of the Hospital's service covers the entire Province—from the Ottawa to the far-off Kenora to the farthest northern district.

The Hospital is doing a marvelous work. If you could see the children with crippled limbs, club feet, and other deformities, who have left the Hospital with straightened limbs and perfect correction, your response to our appeal would be instant. In the Orthopedic Department last year a total of 320 in-patients were treated; and in the Out-Patient Department there were 1,946 attendances.

Let your money and the Hospital's mercy lift the burden of misery that curses the lives, cripples the limbs and saddens the mothers of the suffering little children.

Money mobilizes the powers of help and healing for the Hospital's drive day and night against the trenches where disease and pain and death assail the lives of the little ones.

Remember that every dollar given to the Hospital is a dollar subscribed to the Liberty Loan that opens the prisons of pain and the Bastilles of disease, and sets little children free to breathe the pure air, and to rejoice in the mercy of God's sunlight.

Will you send a dollar, or more if you can, to Douglas Davidson, Secretary-Treasurer, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Board of Trustees.

Why Not Make Some Gifts This Christmas?

SOME philosopher or other said long ago that we do not appreciate that which we do not work hard to obtain and that we love more the people whom we do for than we love the people who do most for us.

If your best friend motors make her a cap, a sunbonnet, out of some durable silky material that matches her motor coat. Stiffen the visor with buckram, line it with plaid silk and use the rest of this for a banding that ties carefully in front.

Smoking jackets, suspenders, bath towels, necktie and collar cases for travelers, knitted golf gloves, throat muffs and tooled leather picture frames are some of the gifts you can make for the men in your family.

Nothing "boughten" could compare with the joy furnished a youngster by these toys that daddy made himself. Pipe or sweet gum wood are easily manipulated, and the delight enters with the gay enamel paint that daddy so skillfully applies to the elephant's howdah, the parrot's wings and the sailor boy's middy.

Mother may like something new and attractive in the form of luncheon napkins made of one and a half yards of white linen (a good quality comes at 75 cents a yard) cut into six squares and bordered with a picot Irish edge after merely rolling the edges.

Or she may prefer a theater bag made of brocade velvet in any of the new colors and lined with a soft silk in contrasting color. They are made with a pocket in the bottom, either oblong or round, and the top has a casing through which gold ribbon is drawn. Now that patriotism runs high make hubby a red, white and blue pillow for his Morris chair. The cut suggests the embroidery done on a background of linen crash.

A quickly made gift for a little girl and one which serves to teach her a lesson of neatness is a set of ribbon rolls for her hair ribbons. Small pasteboard cylinders, such as are used for mailing purposes, are first covered with cotton wadding and sachet powder and then with silk or satin. The material may be plain or flowered, but must be of a quality not to "run."

For the friend who hoards a glass of homemade jelly or orange marmalade would be useful as well as ornamental. Apple jelly and orange marmalade can be made at the holiday season as well as in the summer, and then one can truthfully say on the little card of greeting that it was made expressly for the friend to whom it is sent.

To the Electors of West Hastings:

Having been solicited to become a candidate for West Hastings in the present election by many prominent electors of the constituency both Conservatives and Liberals, and having been advised that the executive of the Conservative party refused to join the executive of the Liberal party in endeavoring to avoid an election by the selection of a candidate that would be acceptable to both parties, I have decided to offer myself for election, without any political party recognition, as an independent supporter of the present Government, to win the War, and solicit the support of all those who think it is time to drop party politics and unite our efforts to overthrow the Germans. I believe in this most serious time that we should adopt what the Romans did, "when none were for the party and all were for the State."

SAGE TEA DARKENS HAIR TO ANY SHADE

Don't stay Gray! Here's an Old-time Recipe that Anybody can Apply.

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and attractive. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is messy and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking as any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, it becomes beautifully dark and glossy.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire a more youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Heart of the Giver in the Christmas Gift

THINK a little while, before setting out about the line in which the tastes of your friend run. You will save yourself a vast deal of tramping through crowded shops. Sleeveless sweaters are all the go for girls. Lay in a supply of becoming wool and, between knitting for the marines, make sister a beautiful slip-on, with a tasseled belt. The picture gives a good model.

Aprons, "like the poor, are always with us," and many women like nothing better. Attractive designs in chafin-dish aprons, with perky little pockets, can be quickly and successfully made by even the girl who is not especially clever with her needle.

If you are clever handling tools you can make an elegant hand carved tobacco for cigars or a couch-side reading lamp as hubby's best Christmas gift. Use sweet gum wood and select a good design. Get a carpenter to put it together for you and give it a coat of stain or shellac for finish.

Little handmade handkerchiefs of colored linen are a novelty and very simple to make. Either a wide or a narrow hem is pretty, and it should be hemstitched. They should be twelve inches square. In light pink, pale yellow or gray the linen comes in a fine quality at about 85 cents a yard.

All sorts of cases are so convenient to keep tidy a top bureau drawer or to tuck in a week-end trunk. Raf-an or the Chinese straw that comes around tea boxes makes good material to fashion them out of. The one pictured has a ribbon bow strapped by three quaint ribbon roses.

A hooded cap with a rill or ruffle is easy to make. It consists of a big circle and the ruffle section. Or a bigger circle can be used and shirred three or four inches from the edge to form the rill. This circle should measure about twenty-five inches across, and this measurement allows for a half-inch hem around the edge.

THE FORWARD LOOK.

It is Never Too Late to Make a Fresh Start in Life.

Now and then a man pauses to take account of his life and looks back ruefully over the course of his life to note the many places where he made the wrong turn or was shoved off the track by adverse circumstances. He says to himself, believing what he says, that if he could retrace his steps and take a fresh start, knowing what he knows now, he would not make such a mess of things again.

He can put his finger down on the very spot in the map of his life where he went wrong. There was a blurred place on the trail, where there was no trace of the footprint of any who passed that way and no mark of the woodman's ax upon a tree. It was for him alone to choose the way to take, and in his haste and fever to arrive he chose wrongly and has wandered ever since.

A man plays a game, or runs a race or conducts a business, or marries a wife, or chooses a friend, or elects a calling, or forms a habit, and by and by the conviction is borne in upon him, like a growth weighing on the brain, that he was in error. Now it is too late to retrieve. He must wear for the remainder of his days the millstone due to the wrong decision.

What is he to do? He strangled his chance newborn. He exchanged his birthright for pottage. It is of no avail to plead that he had bad advisers, that he was misled, that he was the tool of environment, that a base heredity rose up to claim him and a latent taint in the blood broke out and wrought an irreparable mischief.

The past is there, and its legend is deeply graven on his brow or seared by the brand of the iron that has entered into his soul. Can he go back? The years and the closed doors and the finished chapters tell him no.

But the forward look and the future provide him with a better way to take. When Mrs. Peterkin, in the story, had spoiled her cup of coffee by putting salt in it and was trying to redeem the error by the neutralizing action of all sorts of chemicals, the lady from Philadelphia suggested that she make a fresh cup. Seeing that you can't go back, why not make a fresh start exactly where you are? Decision has a miraculous way of finding a standpoint of rock in the middle of a quicksand.

A Change of Base.

"And now, Bella," said little Mary to her doll, "you must lay down for a while and go to sleep."

"You should say 'lie down,' dear," put in little Mary's mother.

"Bella," said Mary impressively, "I'm going to lie you down, so don't you cry."

"Lay you down," came the second gentle correction.

Mary was much puzzled. Whatever she said, it seemed to be wrong. She declined to cope longer with the intricacies of the English language. "Bella," she announced, "I think you better sit up!"

Kilometers and Miles.

Wireless telegraph transmission distances are often stated in kilometers, nautical miles or statute miles. To convert the number of kilometers to nautical miles, multiply by fifty-four and point off two decimal places. To convert from kilometers to statute miles multiply by sixty-two and point off two places. If the distance is given in statute, or land, miles and you want it expressed in kilometers, multiply the number of miles by 1.61 and point off two decimal places.

Wedding Music.

"Custom," says a writer in the Woman's Home Companion, "has decreed, to be sure, that the simplest and most conventional musical program for a wedding in church is, as some one has tersely expressed it, 'Lohengrin to go in on, Mendelssohn to go out on and something soft during the ceremony.' Something a bit different would be 'Tannhauser' to go in on and 'Swedish Wedding March' from 'Hochzeit zu Wolfenbüttel' to go out on."

Treeless City Streets.

The New York State College of Forestry says that within New York state there are 20,000 miles of street capable of sustaining a growth of 5,000,000 shade trees which can be made worth $100,000,000 in increased property value. Besides making our cities more beautiful, trees are of definite value to health, for by absorbing poisonous gases they purify the air.

Nursing Sickly Plants.

Sickly plants, like sickly people, cannot stand extremes. Sickly pot plants may, often be more quickly brought back to health by watering with very warm water only. Low vitality will not be raised through the use of chilly water or less than 110 degrees of temperature.

Answering With Another Question.

"What's become of the old fashioned servant girl who used to entertain her bet in the kitchen?"

"Shucks! What's become of the old fashioned kitchen that used to be big enough for a girl to entertain company in?"

Thoughtful.

"Does the new clerk observe due precaution against fire?"

"He always throws his cigarettes into some one else's wastebasket."

Economy is half the battle of life. It is not so hard to earn money as to spend it well.

"What Shall I Give My Friends?"

CHRISTMAS comes on again, and the usual question confronts every woman, "What shall I give my friends this year?" If the outlay must be very much then it is a good idea to make some useful article to serve.

Purchase enough white georgette crepe to make a collar and cuff set. Perhaps the collar can follow the outline of a coat difficult to fit with a ready-made collar of white, or a dainty shape may be designed for use with a fancy waist. The point is to keep the edges straight rather than rounding, for we will have the border machine hemstitched, or the edge can be stitched or hemstitched with fine white silk and finished with tiny embroidered dots of white silk or French knots of a faintly contrasting color.

Or make sister a fetching breakfast jacket of georgette crepe, voile or dimity. Close it on the left side, hand embroidered the front and gird it with her favorite shade of satin ribbon.

Candle shade patterns may be stamped in a grape design, which could be effectively carried out in cut work, and another design is of an iris pattern.

The shade pictured is more conventional, being intended for an electric candle. Fluted paper is neatly pasted together the desired size and decorated with gold or silver glimp.

Toddlers and babies always need new dresses. Try the pattern illustrated in either chambray or linen and smock the front in any harmonizing color or a contrast.

A loaf or so of homemade crullers wrapped separately in oiled paper and packed in a dainty basket such as can be purchased for from 10 to 25 cents should be an acceptable gift for some man friend who lives in a hotel. For a bachelor friend a gift of similar nature is a homemade cake done up in white paper and placed in a holly trimmed box. Most men have a secret sweet tooth, and Christmas seems to be the time to have it filled.

Men are a rule-of-the-art race to receive something "special" for Christmas. "But 'what'?" you ask. "Special" means in the said 'what' and you will find him delighted!

Glass of Hot Water Before Breakfast a Splendid Habit

Open sluices of the system each morning and wash away the poisonous, stagnant matter.

Those of us who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when we arise; splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, languid back, can, instead, both look and feel as fresh as a daisy always by washing the poisons and toxins from the body with phosphated hot water each morning.

We should drink, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to flush from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract before putting more food into the stomach.

The action of limestone phosphate and hot water on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast and it is said to be but a little while until the roses begin to appear in the cheeks. A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will cost very little at the drug store, but is sufficient to make anyone who is bothered with biliousness, constipation, stomach trouble or rheumatism a real enthusiast on the subject of internal sanitation. Try it and you are assured that you will look better and feel better in every way shortly.

URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you—Drink more water.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salt occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sour, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush out the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in uric acid so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

Solutions of The Christmas Gift Problem

If Christmas giving were regulated by common sense and affection there would not be so many persons in the shops these days sighing to themselves, "Ten more presents and only $5! How will I do it?"

ball and then attach a long, bright string.

Or make him this adorable jacket and cap of white cashmere, the other variations being creamy silk and white linen. On the folded back front embroider tiny forget-me-nots to match those down the front of the jacket. Hemstitch the cap strings and scallop all other edges.

For mother make several skirt hangers. Purchase a five-cent skirt hanger, next a five-cent pan of gold water-color paint. Carefully gild the two wooden ends of the hanger. Then wrap the wire portion of the hanger with narrow pale blue ribbon. This will cost five cents a yard, and two yards will be necessary and provide for bows. Grandma will like a knitting bag crocheted in fine macramé cord, which is lined with cherry-colored silk so her knitting needles won't poke through. The fringe is a big addition, as the cut proves.

We have always known of hand embroidered and initialed kerchiefs as gifts for all male members of our social circles. But the idea of providing men with plenty of big, gay sports kerchiefs is new. You may buy by the yard fine linen in sports colors and hemstitch them yourself, or you may buy two-tone kerchiefs and then make red, blue, yellow and green monograms in the corners, just like those in the pictures. Men love to flaunt these gay memorials.

Just copy his signature, transfer it to the corner of a handkerchief and embroider with the "over-and-over" stitch. This makes an individual gift which will please any man.

Dufresnay's Christmas Awakening

ON Christmas morning of the year 1681 M. Dufresnay's apartments were in some confusion. Monsieur himself as he slept on a spindle-legged sofa was not the very image of order. His rose-colored satin coat was under his head, and his silk stockings dangled over the end of his all too brief bed. The cards of yesterday and yesterday's bestrewed the floor.

He was disturbed by the insistent tugging of a bell. Dufresnay groined and struggled to his feet.

On opening the door he beheld a very beautiful young lady quaintly disguised as a working woman and carrying a large basket such as laundresses use. Dufresnay retreated in confusion, bowing profoundly and wrestling with his coat.

"I pray you pardon me, mademoiselle. I did not expect a vision!"

"And I pray you, monsieur, not to mock me," she replied, with a wry lip.

"Present my grateful thanks and Christmas wishes to his majesty."

M. Ribot made his departure with somewhat the air of one who gladly takes leave of questionable company.

"May I also congratulate you, monsieur?" timidly ventured the girl. "You can pay me now," she added rather tamely.

"You see my establishment—how I live. Could not the order of these apartments be improved? Will you abandon me such ruins? The abbe who ministers in the church yonder is my good friend."

"Why, he is also my abbe!"

"Wonderful! White lambs and black are alike his care. I am a most unlucky gambler. And you can give me better luck than ever came of winning. On my honor, I love you. And the abbe will be very glad to see us. Shall we not make the good old man happy?"

"If you will, monsieur."—W. R. Van Deusen

"I Did Not Expect a Vision!"

He smiled. "The last time I came your servant said you had no money. You owe me 17 livres."

Dufresnay gazed in speechless incredulity for a moment and then burst out laughing.

"A merry Christmas to you, mademoiselle!" he cried. "Is the basket for me?"

"I wish you also a merry Christmas. But please, please listen to me. Perhaps the wine is not yet out of your head. But I must have money today. Surely you can understand?"

Dufresnay partially mustered his wits and attempted an elaborate compliment.

"I have seen all the shepherdesses of our Arcadian Versailles and—By the goddess of the laundry, you are not crying! The basket is very heavy. And here are actual shillings!"

He looked in comic perplexity from the basket to the girl. "Then he said gently, 'Has no one ever told you how beautiful you are?'"

"Certainly you are not the first to flatter me nor the first that failed to pay me, but," she added, and her eyes filled with tears, "I had better hopes of you. Fine words will not help me."

"I know they will not. What have I that will bring 17 livres? This ring?"

"But that is a wedding ring."

"My mother's. And it is for my wife. It is for you."

"That is a cruel jest. And I thought you were so different. You have never seen me before, but I live not far away, and I have often seen you. You are not yourself now or you would not mock me so."

"I was never myself before," insisted Dufresnay.

At this moment a stately personage appeared in the doorway and rang the bell with great vigor.

Dufresnay greeted him with delight. "Is his majesty returned to Paris? Not? He is well?"

Turning to the girl, he said: "I am, as perhaps you know, the king's poor kinsman, as poor as he is rich. M. Ribot has been the bearer of many good gifts. Monsieur, mademoiselle is my betrothed."

"Ahem! M. Dufresnay, his majesty entrusted me with this Christmas present for you—this purse of gold, 500 louis, I believe, and this commission creating you valet de chambre du roi, with a stipend of 100,000 livres per annum. I congratulate you, monsieur. As I have many other commissions to execute for his gracious majesty, I must humbly take my leave."

"Present my grateful thanks and Christmas wishes to his majesty."

M. Ribot made his departure with somewhat the air of one who gladly takes leave of questionable company.

"May I also congratulate you, monsieur?" timidly ventured the girl. "You can pay me now," she added rather tamely.

"You see my establishment—how I live. Could not the order of these apartments be improved? Will you abandon me such ruins? The abbe who ministers in the church yonder is my good friend."

"Why, he is also my abbe!"

"Wonderful! White lambs and black are alike his care. I am a most unlucky gambler. And you can give me better luck than ever came of winning. On my honor, I love you. And the abbe will be very glad to see us. Shall we not make the good old man happy?"

"If you will, monsieur."—W. R. Van Deusen

"I Did Not Expect a Vision!"

He smiled. "The last time I came your servant said you had no money. You owe me 17 livres."

Dufresnay gazed in speechless incredulity for a moment and then burst out laughing.

"I wish you also a merry Christmas. But please, please listen to me. Perhaps the wine is not yet out of your head. But I must have money today. Surely you can understand?"

Dufresnay partially mustered his wits and attempted an elaborate compliment.

An Episode In Petrograd

By ELINOR MARSH

Billy Ogleshorpe was in a casino in Petrograd where the high dignitaries of the capital were wont to "back the tiger," and since he had unlimited means, he won a pile of money. Sitting opposite him at the table was a very pretty woman, who was observant of Billy's winnings. Presently she said something to a man sitting near her. He arose and went out. After awhile he returned and whispered something in the lady's ear which appeared to agitate her profoundly. Then came two men who touched the lady on the shoulder. With despair written on her countenance she arose and was about to accompany the men from the casino when she turned and cast an imploring glance at the American. Then she turned and went out with the men.

Billy hurriedly scooped together the pile before him and followed her. At the door the men put her into a carriage and before getting in themselves slipped a pair of handcuffs on her. She had just time to give Billy one appealing look when the carriage was driven away. Billy called a cab and, slipping a handful of rubles into the coachman's palm, told him to follow the carriage and on no account let it get out of his sight. Then he got in the cab.

The carriage drew up before a house that might have been a dwelling or might have contained offices. The lady was taken from the carriage and escorted between the two men into the building and the door was shut behind them.

The young American was uncertain what next to do. The Russian revolution was then on and many arrests were being made. Quite likely the lady was a revolutionist. Billy accounted for the circumstances attending her arrest as follows: While she was watching Billy win money she had been casting furtive glances at the entrance of the casino. Doubtless she was fearing arrest. She had sent the person with her out to see if there was danger. He had returned and informed her that government officials were without. This accounted for her agitation. Such was this very natural explanation of what had occurred, and Billy was satisfied with it.

He did not see that he could do anything in the matter until the next day. So he went to his hotel and to bed. But slumber did not come. He was haunted by that appealing look.

The next morning he went to the house where the woman had been taken and stood looking at it for some time. Presently the object of his interest came to a window. Billy was standing where she could not very well help noticing him. When their gaze met she gave him that same imploring look.

Billy pointed to the door, meaning "Shall I enter the house?" The woman shook her head, meaning "No." Then she went away from the window, but soon returned and, folding a bit of paper, she raised the sash and dropped it on the sidewalk below. Billy crossed the street, stooped and picked up the paper, which he read.

He was informed that the writ was indicated in the revolution and would be sent to Siberia. She would much rather be executed, she said, for not even death could be as horrible as Siberian exile. The missive closed with this statement: "Only one thing can save me—money. The police may be bribed, but, alas, it would require an enormous sum to tempt them."

If money would save her she was as good as saved, for money was nothing to Billy. He had heard that graft pervaded all officials in Russia and was not surprised at the lady's statement. Taking his winnings of the night before, more than 50,000 rubles ($25,000), he marched boldly up to the house where the captive was held and rang the bell. The summons was answered by one of the men who had arrested the lady. Billy tipped him the wink and was admitted. Then he said that he would pay a large price for the freedom of the prisoner. The man listened without reply till Billy offered 50,000 rubles. The man said that he must divide with many others and the sum would not go around. Billy finally closed with him for 80,000 rubles.

It was arranged that evening in a closed carriage. She would be released, and he would pay the money. At the hour appointed Billy called. The lady, veiled, appeared at the door and, accompanied by one of her captors, went to the carriage. She raised her veil so that Billy could see her face, and Billy handed the man a roll of bills. Then the pair were driven away.

The lady's gratitude was Billy's reward. She asked to be taken to a house, where she would remain concealed till she could escape from Russia. Billy was granted permission to go there to see her the next day.

Billy made the call, but did not gain admittance. He surmised that the lady had found it expedient to change her quarters.

He did not see her again for several years. Meanwhile he had been to America and various other countries. His second meeting with her was in the Casino at Petrograd. She was betting high. Billy asked who she was. The person he asked replied with a shrug of the shoulders.

Billy concluded that he had been victimized.

Orphans to Rent— A Children's Christmas Story

It was Christmas eve at the Bayville Home for Orphans, and three little boys sat in the chilly dining room looking out at the flying flurries of snow. It was after supper, and there was a clutter of dishes in the kitchen.

"They say," said Jimmy, "there's going to be a big Christmas tree in the parlor tomorrow."

"And presents and everything, but I'd rather hang up my stockings than have all the old Christmas trees. You betcha I would!"

"So would I!" echoed Bobby and George.

"That trustee who was here today would make a dandy man for a father or an uncle," said Bobby.

"He's awful rich."

"And he ain't got any children or any folks at all."

"I wish he'd Snowy Yard," dopt me," reflected George.

"He patted my head."

"He must be lonesome without any folks," began Bobby. Then he leaned over and whispered to his companions.

Fifteen minutes later three little boys, the oldest ten and the youngest six, let themselves through a basement door and hurried across the snowy yard to the opening in the hedge which led through a patch of woods to the village.

Mr. Bartley, the trustee, who often visited the home, lived in a big house with a wonderful garden. Everything was blanketed in snow now, and the big house was dark save for a few lighted windows on the lower floor.

Soon they stood on the porch peering in at a cozy library, where Mr. Bartley sat in a big chair before the fire, looking very lonesome. A big dog, a collie, sat beside him with his head on his master's knee.

Suddenly the dog lifted his head and barked. Mr. Bartley looked toward the window and saw the three little frightened boy faces peering in. In a jiffy he had jumped up, opened the window and lifted them in one at a time.

"Good gracious me! What are you doing out there?" he demanded.

"Please, sir, we're from the home," said Bobby. "We know you lived all alone—and we thought maybe you'd like to hire us three kids to spend Christmas with you. We don't want any tree," explained Bobby. "We just want to hang up our stockings and wake up—something like home—before we came to the 'sylum.' Tears were in the boys' eyes now."

Mr. Bartley flourished a handkerchief and tried to laugh, but his voice cracked so queerly.

"Now, that's a funny thing," he declared. "I was just wishing I had three nice boys to spend Christmas with me—and maybe live with me all the time."

By and by Mr. Bartley called a manservant, and together they took the three little boys up to bed.

Then they hung their stockings on the corners of the big four-post bedstead, and in two minutes they were sound asleep, while the servant, Martha, nodded in a chair outside in the hall and Mr. Bartley, buttoned into a fur-lined overcoat, went striding down the snowy street to the brightly lighted shops.

I don't know who was the happier that Christmas morning, the three little boys with their stockings full of treasures or big Mr. Bartley, whom they called "Uncle Dick." And the best of it all was that Mr. Bartley adopted all three of the little lads who came to him that Christmas eve, and they are growing up into such fine, big boys.

In Two Minutes They Were Asleep.

WHISTLING DICK'S CHRISTMAS STOCKING

By O. Henry

Whistling Dick's Christmas Stocking

By O. HENRY

Copyright by Doubleday, Page & Co.

It was with much caution that Whistling Dick slid back the door of the box car, for article 5716, city ordinances, authorized (perhaps unconsciously) arrest on suspicion. He saw no change since his last visit to this big pulsing, long-suffering city of the South, the cold weather paradise of the tramps. Whistling Dick's red head popped suddenly back into the car. A slight too imposing and magnificent for his gaze had been added to the scene. A vast, incomparable policeman rounded a pile of rice sacks and stood within 20 yards of the car. Whistling Dick, professional tramp, possessed a half friendly acquaintance with this officer. They had met several times before on the levee at night, for the officer, himself a lover of music, had been attracted by the exquisite whistling of the shiftless vagabond. Still he did not care under the present circumstances to renew the acquaintance. So Dick waited, and before long "Big Fritz" disappeared.

Whistling Dick waited as long as his judgment advised and then slid swiftly to the ground. As he picked his way where night still lingered among the big, reeking, musty warehouses he gave way to the habit that had won for him his title. Subdued, yet clear, with each note as true and liquid as a bobolink's, his whistle tinkled about the dim, cold mountains of brick like drops of rain falling into a hidden pool.

Rounding a corner, the whistler collided with "Big Fritz."

"So," observed the mountain calmly, "you are already back. Und dere vill not be frost before two weeks yet. Und you haf forgotten how to vistle. Dere was a valise note in dot last bar."

Big Fritz's heavy mustache rounded into a circle, and from its depths came a sound deep and mellow as that from a flute. He repeated a few bars of the air the tramp had been whistling.

"Dot p is p natrual, und not p vlat. Py der vay, you petter pe glad I meet you. Von hour later, und I vould half to put you in a cage to vistle mit der chull prids. Der orders are to bull all der puns after sunrise. Goot pyc."

After the big policeman had departed Whistling Dick stood for an irresolute minute, feeling all the outraged indignation of a delinquent tenant who is ordered to vacate his premises. He had pictured to himself a day of dreamlike ease, but here was a stern order to exile and one that he knew must be obeyed. So, with wary eye open for the gleam of brass buttons, he began his retreat toward a rural refuge. A few days in the country need not necessarily prove disastrous.

However, it was with a depressed spirit that Whistling Dick passed the old French market on his chosen route down the river. For safety's sake he still presented to the world his portrayal of the part of the worthy artisan on his way to labor. A stall keeper in the market, undecieved, hailed him by the generic name of his ilk, and "Jack" hailed, taken by surprise. The vendor, melted by this proof of his own acuteness, bestowed a foot of frankfurter and a half loaf, and thus the problem of breakfast was solved.

By noon he had reached the country of the plantations, the great, sad, silent levees bordering the mighty river. He overlooked fields of sugar cane so vast that their farthest limits melted into the sky. The sugar-making season was well advanced, and the cutters were at work.

At a certain point Whistling Dick's unerring nose caught the scent of frying fish. Like a pointer to a quail, he made his way down the levee side, straight to the camp of a credulous and ancient fisherman, whom he charmed with song and story, so that he dined like an admiral, and then, like a philosopher, annihilated the worst three hours of the day by a nap under the trees.

When he awoke and continued his head a drowsy sparkle in the air had succeeded the drowsy warmth of the day, and as this portent of a chilly night translated itself to the brain of St. Pergritte he lengthened his stride and bethought him of shelter.

A distant clatter in the rear quickly developed into the swift beat of horses' hoofs. Turning his head, he saw approaching a fine team of stylish grays drawing a double surrey. A stout man with a white mustache occupied the front seat, giving all his attention to the rigid lines in his hands. Behind him sat a plump, middle-aged lady and a brilliant-looking girl, hardly arrived at young ladyhood. The lap robe had slipped partly from the knees of the gentleman driving, and Whistling Dick saw two stout canvas bags between his feet—bags such as, while loafing in cities, he had seen warily transferred between express wagons and bank doors. The remaining space in the vehicle was filled with parcels of various sizes and shapes.

As the surrey swept even with the side-tracked tramp, the bright-eyed girl, seized by some morbid, madcap impulse, leaned out toward him with a sweet, dazzling smile and cried, "Merry Christmas!" in a shrill, plaintive treble.

Such a thing had not often happened to Whistling Dick, and he felt handicapped in devising the correct response. But, lacking time for reflection, he let his instinct decide, and snatching off his battered hat he rapidly extended it at arm's length and drew it back with a continuous motion and shouted a loud, but ceremonious "Ah, there!"

The sudden movement of the girl had caused one of the parcels to become unwrapped, and something limp and black fell from it into the road. The tramp picked it up and found it to be a new black silk stocking, long and fine and slender.

"The bloom'n' little skeezicks!" said Whistling Dick, with a broad grin bisecting his freckled face. "Wot d'yer think of dat, now? Merry Christmas! Sounded like a cuckoo clock, but yer life, an' der ol' stacks dem sacks of dough down under his trotters like dey was common as dried apples. Been shoppin' for Christmas, and de kid's lost one of her new socks wot she was goin' to hold up Santy wid."

Whistling Dick folded the stocking carefully and stuffed it into his pocket. It was nearly two hours later when he came upon signs of habitation. The buildings of an extensive plantation came into view.

The road was inclosed on each side by a fence, and presently as Whistling Dick drew nearer the houses he suddenly stopped and sniffed the air.

"If dere ain't a hobo stew cookin' somewhere in dis immediate precinct," he said to himself, "dae nose has quit tellin' de trut'."

Without hesitation he climbed the fence to windward. He found himself in an apparently deserted lot, where piles of old bricks were stacked and rejected, decaying lumber. In a corner he saw the faint glow of a fire that had become little more than a bed of living coals, and he thought he could see some dim human forms sitting or lying about it. He drew nearer, and by the light of a little blaze that suddenly flared up he saw plainly the fat figure of a ragged man in an old brown sweater and cap.

"Dat man," said Whistling Dick to himself softly, "is a dead ringer for Boston Harry. I'll try him wif de high sign."

He whistled one or two bars of a ragtime melody, and the air was immediately taken up and then quickly ended with a peculiar run. The first whistler walked confidently up to the fire. The fat man looked up and spoke in a loud, asthmatic wheeze:

"Gents, the unexpected but welcome addition to our circle is Mr. Whistling Dick, an old friend of mine for whom I fully vouches. The waiter will lay another cover at once. Mr. W. D. will join us at supper, during which function he will enlighten us in regard to the circumstances that give us the pleasure of his company."

For the next ten minutes the gang of roadsters, six in all, paid their undivided attention to the supper. In an old five-gallon kerosene can they had cooked a stew of potatoes, meat and onions, which they partook of 'from smaller cans.

Whistling Dick had known Boston Harry of old and knew him to be one of the shrewdest and most successful of his brotherhood. He looked like a prosperous stock drover or a solid merchant from some country village. He was stout and hale, with a ruddy, always smoothly shaved face. The four other men were fair specimens of the slinking, ill-clad, noisome genus.

After the bottom of the large can had been scraped and pipes lit at the costs two of the men called Boston aside and spoke with him lowly and mysteriously. He nodded decisively and then said aloud to Whistling Dick:

"Listen, sonny, to some plain talk. We five are on a lay. I've guaranteed you to be square and you're to come in on the profits equal with the boys, and you've got to help. Two hundred hands on this plantation are expected to be paid a week's wages tomorrow morning. Tomorrow's Christmas and they want to lay off. Says the boss, 'Work from five to nine in the morning to get a trialload of sugar and I'll pay every man cash down for the week and a day extra.' They say: 'Hooray for the boss! It goes.' He drives to New Orleans today and fetches back the cold dollars. Two thousand and seventy-four fifty is the amount. I got the figures from a man who talks too much, who got 'em from the bookkeeper. Now, half of this haul goes to me and the other half the rest of you may divide. Why the difference? I represent the brains. It's my scheme. Here's the way we're going to get it. There's some company at supper in the house, but they'll leave about nine. They have just happened in for an hour or so. If they don't go pretty soon we'll work the scheme anyhow. We want all night to get away good with the dollars. They're heavy. About nine o'clock Deaf Pete and Blinky 'll go down the road a quarter mile beyond the house and set fire to a big candlefield there that the cutters haven't touched yet. The wind's just right to have it roaring in two minutes. The alarm 'll be given, and every man from Jack about the place will be down there in ten minutes fighting fire. That laid upon convenient lumber and regarded Whistling Dick with undisguised disfavour.

"Dis planter chup," Dick said, "wot makes yer think he's got de tin in de house wif 'em?"

"I'm advised of the facts in the case," said Boston. "He drove to New Orleans and got it, I say today. Want to change your mind now and come an?"

"Naw, I was just askin'. Wot kind a team dis de boss drive?"

"Pair of grays."

"Double surrey?"

"Yep."

"Women folks along?"

"Wife and kid. Say, wot morning paper are you trying to pump news for?"

"I was just conversin' to pass de time away. I guess dat team passed me in de road dis evenin'." Dat's all."

Dinner, two hours late, was being served in the Bellemeade plantation dining room.

The talk of the diners was too desultory, too evanescent to follow, but at last they came to the subject of the tramp nuisance, one that had late vexed the plantations for many miles around. The planter seized the occasion to direct his good-natured fire of railing at the miscreants, accusing her of encouraging the plague.

"I don't believe they are all bad," she said. "We passed one this evening as we were driving home who had a face as good as it was incompetent. He was whistling the intermezzo from 'Cavalleria' and blowing the spirit of Mascagni himself into it."

"Merry Christmas!" cried the Bright-Eyed Girl.

A bright-eyed young girl who sat at the left of the mistress leaned over and said in a confidential undertone:

"I wonder, mamma, if that tramp we passed on the road found my stocking. And do you think he will hang it up tonight?"

The words of the young girl were interrupted by a startling thing.

Like the wrath of some burned-out shooting star, a black streak came crashing through the windowpane and upon the table, where it shattered into fragments a dozen pieces of crystal and china ware.

The woman screamed in many keys, and the men sprang to their feet.

The planter was the first to act. He sprang to the intruding missile and held it up to view. "It's loaded," he announced.

As he spoke he reversed a long, black stocking, holding it by the toe, and down from it dropped a roundish stone wrapped about by a piece of yellowish paper. "Now for the first interstellar message of the century!" he cried, and nodding to the company, who had crowded about him, he adjusted his glasses with provoking deliberation and examined it closely. When he finished he had changed from the jolly host to the practical, decisive man of business. He immediately struck a bell and said to the silent-footed mulatto man who responded: "Go and tell Mr. Wesley to get Reeves and Maurice and about ten stout hands they can rely upon and come to the hall door at once. Tell him to have the men arm themselves and bring plenty of ropes and plow lines. Tell him to hurry." And then he read aloud from the paper these words:

To de Gent of de House:

Dere is five turf hoboes except meself in de wagon lot near de road war de old brick piles la. Dey got me stuck up wid a gun case, and I taken dis means of communication. I of der lads la gone down to sat fire to de cane field below de house and when you fellaers goes to turn de hose on it de hole sang he goin to rob de house of de money, yoo gutto pay off wif say git a move on ye say de kid dropt dis sock in der rode tel bar mery christmas de same se

Of the three remaining vagrants, two, Goggles and Indiana Tom, reclined lazily upon convenient lumber and regarded Whistling Dick with undisguised disfavour.

"Dis planter chup," Dick said, "wot makes yer think he's got de tin in de house wif 'em?"

"I'm advised of the facts in the case," said Boston. "He drove to New Orleans and got it, I say today. Want to change your mind now and come an?"

"Naw, I was just askin'. Wot kind a team dis de boss drive?"

"Pair of grays."

"Double surrey?"

"Yep."

one told me. Ketch de huns down de rode that and den see a rafle oze to get me out de sock yours truly.

WHISTLING DICK.

There was some quiet but rapid maneuvering at Bellemeade during the ensuing half hour, which ended in five disgruntled and snuffing tramps being captured and locked securely in an outside house pending the coming of the morning and retribution. For another result the visiting young gentlemen had secured the unqualified worship of the visiting young ladies by their distinguished and heroic conduct. For still another, behold Whistling Dick, the hero, seated at the planter's table feasting.

The planter vowed that the wanderer should wander no more; that his was a goodness and an honesty that should be rewarded and that a debt of gratitude had been made that must be paid, for had he not saved them from a doubtless imminent loss and roused a great calamity? He assured Whistling Dick that he might consider himself a charge upon the honor of Bellemeade, that a position suited to his powers would be found for him at once.

But now, they said, he must be weary, and the immediate thing to consider was rest and sleep. So the mistress spoke to a servant, and Whistling Dick was conducted to a room in the wing of the house occupied by the servants. In this room in a few minutes was brought a portable tin bathtub filled with water, which was placed on a piece of oiled cloth upon the floor. There the vagrant was left to pass the night.

By the light of a candle he examined the room. A bed, with the covers neatly turned back, revealed snowy pillows and sheets. There were towels on a rack and soap in a white dish.

Whistling Dick set his candle on a chair and placed his hat carefully under the table. After satisfying what we must suppose to have been his curiosity by a sober scrutiny, he removed his coat, folded it and laid it upon the floor near the wall, as far as possible from the unused bathtub. Taking his coat for a pillow, he stretched himself luxuriously upon the carpet.

When on Christmas morning the first streaks of dawn broke above the marshes Whistling Dick awoke and reached instinctively for his hat. Then he remembered that the skirts of Fortune had swept him into their folds on the night previous, and he went to the window and raised it to let the fresh breath of the morning cool his brow.

As he stood there certain dread and ominous sounds pierced his ear.

The force of plantation workers, eager to complete the shortened task allotted to them, were all astir. The nighty din of the ocre Labor shook the earth, and the poor tattered and forever disguised prince in search of his fortune trembled.

The December air was frosty, but the sweat broke out upon Whistling Dick's face. He thrust his head out of the window and looked down. Fifteen feet below him, against the wall of the house, he could make out that a border of flowers grew, and by that token he overhung a bed of soft earth.

Softly as a burglar goes, he clambered out upon the sill, lowered himself until he hung by his hands alone and then dropped safely. No one seemed to be about upon this side of the house. He dodged low and skimmed swiftly across the yard of the low fence. It was an easy matter to vault over the fence. It was an easy matter to vault

this, for a terror urged him such as lifts the galleon over the thorn bush when the lion pursues. A crash through the dew drenched weeds on the roadside, a clattering, slippery rush up the grassy side of the levee to the footpath at the summit, and he was free!

A small, ruffled, brown-breasted bird sitting upon a dogwood sapling began a soft, throaty, tender little piping in praise of the dew which entices foolish worms from their holes, but suddenly it stopped and sat with its head turned sideways, listening. And the little brown bird sat with its head on one side until the sound of whistling died away.

COMMUNICATION

Stirling, Dec. 11, 1917

To the Editor of the Leader
Dear Sir—

Will you kindly allow me to take up a small space in your paper, to express my views concerning the coming election. I have always been considered a hard shell git, but, be that as it may, I cannot see why at the present time, any man should be either glib oratory. My opinion is, that at the present time we are divided into either "Win-the-War" supporters or cowards. With such able men as Rowell, Bains, and Galt, the Government, associated with the Union Government, no man with brains can suggest anything but an honest effort to win the War and send to our boys the needed help they require and to, if possible, give to those immortal heroes of the first contingent an opportunity to see their loved ones at home once more.

Every man should give the Union Government their hearty support and thereby aid to the forces who are trying to bring to justice the traitors, criminals in the history of the world. The best that mothers, women and children, that gorges out the eyes of the wounded, the best that has dropped so low as to put human beings in the melting pot to make products for the carrying on of their miserable machine. Those are not dreams, not moving pictures on the screen, but the truth.

Now Mr. Editor what kind of a being is a creature living in Canada today who can sit quiet and not raise to the fullest extent of his power and manhood to bring to subject to the most fearful beast of all time, how can such creatures exist among us, while their school mates and friends, yes relatives are spilling their blood for their cause. And still Mr. Editor there are those who run around talking party politics.

This brings us back to the election. Mr. Graham no doubt is a perfectly sincere man but I ask you, who will slanders and cowards vote for, not Porter, they will do like the drowning man did grasp at a straw. They know it there was any chance at all of help it would come from other sources than the government candidates who are pledged to support government policy. Please do not think I am trying to belittle Mr. Graham, but I think it is our duty to support Rowell and Borden's choice of candidate. I do not think Rowell or Borden for one minute questioned Mr. Graham's honesty of purpose but endorsed a tried man in last Parliament when the crisis was on and far as I can learn from our newspapers has been the proceeding all through Canada no matter what the candidates for party politics were. We therefore find former Liberal members as endorsed by the new government. These are the men who should have our support, and as grubs and toads and all creeds from Canada are united as one in France and Flanders trying to roll back the hordes of murderers, we at home should unite to do our share of the burden.

Another thing Mr. Editor I would like to mention is the moral effect Canada will produce by sending to Parliament as many straight Union party men as we can. It will also give our War Cabinet more courage to adopt policies which would be far reaching in their scope and essential to a more stringent tightening up in certain disloyal channels. We want our cabinet to think well and when they know they are right, to be able to go ahead without fear of independent or opposition tactics. Don't have our next parliament tottering with independents who neatly always hold the balance of Power, but have a government machine that will be felt in Germany. As I said before, Mr. Editor, I do not propose to vote Conservative now, but I am going to vote along with two others of my household for the selected candidate of Rowell and Borden to protect my family and property from the ravages of the most inhuman beast the world has ever known.

Yours truly,
A FARMER

BIRTHS

McGOWAN—In Stirling on Thursday Nov. 29th. to Mr. and Mrs. W. J. McGowan, a son. (Wesley Stewart).

Final Appeal Judge Gives Ruling on Exemption of Farmers

Mr. Justice Duff (the Final Court of Appeal) Declares it is Essential that there shall be No Diminution in Agricultural Production.

(Published by authority of Director of Public Information, Ottawa.)

Hon. Mr. Justice Duff gave judgment on December 6th, in the first test case brought before him, as Central Appeal Judge (the final court of appeal), for the exemption of a farmer. The appeal was made by W. H. Rowntree in respect of his son, W. J. Rowntree, from the decision of Local Tribunal, Ontario, No. 421, which refused a claim for exemption. The son was stated to be an experienced farm hand, who had been working on the farm continuously for the past seven years, and ever since leaving school. He lives and works with his father, who owns a farm of 150 acres near Weston, Ontario. With the exception of a younger brother, he is the only male help of the father on the farm. The father is a man of advanced years.

In granting the man exemption "until he ceases to be employed in agricultural labor," Mr. Justice Duff said:

"The Military Service Act does not deal with the subject of the exemption of persons engaged in the agricultural industry; and the question which it is my duty to decide is whether the applicant being and having been, as above mentioned, habitually and effectively engaged in agriculture and in labor essential to the carrying on of agricultural production, ought to be exempted under the provisions of the Military Service Act.

"These two propositions are indisputable:

"(1) In order that the military power of the allies may be adequately sustained, it is essential that in this country and under the present conditions, there should be no diminution in agricultural production.

"(2) The supply of competent labor available for the purpose of agricultural production is not abundant, but actually is deficient.

"The proper conclusion appears to be that the applicant, a competent person, who had been habitually and effectively engaged in labor essential to such production, ought not to be withdrawn from it.

"It is perhaps unnecessary to say that such exemptions are not granted as concessions on account of personal hardship, still less as a favor to a class. The sole ground of them is that the national interest is the better served by keeping these men at home. The supreme necessity (upon the existence of which, as its preamble shows) that leads the State to take men by compulsion and put them in the fighting line requires that men shall be kept at home who are engaged in work essential to enable the State to maintain the full efficiency of the combatant forces, and whose places cannot be taken by others not within the class called out."

Deputy Master—John E. McGee
Chaplin—Perry McGee
Rec. Sec.—Geo. Laury
Fin. Sec.—H. C. Martin
Assistant F. S.—R. Cosby
Director of ceremonies—Jas. Montgomery
Lecturers—Thos. McGee, C. Cain
Auditors—L. Meiklejohn, Rev. B. F. Byers.

Turkeys will be Scarce

There is every prospect that turkeys will be scarce and dear for the Christmas market. A canvass of the surrounding district shows that already high prices are being offered by dealers in Montreal and Toronto who are anxious to secure large shipments. It is known that the supply will be limited, owing to the fact that the past season was a poor one for turkeys, and the probable heavy shipments to outside points, owing to the high prices which will prevail, will shorten the supply here—Belleville Ontario.

"BELA"

He was a little man, radiating good nature and fun. He had round, ruddy cheeks, looking as if the half of an apple had been glued to each side of his face, and a spreading, crinkly brown beard.

"Blennyne! Blennyne!" cried Johnny Gagnon, with sweeping obeisances.

"Well, Johnny, have you got a new one for me?" asked his lordship with a twinkle.

The riverbank became a scene of delightful confusion: black cassocks, red tunics, orange ribbons and black velvet footloose all mingled. The two slender boy priests showed strange hirsute adornments. One had a face like a round white dolly with brown fringes; the other was spotted with hair like now grass.

The priest and the doctor were ordinary-looking men. They did not add to the picturesque of the scene, but each carried a bag which was charged with rumance for the natives.

The two policemen were almost as young as the boy priests, but bigger and redder and clean-shaven. Here the eyes of the Gagnon girls lingered longest.

The greatest sensation, naturally, was created by the blue ink. It was the last to come ashore. It lingered on the gunwale with an appealing turn, and wards until a red arm was offered on one side, a black arm on the other, whereupon it hopped ashore with a coy waltz to the right and to the left. It was not hard to see why the boatmen had christened her the "chickadee-woman."

Young Joe, catching a glimpse of the face beneath, muttered: "School-marm!" impolitely.

The natives, however, made no such distinctions. To them she was just a white woman, only the second they had ever seen. They had no means of knowing whether they came more beautiful than this. Miss Mackall, looked, battled, and corseted in town, was the headliner of the show.

The experience to one of her life lost in a crowd of women was novel and a little intoxicating. The blue ink waggled and cocked alarmingly. The wearer, exulting in the consciousness that everybody was looking at her, saw nothing of this strange land she was in.

As soon as the general hand-shaking was over, Big Jack addressed himself to Sergeant Coulson. "I've got a prisoner for you, sergeant."

Coulson instantly stiffened into an arm of the law. "What charge?" he asked.

"I don't exactly know the legal name of it. He carried off a girl against her will. This girl is pointing to Bela. She's tied her up and carried her off in a canoe, and kept her prisoner on an island in the lake."

The policeman was startled under his military air. "Is this true?" he asked Bela.

Bela, without saying anything, allowed him to suppose that it was true. "Well, have you heard of it?" asked Coulson. "Gagnon, can we use your shack?"

"Could he use it?" "Aristide! Michel! Maria!" shrieked Johnny. "Run, you turtles! Carry everything outside. Talk down the stove!"

Bishop Lajeunesse went to Bela with kind eyes.

"My poor girl!" he said, in her own tongue. "Have you had a bad time?"

"Walt," murmured Bela, deprecatingly. "I tell everything in there."

"Mercy! Abducted!" cried Miss Mackall, with an inquisitive stare. "She's bold enough about it. Not a trace of shame!"

"I'm afraid this will hardly be suitable for her to hear," murmured the doctor, who had constituted himself one of Miss Mackall's gallants. "Will you wait in the boat?"

"A trial! I wouldn't miss it for worlds," she retorted. "Which is the criminal? One of her own sort, I suppose. Fancy! carrying her off!"

Within a few minutes the Gagnon household was heaped on top of doory, and the stage set for the "trial" was strange how the squatty little shack, with its crooked windows and doors instantly took on the look of a court.

All the seats were ranged across one and between the two doors for the policeman and the guests of honor. Both doors were left open to give light to the proceedings, and a great bar of sunlight fell athwart the dusty floor.

Coulson sat in the middle with a table before him, and the other policeman at his left with notebook and pencil to take down the evidence. Both youngsters as the representatives of authority wore an air of gravity beyond their years.

Miss Mackall sat at the other side of Coulson, ever making play with the ostrich feathers. The doctor and the Indian agent were next her.

At the other end of the line sat Bishop Lajeunesse. He had sent the boy-priests back to the boat to repack the baggage. Whatever their feelings, they had obeyed with a cheerful air.

Of all those present only the bishop showed any compassion. Bela stood near him, and he occasionally leaned forward and patted her arm. She received it with an odd look, at once grateful and apprehensive.

The body of the room was filled with the natives, including the Gagnon family, the boatmen, and the servants, all squatting on the floor facing the table of justice. While they waited for the appearance of the prisoner they occupied themselves with Miss Mackall's gloves and parasol, and the artificial bouquet at her girdle.

No such articles, however, had ever been seen before on Musquamepi. Sam was led in with his hands tied before him. He held his head high. Jack left him standing in front of the table, and Jack, Shand, and Joe took up positions by the door across the room from Bela.

The importance in the scene, all looked a little self-righteous. Occasionally they relieved their feelings by spitting outside the door. Sam did not look greatly concerned; his composure was clear. True, he felt the degradation of the bound wrists, but must he not presently be triumphantly vindicated? He had been waiting for this moment all night.

"Mercy! Not at all what I expected!" whispered Miss Mackall to the doctor. "The handsome wretch! Fancy! Carrying her off like what you call him. Much too good for her. It's her they should punish!"

The proceedings were opened by a formal questioning.

"Name?" "Samuel Gladding."

"Age?" "Twenty-four."

"Nativity?" "American. Born in Orange, New Jersey."

"No."

"First came to Canada?" "February 18 last."

"Arrived in Caribou Lake?" "Citizen of Canada."

"May 2. Travelling with Messrs. Skinner, Marr, Hagland, and Fraser, in the capacity of cook."

During the course of the questioning the prisoner gradually apprehended that the sentiment of the room was against him. The suspicion crept into his mind that it might not be so easy as he had thought to clear himself.

"You are charged with having abducted this girl, Bela," Coulson went on, "and keeping her a prisoner on Eagle Island. It is your right to waive examination, in which case I shall send you out to Miwasa Land for trial. Do you wish to proceed?"

"Yes," said Sam.

Young Coulson's legal formula faltered here. "Well, what have you got to say for yourself?" he asked quite humbly.

As Sam was about to defend himself it suddenly rushed over him what a comical figure he would make, accusing a girl of abducting him. He closed his mouth and blushed crimson. Big Jack and his pals smiled at each other meaningly.

"Well," demanded Coulson. "It's not true," mumbled Sam.

"Didn't you go with her?" "Yes, but—"

"But what?" "But what?"

"What do you mean?" "There was no help for it."

"It was she carried me off!" Sam burst out.

There was an instant's silence in the room. The white men stared at the unexpected answer. The red people hardly understood it.

"What do you mean?" demanded Coulson, scowling.

"Just what I said!" cried Sam, recklessly. "Jumped on me when I was asleep; tied me hand and foot, and bundled me in her canoe."

There was a great burst of derisive laughter. The decorum of the court was entirely destroyed. "Never had such an original defense been heard," Coulson and his clerk laughed with the rest. Even the bishop had to laugh, albeit indignantly. Jack, Shand and Joe fairly doubled up by the door. Sam stood through it, blushing and glaring around at his tormentors.

"I believe him!" cried Miss Mackall; but nobody heard her.

When order was restored, Coulson said, with a shake in his throat: "You hardly expect us to believe that, do you?"

"I don't care whether you believe it or not!" returned Sam, hotly. "Let me question her, and I'll show you I guess that's my right, isn't it?"

"Certainly," said Coulson, stiffly. "Stand aside for a while and let her tell her story without interruption. You can question her when she is through."

All the white people except the white woman looked at the girl with sympathetic eyes. Bela's face was pale and one hand was pressed to her breast to control the agitated tenant there.

To be obliged to speak out before so many white people was a terrible ordeal for the girl of the lake. She suspected, too, that there would be some difficult questions to answer, and there was no Miss Mackall to advise her. Alas, if she had taken his advice she would not have been here at all!

In These War Times you want real food that contains the greatest amount of body-building material at lowest cost. The whole wheat grain is all food. Shredded Wheat Biscuit is the whole wheat in a digestible form. Two or three of these little loaves of baked whole wheat with milk and a little fruit make a nourishing, strengthening meal.

Made in Canada.

"Go ahead," said Coulson, sympathetically.

Bela drew a steady breath and raised her head. Pointing at Sam with unconcealed dramatic effect, she said clearly: "He speak true. I carry him off."

Again there was a silence in the court, while the spectators gaped in pure astonishment. The three men by the door serviced in an ugly fashion. Sam himself was surprised by her candor. He looked at her anxiously, wondering what she was preparing for.

Coulson regretted his sympathy. "What do you mean?" he demanded, sharply. "Is this a joke?"

Bela shook her head. "I tie him up and take him away like he say."

"Then what is all this about? What did you do it for?" asked the policeman.

This was the question Bela dreaded. A stubborn look came over her face. "He is my friend," she said. "I hear those men say they hate him. Say they going kill him and nobody know. I think if I tell Sam that, he just laugh. So I got take him away myself to save him."

The white spectators leaned forward, mystified and breathlessly attentive. Here was a brand-new story which did not fit any of the time-honored court-room situations. The bishop looked sad. It was suspected from her face that she was lying. Jack, Shand, and Joe could not contain their angry exclamations.

"It's a lie!" cried Jack. "The cook was nothing to us, neither one way or the other. Of course, after we thought he carried her off, we were sore, naturally."

"She's just trying to shield him now!" cried Joe, furiously.

"Well, I can't hold him if she doesn't want him held," said Coulson. "She told me yesterday she wanted him punished, insisted Jack."

"One moment," said Coulson. "I'll get to the bottom of this. He turned to Bela with a severe air. "Is that true?"

"Yes, I tell him that," admitted Bela.

"What did you do that for?" "I run away from me." Here the spectators smiled. "I not strong enough to catch him. So I mak' them catch him. I mak' them bring him to the police so all is known. They cannot hurt him if all is known."

The bishop, watching Bela, was sadly puzzled. Poor Bela herself, if he had known, was confused between the truths and the untruths.

"Why should they want to hurt him?" demanded Coulson.

"I don't know. Here she was evasive again."

"What were you doing in their camp in the first place?" he asked.

"I just traveling," said Bela.

"But you stayed there long enough to make friends. How long were you there?"

"Three-four days."

"What did you stay for?" "Nothing," said Bela, sullenly.

"That's no answer. You must have known the risks a girl ran in a camp on the lake."

"I tak' care of myself all right."

"Answer my question," he insisted. "What did you stay there for?"

"I not stay in their house," she parried.

"Never mind that. What did you stay around there for?"

Bela was cornered. True to her wild nature, her eyes turned desirously toward the open door. The bishop laid a hand on her arm.

"Tell the truth, my daughter," he said, gently. "No one shall harm you."

Bela turned to him. "I am 'mos' white," she explained, as if he were the only reasonable person present. "I lak' be wit' white people."

Here a bitter asseverated the native audience at what they considered presumption. Bela's eyes flashed scorn on them. She forgot her terrors.

"I am not one of these!" she cried. "I am white! I want marry a white man!"

An odd sort of surprised laughter escaped the white spectators. They glanced at each other to make sure they had heard aright.

"Now we're getting down to it. The prisoner here was the one you picked out?"

"Yes!" answered Bela, defiantly. "He is the best man."

"Well—" exclaimed Coulson.

Suddenly the richness of the situation broke on the spectators, and a gale of laughter swept through the room.

The bishop laughed, too, though he patted Bela's arm encouragingly. At least, she was telling the truth now. It was too extraordinary to be otherwise.

Only the three men by the door did not laugh. With eyes full of hate, they glared at the girl and at the prisoner.

Big Jack, the most astute of the three, was the first to recover himself. It occurred to him that unless the rest of the story were prevented from coming out, their humiliation would be complete and abject.

With a glance of warning at his companions, he drew back his head and, with a roar, followed suit. Their laughter had a bitter ring, but in a gale of laughter the difference passed unnoticed.

The prisoner turned white to his lips. He preserved an unnatural calmness. Only his wild, pained eyes betrayed the ill-tempered, maddening rage that was consuming him.

Bela, whose eyes were only for him, turned pale to watch. "Sam," she whispered, imploringly.

"Cut me loose," he said, quickly. She looked about her. One passed her a knife, with which she cut at his wrists. The time searching his face with her terrified eyes, seeking to discover what he meant to do.

original drama. Bela, unconscious of everybody but one man, made a lovely, appealing figure.

"Sam," she whispered, "now you know I your friend. Don't go. Wait a little while. Sam—here is the bishop. Marry me, and let them laugh!"

Sam flung off the third arm. "Marry you!" he cried, with a quiet bitterness that burned like ice. "I'd sooner jump into the lake!"

Empty-handed and hatless, he strode out of the shack.

"Sam, wait!" she cried, despairingly, flying after.

CHAPTER XV.

Into the bay that occupies the northeastern corner of Caribou Lake empties a creek too small to have a name. To the left of its mouth, as one faces the lake ends the long, pine-clad dune that stretches along the bottom of the lake from the intake of Musquamepi.

To the right, as the shore turns westward, the sand rises a little and the forest begins. Back of the beach the little creek is masked by thickly springing willows.

An hour after the sun had passed the meridian the branches of the willows were softly parted, and Bela's pale face looked through, her eyes tense with anxiety. She searched the lake shore right and left. The wide expanse of sunny water and the bordering shore were empty.

Reassured, she came from behind the bushes, and sat on the creek, and splashed out to the beach, still keeping wary eyes about her. She carried her gun in one hand, and over the other shoulder the carcass of a wild goose hung limply.

Standing in the creek, she anxiously searched the shore for tracks. Finding none, a breath of relief escaped her. She flung the dead goose in the sand. From this position she could see down the beach as far as the intake of the little river, two miles or more away.

Caribou, the saggy water flowing over her feet, she stood for a while, straining her keen, anxious eyes in this direction. Finally she made out a tiny dark spot moving toward her on the sand.

She retreated up the creek and crouched behind the willows, when a lifeless stillness she had inherited from the red side of the house. The red people in the first place learned it from the wild creatures. She watched through the leaves.

A coyote trotting with his airy gait came along the top of the dune, looking for ill-considered trifles. He squatted on his haunches a couple of hundred yards away, and his tongue hung out.

He saw the dead goose below, a rich prize; but he also saw Bela, when he turned his head. He crouched, and he eyed her might go away. He was prepared to wait until dark if necessary. However, the approach of another two-legged figure along the beach behind him presently compelled him to retreat down the other side of the dune.

$35,000 of Ambergris in a Lump.

A prize lump of ambergris secured by the whaling brig Viola is reported by Capt. John A. Cook, of Provincetown, owner of the vessel. The chunk of ambergris taken from a sperm whale captured just south of Cape Hatteras, weighed 121 pounds, and was valued at $35,000. Each man of a crew of sixteen will have a share in the prize.

Another odd whaling barque of the New Bedford fleet returned to port recently after a four-years' cruise. This was the Wanderer, built at Matapoisett in 1878 and still apparently as sound as the day she was launched. The Wanderer had pretty good luck on her return cruise. In all she took 4200 barrels of sperm oil, valued at $100,000.

Most of this was sent home via the Azores and Barbadoes. Capt. Antonio Edwards, commander of the vessel, figured that an average catch of $40,000 a year was not so bad these days.

"Did you take any separate measures when you found the man was so ill?" "Yes, sir; we went for a doctor, sir,"—Baltimore American.

A Cure for Pimples

"You don't need mercury, potash or any other strong mineral to cure pimples caused by poor blood. Take Extract of Root."

"I suppose I am free to go," he said, stiffly, to Coulson.

"Sure!" answered the policeman. "I was pretty low-spirited, indeed, for the magnificent joke which had been played."

"Sam! Sam!" Bela murmured, pitifully.

The spectators eagerly watched for the final scene of this humorous and

BATTLE WITH A BOG.

Redmiro's Eucelon Tore the Leather Gaiters Off a Man's Legs.

Readers of "Lorna Doone" can never forget the terrible drowning of Carver in the bog. That death trap is still to be seen in the Eskmoor country, and not long ago a valuable hunting horse was engulfed in the mire, and his rider barely escaped with his life. S. Marling Gould, who had a narrow escape from a similar English bog tale of it in his "Book of the West." The author was with an official from the Ordnance survey, who was correcting the map of the country.

"In the dusk we lost our way and got into Redmiro. It was winter, the bog was unusually wet, and we could scarcely trip from one stone to another. Six bullocks had been lost in that very spot during the year."

"All at once I sank above my waist and was rapidly being sucked in farther. I called to my companion, but in the dark he could not see me. The water rushed to my armpits. Happily I had with me a stout bamboo six feet long. I placed it athwart the surface and held my arms as far extended as possible. By quickly jerking my body I gradually lifted it, and then I threw myself forward as far as I could. Finally I managed to cast myself full length on the surface. The suction was so great that I tore the leather gaiters off my legs."

"For a quarter of an hour I lay stretched out, gasping, before I got breath enough to worm myself along to dry soil."

A GOOD EXAMPLE

Nothing that the C. P. R. has done in the direction of food conservation has resulted in so many letters of commendation, as the footnote printed on all menu cards on C. P. R. dining cars and hotels. This reads:

"In the interest of food conservation, young lambs, little chickens, little pigs, and their by-products, are not used in the C. P. R. service."

The editor of a prominent mining journal says in a leading article:

"It must be borne in mind, as well as a full sense of duty for an institution which includes such hotels and restaurants as are found on that railway, to put such a memorandum before their high-class patrons."

But it has been done, and its moral effect has been wider than the actual wastage that has been saved. Those who have read the notice have, in some cases at all events, followed the good example of the railway, and have given up purchasing any of the immature animal food.

"If the food controller could prohibit the sale or use of these young animals it would be another means of food economy."

LIVING AEROPLANES.

Wherein Birds Differ From Flying Machines Made by Man.

It would be a mistake to suppose that the bird's wings enable it to fly. If wings spelled flying any of us could attach a pair and soar into the air.

The hollow bones of the birds make light bodies, but they are attached to a rigid backbone, which forms the main feature of the bird's body. This gives them the firmness, and the bones do the rest. The wings balance their owners, and the tail acts as a rudder for steering. Often enough the bird seems to use its tail as a sort of brake.

It is interesting to compare the bird with the product of man's skill—the aeroplane. To begin with, there is no aeroplane made which copies the up and down motion of the bird's wings, all our machines having fixed wings, or planes.

But naturally man tried to copy the living fibers around him. He made wings of feathers, etc., connected them with his shoulders and arms, and found that his muscles could not raise him an inch.

The muscles, or motors, which now drive him through the air, are as strong as 200 horses, so no wonder he failed at first. Even the bird, with a body so light, was formed for flight, his flying muscles equal in weight to all its other muscles put together.—Pearson's Weekly.

ORGAN IF BALANCE.

When It Becomes Affected It Produces an Attack of Vertigo.

When any one feels dizzy and perhaps almost about to faint his brain cannot properly control the working of his eyes. They may move round from side to side, perhaps independently instead of together, and as it may look as if things were spinning around.

Another reason for dizziness has to do with a wonderful part of the body near the ear and without which none of us could sit upright, much less stand, though few people have ever heard of it. This organ, which used to be thought to have something to do with hearing, really controls our balance.

In some people it is affected by disease, an illness commonly called "dizziness" or "vertigo," and everything is spinning round and round.

As every one knows, we can make ourselves dizzy and so think everything is spinning round by whirling around ourselves several times in one direction. This disturbs the organ of balance, and this disturbance gives us the feeling. If you turn round the other way you put things right by restoring the original state of affairs within the balance organ. The name for the feeling that things are spinning round is vertigo, and "vert" simply means "turn."—Kansas City Journal.

Banker—Do you know anything about cheques and drafts? Applicant—Yes, sir. I've had 'em since I was a boy. —Boston Transcript.

All Europe is Hungry

The French Echo de Paris recently published a review of food restrictions in all countries as well as a list of the countries which have the most severe restrictions than elsewhere are being considered by the authorities and will soon be announced. Following is a condensation of the article:

GERMANY.
The figures in regard to German food restrictions are known to us in detail.

The bread allowance differs in various cities from four pounds a week for every person to five pounds (about ten ounces a day for every person).

The meat allowance is nine ounces a week for every person, and as far as grease and food oils, including butter, are concerned, the weekly allowance is two ounces, and even these are not always distributed.

The official allowance of potatoes is seven pounds a week for every person. But the distribution varies in different localities.

As to milk, no one can receive more than one pint a day. The theoretical allowance for these three classes was formerly a pint and a half but recently it has been reduced to a pint.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.
The situation in Austria is no better than in Germany. The daily allowance of bread is ten ounces. Meat has not been put on allowance in Austria; only two meatless days are prescribed by the law. At present the question of increasing the number of meatless days is under consideration.

The weekly allowance of butter, grease and food oil is four and a half ounces, and consists of two and a half ounces of butter, one ounce of grease, and one ounce of bacon. In reality, however, nobody receives more than one ounce of butter.

The allowance of potatoes is three pounds per week, but the press believes that this will soon be reduced to two pounds a week.

In Bulgaria the allowance of bread has been set at eighteen ounces a day for every person. On the other hand, there are three meatless days each week.

In Finland the theoretical allowance is supposed to be nine ounces a day, but it rarely exceeds five ounces.

SWITZERLAND.
In Switzerland the daily allowance of bread is nine ounces, with a monthly addition of nineteen ounces of flour. Military men in service receive thirty-seven ounces a day, and from time to time an additional three ounces.

Rice is also on allowance, amounting to fifteen ounces a person.

There are no meatless days in Switzerland, on account of the lack of other commodities that could take the place of meat. On June 11, 1917, a decree was issued by the Federal Council forbidding hotels and restaurants to serve more than one meat or egg dish to a person.

DENMARK AND SWEDEN.
In Denmark the daily allowance of bread is eleven ounces a person. In Sweden it is nine and a half ounces.

NETHERLANDS.
The daily allowance of bread in the Netherlands is nine ounces a person, the meat allowance seven ounces and the potato allowance fifteen ounces.

ITALY.
In Italy the Government has left to the local communities the power to determine the allowances of various food commodities. The Government only appoints allowance inspectors, whose duty is to co-ordinate the regulations of the local authorities.

The New Suits.
Show.
Uneven coat lengths.
Fitted and semi-fitted lines.
Belts simulated and belted real.
A more economical use of fur trimmings.

Wigg—I wonder why Closefit suits wears those pepper-and-salt suits? Wagg—I suppose because a pepper-and-salt suit should be good for two seasons.

Is a United Quebec? to Rule All Canada?

This, the most tremendous question in Canada's history, is to be answered within ten days.

Our answer involves Canada's honour, her freedom and her future. Old-time party questions are being advanced to obscure the gravest issue ever placed before a nation. Canada is in real danger. The clouds that obscure her vision must be brushed aside so that the great issue stands forth clear and distinct.

"Is a United Quebec to Rule All Canada?"

To-day, in our national crisis, Quebec alone among all the provinces stands more united than ever before. She knows what she wants:

- (1) Withdrawal from the war.
- (2) Bilingual schools everywhere.
- (3) Weakening of the ties of British connection.
- (4) Political control of Canada.

From the Ottawa River to Labrador and the Gulf, a common purpose actuates Quebec in her determination to profit by the factional divisions of Canada and to impose her will upon all the people of Canada.

Within the last few weeks, Quebec has mobilized all her forces to dominate Canada under the unified leadership of Bourassa and Laurier. Canada knows that these two men in their earlier days were personal friends and political associates. Canada knows how in recent times they gradually drew apart—until in 1911 Bourassa opposed Laurier and helped to bring about his defeat, at the polls. Canada knows that from that time forward, until a few weeks ago, the breach between them steadily widened until envy and hatred, each toward the other became the possession of both. Bourassa and his followers were anathema to Laurier.

Should not the people of Canada ask themselves, before it is too late, why these two men have suddenly agreed to bury the past, why this sudden embrace each of the other? If we will but let the scales drop from our eyes the answer is obvious. The all-compelling influences of Quebec have combined to force the union of Laurier and Bourassa in the common purpose of French Canadian domination.

We concede the right of French Canadians to make common cause of anything they think it is in their interests so to do. This is a free country. But as the French Canadians have already combined to assert their views, it is the duty of the hour that we English-speaking Canadians get together and present to Quebec a united front in the defence of our rights. This is imperative.

With sixty solid seats Quebec is about to accomplish her designs. Bourassa, the real master and idol of Quebec, is in sight of his goal.

To attain her purpose, Quebec has not scrupled to ignore British traditions and to suppress freedom of speech. So thoroughly organized is her campaign to prevent even the discussion of the war that Unionist candidates are prevented from holding public meetings throughout that Province. The Unionist minority in Quebec are the victims of organized obstruction.

To be successful in her determination to rule all Canada, Quebec has but to secure a few seats in each of the other Provinces. Quebec leaders now seek to divide the rest of Canada into factions by insidiously bringing into political discussion old-time party questions, to divert the public mind from Quebec, her purpose and her ambitions.

United in her determination to quit the war, Quebec would compel a divided Canada to do likewise. By union only can the English-speaking people prevent this calamity.

However well-meaning Laurier candidates in Ontario may be, they will be helpless against a united Quebec.

Apart from the splendid work of the small English-speaking population, Quebec has failed the Red Cross, has failed the Patriotic Fund, has failed in recruiting and has failed in the Victory Loan. Dare we trust our soldiers, their wives, their children, their pensions and their allowances to Quebec, that will neither give, enlist nor invest, and which will resist taxation for the support of our men and their dependents?

Canada must decide whether she will become a deserter and quit with Russia, or fight to the end for liberty with Belgium. This decision must not be dictated by the only Province which has shirked its obligations throughout the war.

All Canada knows that Germany has been working through agents, spies and bribes in every country in the world. The latest evidences are the revelations recently made to the world by President Wilson. Do we Canadians think the Kaiser has overlooked Canada? If we do, what a fool's paradise!

Germany benefits by division among her enemies. Upon whom would she look in Canada as furthering her designs? Not Sir Robert Borden, Mr. Rowell and their colleagues in the Union Government. That is certain. But can the same be said with respect to the leaders in the Province of Quebec whose attitude in this war is against Canada's continuation in the war. We regret to be compelled to say these things, but we must not shut our eyes to facts.

The Citizens' Union Committee, anxious for the maintenance of British ideals and traditions, views with alarm the menace of French-Canadian domination with its inevitable influence upon the home, the school and the state.

We, therefore, call upon all English-speaking men and women to realize that—Canada, divided by political factions and old-time party questions, is at the mercy of a united Quebec. Union Government alone can save Canada from the menace of French-Canadian domination.

Rawdon Khaki Club

The regular meeting of the R. K. Club met at the home of the Secretary, Miss Marjorie McGee.

Meeting was called to order by the Vice-President, Mr. Edmund Dracup, by singing "We'll Never Let the Old Flag Fall".

Letters were then read by the secretary from the soldier boys in France, thanking the club for the Xmas boxes which they have received in good condition. Names were Arthur Richardson, Colin Kennedy, Norman Trusdale, Jim Simpson, Abraham Keating. Mr. Reggie Motiee favoured the crowd with a piano solo.

Miss Marjorie McGee and Mr. Fred Martin, Wesley Johnston, Edmund Dracup and Fred Thain sang several patriotic songs accompanied by Miss Laella Thain at the organ. It was decided to continue sending boxes to our soldiers. Miss Marjorie McGee and Mr. Fred Thain were nominated to furnish programme for the next meeting.

The hostess treated the crowd with apples. Games were played after which meeting closed by singing the National Anthem.

Miss Clara Snarr of Albert College, Belleville has invited the members to her home for the Christmas meeting on December 28th.

Boy Scout's Concert

On Monday evening Stirling Opera House was packed to suffocation with intensely anxious citizens who had come from near and far to hear election returns and enjoy a concert which was first class in every particular. It would be an impossibility to make special comment, as one and all delighted the audience who showed their appreciation by loud applause. The returns while at first discouraging were towards the last very encouraging and when the National Anthem was sung the Union Government was secure.

The Boy Scouts wish to thank their many friends for helping them in one of the most successful concerts ever held in Stirling.

PRESENTATIONS AND ADDRESS.

A pleasant event took place on Monday evening at the home of Mr. Thomas Brennan, Welbans Corners. The members of the R. K. C. presented Miss Annie to a miscellaneous shower and an address in honour of her marriage to Mr. Dan O'Connell, which took place on the following Wednesday. The evening was spent in piano and violin music, lunch was served. The address is as follows—

Dear Annie:—

We the members of the Rawdon Khaki Club have taken the opportunity as well as a pleasure of being with you to-night.

Hearing that Wednesday is your glorious wedding day we thought we could not let it pass by without showing in some small way the respect we have for you.

We shall miss you Annie very much, your sunny smile, we will not soon forget but what is our loss will be the gain for the one to whom you soon will belong.

Please accept these gifts as a remembrance of the many friends you leave behind.

We now one and all join in wishing you and your intended companion a long and happy wedded life also a Merry Xmas and a Happy New Year.

Signed on behalf of the club, Edmund Dracup, Marjorie McGee, Laella Thain.
Mr. O'Connell replied on behalf of his bride to be.

HYMENEAL MURPHY-DOWNS

A quiet but interesting wedding took place on Saturday morning at 7 o'clock in the Roman Catholic church, when Miss Elizabeth I. Downs was united in the bonds of holy matrimony to Mr. R. J. Murphy, Camrose, who until recently has been a traveller for the Rumely Machinery Company. The ceremony was performed by Father Schnitzler. The bride, who was attractively attired in a brown broadcloth suit with hat to match, and a beautiful set of black lynx furs, the gift of the groom, was attended by Miss Gertrude Russell. The groom was supported by the bride's brother, Mr. Wm. S. Downs.

The happy couple left on the eight o'clock train for Seattle, Wash. and from that point will go to their new home in Anchorage, Alaska. Mr. Murphy will take up law practice with his brother at that point. The best wishes of their many friends are extended to the happy couple. Mrs. Murphy is particularly well and favorably known in Camrose, having worked in the law office of Messrs. Burgess & McKay for the past seven years.—Camrose Canadian.

DOMINION ELECTIONS

Union Government Has Majority of 44.

ONTARIO SOLID FOR UNION

Quebec Is Only Province Supporting Laurier.

Loyal People of Canada Speak in No Uncertain Voice Regarding Conscription, and Only One Section of the Country Opposed the Sending of Support to the Boys.

The Canadian people endorsed Union Government by a majority that leaves no room for questioning their will to carry on the war to victory. The solid opposition of Quebec—only three Unionists were elected in the whole province, and these in English-speaking constituencies—the vote of the French elements in several Ontario ridings, backed up by the votes of all those whom the call of patriotism has left cold, were snowed under by the union of Conservatives and Liberals all over the country. Sir Robert Borden will go back to Ottawa with a majority of at least 44 members, which will be increased when the four deferred elections are held.

Ontario did its share by returning Union supporters in all but 11 ridings, and in at least two of these the men elected as Laurierites—McCoig, of Kent, and Duncan Ross, of West Middlesex, voted against their leader on conscription. But if Ontario did well, the West rallied to the standard of Unionism in a manner that was remarkable. West of the Great Lakes Sir Wilfrid Laurier won only three seats.

Three Alberta seats are still in doubt, Bow River where 33 polls out of 175 give Gouge, Laurierite, a majority of 17 over Halliday (Unionist); Battle River, where Warner, Laurierite, has a slight lead over Blair, Unionist, with a majority of the polls yet to be heard from, and Victoria, where White, Laurierite, has a small lead over Holden, Unionist, with about a third of the polls heard from. These may all go for Laurier. The other nine Alberta seats are safely on the Union side.

Later returns still further emphasize what was probably the most striking feature of the election, namely, the large majorities secured by Unionist candidates in the English-speaking provinces and by the Liberals in Quebec. It is altogether likely that more candidates will lose their deposits in this election than at any previous contest.

Seven Laurierite candidates out of 12 in Manitoba have lost their deposits. They are: H. C. Patterson, Brandon; E. W. Quinn, Lisgar; F. C. Hamilton, Marquette; F. Shirlcliffe, Portage La Prairie; N. C. MacMillan, South Winnipeg; R. S. Ward, Centre Winnipeg; McGregor, Independent, in Neepawa, may also lose his deposit.

Only in the Maritime Provinces did Laurier candidates make anything like a showing. In Prince Edward Island they carried four seats and in Nova Scotia won nine, compared with five won by Unionists. Quebec did all that Sir Wilfrid Laurier expected of it. In fact, the Unionists won a seat less than they expected, but the two English-speaking Ministers, Hon. J. C. Doherty and Hon. C. C. Ballantyne, got through, as did Sir Herbert Ames. Outside of Montreal, however, not a Unionist was elected, both Hon. Mr. Blondin and Hon. Albert Savigny being defeated.

It was a significant fact that with one or two exceptions, the ridings that Laurier carried in Ontario had either a strong German or French element. After the organized insult to Sir Robert Borden at Kitchener it was evident where the pro-German element in North Waterloo stood and the big majority rolled up for

PORTER ELECTED

Glorious Victory for Union Government and E. Guss Porter

Elections over, results anticipated. The two Oak Hill gentlemen, one from Marmora and the other from Belleville, failed to create any impression. France, Italy, Belgium, the United States are rejoicing over the Union Government victory in Canada, but above all the Mother Country is proud of her young and pretty daughter, Miss Canada who positively refused to be courted by any traitor. Miss Canada despises roudiness because she has been brought up in a refined atmosphere and will not readily forget those disgusting elements which insulted her during the last three months. Miss Canada wishes to thank all her patriotic admirers who saved her from the fate of her friend, Miss Belgium. She knows that the farmers all over the country the mechanics in city and town the merchants they too came up nobly to vote dominion down. The people remember Sir Wilfrid and the hard time they had during his term. They compared the past with the present and as to Sir Robert stood firm. Let each patriot shout loud in the chorus Right nobly our duty we've done. We entered the contest like patriots like heroes have fought and have won Quebec sought to blind and mislead us but like men we stood loyal and true. With the King of our country our watchword. And the flag of the red, white and blue. Quebec—Bourassa, Lavergne, Sir Wilfrid and his referendum.

...the other candidates, was a surprise. In South Perth also votes of German descent made their presence felt, and South Bruce, which was won by Iubon Trunk, Laurier candidate, has two or three townships in which voters of German descent predominate. The loss of the Essex seats to Laurier candidates was a surprise. The seats won by the Laurier candidates in the Eastern townships were carried by the solidarity of the French-Canadian vote. With one exception the endorsed candidates defeated independent Unionists, the exception being Brant, where Col. Harry Cockshutt, the soldier candidate, defeated John Harold, the Liberal-Unionist. An interesting win for Unionism was that of Evan Fraser over W. M. German in Welland. Mr. German supported conscription, but he was nevertheless a strong Laurier partisan. He was galled as untable, but he fell over 500 votes short. The four deferred elections—two in Halifax one in Nelson, Manitoba.

LESSON XII.
December 23, 1917.

2. The Mision of the Messiah (vs. 2, 3) who may abide the day of his King—The Messiah, infinitely holy just, would just to shame and condemn the ungodly. To receive him would mean the putting way of all idolatry-like a refiner's fire! The refiner's fire was used to separate impurities from the metal. Fullers' soap an alkaline substance in the form of lye, was used by washing water through ahen was used to clean clothes. This is spoken of as "fullers' soap." The fuller was the one who washed the cloth and thickened it by twisting it in length and breadth. The work of the Messiah would be to wash the hearts of the people. 3. as a refiner... of silver—Reference is made to the work of those who made pure silver from the ore. The refiner places the metal in the crucible and melts it. He watches it closely and notes the nature of the metal as it is all consumed and only the pure silver remains. In the atonement provision is made for the cleansing of the nature, purification of Levi—The priests had become corrupt and it was necessary they should be purified if they would "offer unto the Lord an offering righteousness." 4. offering of righteousness and Jerusalem—The offering was by the Jews as representative of all who would receive the Messiah.

If, Stern rebukes to Judah (vs. 7-10).

 abased from good; ye are not chauging—ye are unchangeable in infinity—ye are unchangeable in persistency." Return unto me, and I return unto you—There is a depth of affection and mercy couched in these words. Jehovah was yearning over erring people. He would receive them graciously if they would only turn to him iniquity and come to him with the Lord of Hosts—Those words

Bring ye all the tithes—The way escape from the curse that was hanging upon the people, if they were to obey the Lord. If they could do this, they would accomplish no things. They would be relieved of condemnation for their neglect, and they would be ample provision made for carrying on the things which are to be a part of their interest in spiritual things. Prove me—They are called upon to bring in the tithes and offerings, and to do it in the truth. They were invited to put God to the test. Open your eyes and behold the heavens. The Lord shows indicating the magnitude of the blessing which God was waiting to pour out" on his obedient, believing people. A blessing—the blessing would include God's favor, satisfaction and joy; and there would be the blessing of the fields and flocks, and the windows of heaven would be opened to pour out rain upon the land. 11. I will rebuke the devourer—the Lord promised to hold in check the agencies that would naturally destroy the increase of the fields. 12. I will fill you with blessing—if you would fully obey Jehovah, their prosperity would be so great as to attract the attention of surrounding nations.—Who was the writer of these questions—

Pronouncing judgment against ingly looked forward to Messiah's coming, but they greatly mistook His act. They little thought what a teacher of hearts and corrector of lives he would be. They thought of themselves only as coming. The prophet Malachi saw them so, and said: "To prepare them for the King Messiah, a faithful herald in the Baptist was sent. He raised the attention, awakened conscience, announced the nearness of Messiah's approach, proclaimed reign, convinced of sin and showed people that they stood in need of much greater salvation than defence from the Roman power. Malachi announced the Messiah who should bring a great purging among the people of Israel. The illustration furnishes a beautiful figure of the plans and purposes of Christ Jesus, God over all, doing all, guiding all with untrifling and patience from generation to generation in a refining process to bring man into the state of purity and holiness, to himself. The prophet God called the Jewish nation to a recollection of their transgressions and particularly with regard to His own ordinances. His requirements were disregarded, his rights trampled, the demands and interests of His kingdom were neglected. Such a people could proceed from failure to acknowledge the great fact of God's sovereignty."

Offering incentive to repentance, the event announced by the prophet the appearance of that great Deliverer who had for many ages been the hope of Israel. He is described the everlasting God, the Jehovah the Israelites. The long twilight figure and type was about to be succeeded by the clear day of spiritual religion. It was the purpose of Malachi to arouse the conscience of the different classes of the people and to lead them to consider seriously their national, religious and domestic condition. He presented an ideal future strange, unwelcome faces. He stood at the club window, looking out in the desolate, deserted street which he had always remembered as being thronged, and a great sadness swept over him.

There was a knock. "Come in," he called. From the pocket he drew out the scrap of paper which had really brought him many miles, and looked at it bitterly. It was only a death announcement cut from a paper of a year ago, and ran in the usual way—"Michael Crowley, at his residence," etc.

In fancy he saw a sweet-faced maiden, who sought her happiness only in the eyes of the youth by her side. He remembered just how often they left the church with the intention of mutual love about them. The bells pealed on outside, and the ringing bells led him still further into the realm of "might have been."

At an instant he made up his mind to visit once more the old-fashioned place not many miles away, to which he had hoped fifteen years before to have returned. It would give him a chance to see it, even if his neglected condition only added to his loneliness and pain.

Two hours later he was striding through the crisp country air along a winding path which led to a rambling, ivy-covered cottage.

As the last turn brought him in sight of the house he stopped in surprise.

and decay. But instead he looked upon a trim, well-kept cottage, and soft crooning song in a voice which awakened the tender memories of long ago, came floating through the hatched door.

While believing that it must be fancied things, he entered the house with a sigh, and following the voice went to the inner room, and stood in the doorway of the warm firelight.

The sweet, tired-faced, middle-aged stranger turned as his shadow fell across the light, and then stood white and trembling.

"Gerald!" she whispered. "Gerald, will you come to reproach me? Not to-day? Not to-day?"

The strong man's voice broke as he laid out his arms.

"In a name!" he cried, joyfully.

"In a moment she was crushed, sobbing, to his breast.

"Oh, Gerald, is it really you? God bless my good. I thought you must be dead."

For several moments they stood speechless, the strong man's tears falling on her gray tinged hair. Then he gently pushed her into a chair.

"You are not alone?" he asked, as eyes caught sight of a little table

If you eat a raw egg on Christmas morning, fasting, you can carry heavy weights.
It is unlucky to carry anything with you from the house on Christmas morning until something has been bought into it.
If the fire burns brightly on Christmas morning it betokens prosperity; if it smoulders, adversity.

"It's not too late," he cried. "We still young. Will you let me try make you happy?"

After answer was drowned in the great of Christmas bells that pealed from village bell tower. Then by that did not end her words; he could see her eyes.

Christmas Feasts

Many curious feasts arose in connection with the celebration of Christmas in early days. Thus, the ass on which Balaam rode in the "Relms yestern" won for the feast the title of "the ass that ate the Feast of the asses." As it was celebrated in France, according to William Hone, it consisted almost entirely of dramatic show. In one occasion the clergy walked on Christmas Day in procession, habited to represent the prophets and other characters.

"Moses appeared in an alb and cope, with a long beard and a rod. David had a green vestment. Balaam, with an immense pair of spurs, rode on a wooden ass which enclosed a speaker. There were also the Jews and six Gentiles. Among other characters the poet Virgil was introduced, singing nonkish rhymes, as a Gentile prophet and a translator of the syllible or peches; toward they called on the prophets, one by one, who came forward successively and delivered a message relative to the Messiah. The other characters advanced to occupy the vacant places, and then they came to the questions of the choristers. They performed the miracle of the furnace. Nebuchadnezzar spoke, the Sisy appeared and then an anthem was sung, which concluded the ceremony.

"The Missal of an Archbishop of Sens" indicates that during such a service the animal itself, clad with precious priestly ornaments, was solemnly conducted to the middle of the choir, during which procession a hymn in praise of the ass was sung.

"Amén, brai, most honored Ass, Sated now with grain and grass; Repeat, amén, reply, And disregard antiquity."

Hez va! hez va! hez va! hezo!"

The service lasted the whole of a light and part of the next day, and precious melody of the strongest, most alluring strains, and the choristers were thirsty wine was served; In the evening, on a platform before the church lit by an enormous lantern, the grand chapter of monks led a jolly band in performing broadly indecorous interludes. At respective divisions of the service the ass was supplied with drink and prom Time Immemorial Part of the Holiday Celebration.

The lights on the tree are said to be of Jewish origin. In the ninth month of the Jewish year, corresponding nearly to our December, and on the twenty-fifth day, the Jews celebrated the feast of the dedication of their temple. It had been desecrated on that day by Antiochus. It was dedicated by Judas Maccabeus, and then, according to the Jewish legend, sufficient oil was found in the temple for the last for the seven branched candlestick for seven days, and it could have taken seven days to prepare new oil. Accordingly the Jews were wont on the 25th of Kislev in every house to light a candle, on the next day two, and so on till on the seventh and last day of the feast seven candles twinkled in every house.

It is not easy to fix the exact ate to Nativity, but it fell most probably on the last day of Kislev, when every Jewish household in Bethlehem and Jerusalem was twinkling with lights. It is worthy of notice that the German name for Christmas is Weihnachts (the night of dedication), as though it were associated with this feast. The Greeks also call Christmas the Feast of Lights, and, indeed, this was also the name given to the dedication festival, Chanuka, by the Jews.—New York Mail and Express.

Memorial Service of the Late Pte. W. S. S. Ashley

At Holloway on Dec. 2nd, 1917 a memorial service for the late Pte. W. S. S. Ashley was held, a large number of friends from far and near came in respect to the departed hero.

The service was preached by the Rev. C. S. Reddick assisted by the Rev. Barker and both spoke feelingly of the departed one. The Loyal Orange Association of Holloway of which Pte. Ashley was a member attended as a body, also visiting brethren from Stirling and West Huntingdon. At the close of the service the following address was read by Pte. Miller Carl.

To the parents, grandparents, the brother and sister of our departed hero, greetings.

Dear Friends:—We, the members of the Loyal Orange Association of Holloway, have assembled as a body to-day to express to you our sincere and heartfelt sympathy. We desire to be present not as visitors but as friends and mourners.

We cannot but rejoice greatly and are justly proud of the fact that another member of our noble Order has gallantly trodden the hard and glorious pathway of service and suffering and heroic achievement, even unto death. We are devoutly thankful to Almighty God for the undaunted spirit that prompted your son to such single-minded, country-loving, self-sacrificing, self-sacrificing deeds of glory, deeds which have stirred our hearts with a new inspiration to better and holier living, and have brought home to us the honour of having one so true, even for a brief period, a member with us, in good standing.

May you all find some what of comfort in the assurance, that by the blessing of a merciful and all-wise and an Almighty God, this young and heroic spirit shall live again in our lives and the lives of others made better by his supreme sacrifice.

We are very conscious of the loss of a life so young and so full of promise to our Order, to Church and the Community and especially to his home, the loss is irreparable. Let us remind you dear friends, of the fact which is no doubt best known by yourselves, that Seymour has left behind him a clear and an honourable record as a citizen and a soldier. He was a splendid type of those honest sons of industry from Canada and from all parts of the Empire to whom the call of a peaceful promising and inviting business future, was as nothing accompanied with that of King and Country, men who have laid aside the implements of a peaceful pursuit in order to seize the sword of Justice.

May we remind you again that men do not live in years but in deeds, in thoughts not in breathe, in feelings not in figures was a dial, we count time by heart throbs, he lives next who thinks most, feels the noblest, sees the best and while Seymour had comparatively a brief military career, it was not without standing an honourable career reverting as many of our brave men have, from the officers rank to that of a private in order that he might more speedily enter the ranks of 'ose great and splendid veterans, who at Ypres, Poel, Cappelle, St. Julian, Festubert, Givenchy, Langemark and at Vimy Ridge have covered themselves with glory and have won undying fame for the name of Canada, the praise and increasing confidence of our Allies. We can hardly realize how from time to time Canada has been thrilled by tidings of their achievements. They have heartily thanked by the president of the French Republic, they have been warmly praised by General Joffre and Sir Douglas Haig, by Lieut. General Alderson, by Sir John French as well as by his Majesty King George V. All have spoken in terms of highest praise of our Canadian troops, we are well assured that among these splendid men Seymour played a conspicuous and an honourable part, how honorable and how valuable. Eternity alone shall reveal.

In the meantime we wish, humbly and publicly to acknowledge the debt of gratitude we feel, but which we can never fully repay, in as much as this great and heroic part was for us and on our behalf.

With you dear friends, we mourn the loss, this day, of a Brother and a son, a hero and a soldier, a Britain and a Man, surely such a price so freely given is clear evidence of a strong faith in the justice of our cause. Let us therefore, to-day, as in thought we gather around his grave 'Somewhere in France' each one dropping in the flower of a grateful thought, and having a share in that last rite until the resurrection morning, and then turning away with a tear in our eyes and a new fire in our hearts. Let us pledge ourselves brethren that we will until all our forces in one grand endeavour, to fight on through this unequalled destiny-determining national crisis until the honour of England, the rights of the weak and the flag of Freedom, Justice and Liberty have been vindicated before the world. Let us again assure you all our sympathy and of our prayers that you may be comforted and sustained in this your day of sorrow.

Signed on behalf of the Loyal Orange Lodge at Holloway, Dec. 2, 1917.

Mrs. HIRSHMAN ASHLEY,
Holloway, Ontario

Dear Friend:—Before this letter reaches you the sad news of the death of your son, Pte. W. S. S. Ashley, 1098077 of the 21st. Canadians will probably have been intimate to you. He died of wounds, shall wound in right thigh at 1.50 a.m. on the 7th inst. at this No. 17 C. C. S. and was buried in a cemetery near. By writing to the Director of Graves Registration and Enquiries, War Office, Winchester House, St. James Square, London, S. W. you can get to know the location of the cemetery and also obtain, free of cost, a photograph of the grave.

I pray that in your loss and sorrow you may be comforted of God our Heavenly Father and may find in him your refuge and strength and present help in trouble. With deep sympathy.

Yours sincerely

Letter from Nurse Littlejohn

17th. Casualty Clearing Station, British Exped. Forces, France,
November 7, 1917.

Dear Mrs. Ashley:—

I hardly know how to begin to write the very sad news I have to give you.

Your boy Pte. W. S. S. Ashley was very badly wounded on the 3rd, and brought into this hospital the same day. He was suffering from Compound fracture of Femur and had lost a lot of blood, his condition was very bad, he was operated on and everything that was possible was done for him but nothing could have saved him. He died at 1.50 a.m. November 7, 1917. I cannot tell you how sorry I am for you, your boy was one of the best patients I have ever nursed, he was so grateful for all that was done for him, I was with him when he died, and a little before the end he asked me if I would write to you as he was sure you would worry about him, he also spoke about his brother, who is also in France but I could not find out what part he is in or I should have tried to get him to pay a visit here to see his brother.

Now dear Mrs. Ashley please forgive me for writing in this blunt manner, but I can tell you I would rather do hours of hard work than write a letter giving such sad news, oh how I wish this terrible war was over, I have been nursing the wounded since October 1914 and I am quite sure the sisters could not continue to work if it was not that the boys were so brave, they are simply wonderful. Good bye, I hope your other boy will return safely to Canada, try not to grieve too much.

Yours very sincerely
Catherine Littlejohn, Sister

FRANKFORD

Rev. Wm. Higgs of Millbrook was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Latta on Tuesday.

The regular meeting of the Ladies Aid was held at the home of Mrs. J. B. Lowery on Thursday afternoon.

The citizens of Frankford turned on on Friday afternoon with decorated cars and cutters to welcome home Lieut. Wm. Lowery. He arrived on the 3 p.m. train having come from the Convalescent Hospital, Toronto. We are all well, some him after his thrilling adventures on the front lines in France. He expects to remain with his parents through this Christmas season.

Mrs. Fred Harrison has returned home after spending a month with friends in Toronto.

The services were held as usual in the different Churches on Sunday but owing to the extreme cold they were not as well attended as usual.

On Friday night a number of the town people entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. Tice and gave their daughter and husband, Mr. and Mrs. Lou Gascement a shower. They were married very quietly a few months ago and went west right after their marriage, but on their return a few days ago they were remembered by their friends.

Mrs. Breakel has returned home after visiting friends in Queensboro, her former home.

Monday being election day there was a large crowd in town and the merchants were kept busy.

The funeral of Mr. Minard Faul of the 5th. Con. of Stirling, was held in the Methodist Church on Tuesday afternoon. Rev. Knox officiating. He was a member of the L. O. L. of Frankford under whose auspices he was buried. He had been ailing for a long time, the widow and sons have the sympathy of the community in their sorrow and bereavement.

Mrs. W. W. Carter received a message Monday of the death of her mother, Mrs. Carter of Toronto. She had only been home a short time from there having been at the sick bed when the sad news reached her of her death.

Christmas Seals

By CLARISSA MACKIE

used to help the wounded soldiers.

And she had not sold one single, solitary stamp of her twenty-five!

How she had trudged around from door to door, only to meet the same kind smile and shake of the head!

"I ought to be able to sell them outside my home, mother, dear," she said.

"That would be real work,"

Mrs. Wells sighed and smiled. She couldn't very well afford to buy even the twenty-five stamps that Amy wanted to sell, for every penny was needed in that little household. Mr. Wells had died a year or two before, and Amy's mother had to sew for a living. She was very busy, for she was trying to finish some work so as to receive the money in time to buy something for Christmas.

"Kiss me, little daughter," Mrs. Wells said, with a smile, "and then carry this dress up to Miss Granger on the hill."

The Grangers lived in a big house at the top of the hill. It was quite the largest house in Little River, and the three ladies lived there alone with two servants. They were Miss Belle Granger, Miss Lucy and Miss Beth. They were not very young, but they were very kind and sweet.

The maid admitted Amy to the front hall, all warm and glowing from a great fire on the hearth.

"How do you do, Amy? Wouldn't you like one of these little mince

"I hope you will have a happy Christmas," Miss Lucy said.

tarts?" And there was Miss Beth Granger with a plate of mince tarts.

"Oh, thank you!" gasped Amy as she took one.

"Wait a moment and Annie will wrap it in a paper napkin so you can carry it home," said Miss Beth as she pressed a button for the maid. But when Annie came with the paper napkin, which was all gay with holly and Christmas bells, Miss Ruth put all the mince tarts in it and gave it to Amy.

"Oh, thank you so much!" repeated Amy, thinking how her mother would enjoy the tarts. "Mother sent the dress."

"My sister is trying it on," said Miss Beth. "Wait a moment, Amy, and I will get the money for you."

She had just disappeared when Miss Lucy Granger came bustling through the hall. "I wonder if you would mail these little packages for me, Amy?" she said. "I am so provoked because I have used up my Christmas seals."

"Of course I will mail the packages," Miss Lucy said. "I-I have some Christmas seals if you would like them."

"You have? How very fortunate!"

Amy told her about the seals and how she had been unable to sell even one of them. To her great joy Miss Lucy bought the whole twenty-five and put the money in Amy's pocketbook, together with a bright silver quarter for herself. "I hope you will have a very happy Christmas, dear," Miss Lucy said.

The next day Amy took the Red Cross money to her teacher, and Miss Smith told her she had done very well. Early Christmas morning the Granger auto car stopped before the Wells door, and the chauffeur brought in a great basket for Mrs. Wells. There was a new dress for Amy, with a warm cloak for her mother, besides a cunning doll. The bottom of the basket was filled with good things to eat.

"My Christmas week began with tears," laughed Amy as bright drops fell on her round cheeks, "and it is ending in tears too!"

"Tears of happiness, darling," said her mother.

Don't Complain

The world is full of complainers. Some complain of ill health, many of ill fortune and most of all of ill luck.

A pound of pluck is worth a ton of luck. It is not a perfect world. Who is well every day throughout the year without an ache, a pain or a cough?

Who is perfect in physique, in temper, in deed and word and conscience?

What man or woman is without a weakness or reason at times for misgivings or cause at times for repentance?

It is a world of follies, fads and fancies. If we were all perfect the preachers would be needless. Heaven would be on earth.

There is comfort in the thought that the striking differences we find among men and women make the world attractive. If all were alike the monotony would be unbearable.

Think of these things when you feel like repining over ill health, ill fortune, ill treatment or ill luck.

Misery loves company, and there are always "others."—John A. Slesinger in Leslie's.

Pride a Strange Thing.

Pride is a strange thing. For instance, a man would much rather be seen by the younger and prettier set of neighbor women filling up the gas-line tank than emptying the garbage, though the latter act is really much more commendable in that he just does it to help his poor, hardworking wife that much.

Canadians Not Quitters

Writing to his aunt, Annie Kehoe, of 1155 King street west, Corp. S. J. Welsh formerly of Toronto, and now in France says:—

"We are still having lots of rain and talk about mud, its hard to tell what we are at night when we get finished our day's work, mud from head to foot. This is an awful war, and I guess you often think that we wished we were back home again. Well we do but remember we would rather be here ten years than to have these—Huns harm a hair on our dear ones at home."

"You people at home can't imagine the brutality of the Huns the way they tortured the poor women and children of Belgium, but worst of all, dropping bombs on our hospitals, killing our poor wounded and helpless soldiers and our faithful nurses, who have fought night and day to save the lives of our soldiers boys. So until we have the Huns crushed and ground down so low in the ground that he can never rise, we don't wait 'peace'."

"I can't understand why the young fellows at home who have a spark of manhood can sit at home and allow so many things to happen when they know how hard we fellows over here are fighting and enduring hardships to stop it. I might be a misfit, but thank God I am made of the right stuff, and am here in Flanders doing my bit."

"Well aunt, I guess you wonder what makes me write a letter like this. Well, I have just been reading a paper from home, and I see the way they are fighting against conscription, and it makes me so mad I can't help it."

Referring to his expression, "I might be a misfit," the explanation of this is that this young man met with an accident when a child and lost the sight of one eye. In spite of this, he saw his duty clearly and was bound to enlist, possible. After being rejected seven times he was successful in joining the 20th Battalion, was later transferred to Exhibition camp to the 25th Battalion and went overseas with them on March 22nd, 1917. He is twenty-one years of age.

A younger brother enlisted with the 83rd Battalion and has been in France since June, 1916. He was wounded in the battle of Soume, was discharged from the hospital in England in February, 1917, and has been doing his second bit in France since that time.

Corp. S. J. Welsh is a nephew of Mr. Edward Welsh and Miss Jennie Welsh of town.

VINOL MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG

Positive—Convincing Proof

We publish the formula of Vinol to prove convincingly that it has the power to create strength.

It Cod Liver and Beef Peptides, Iron and Manganese Peptides, Iron and Manganese Citrate, Lime and Soda Glycophosphates, Caeaser.

Any woman who buys a bottle of Vinol for a weak, run-down, nervous condition and finds after giving it a fair trial it did not help her, will have her money returned.

You see, there is no guess work about Vinol. Its formula proves there is nothing like it for all weak, run-down, overworked, nervous men and women and for feeble old people and delicate children. Try it once and be convinced.

TENERIFFE.

Spanish Possession Has Interesting History.

The most striking feature of Tenerife is, of course, its famous peak. It is one of the great landmarks in these seas, and the traveller who approaches the island from Madeira some 300 miles away to the north is not long out of Pancha before he catches sight of the great mountain rising slowly out of the water. And so it may continue to rise all day, if the weather is clear, ever gathering to itself more detail, until, as his boat casts anchor off the mole at Santa Cruz, the peak towers above him more than 12,000 feet. It gives one the impression that all of the island must be mountain, and the impression is not far astray, for, with its supports and spurs, the Pico de Teide, as the Spaniards call it, does indeed occupy nearly two-thirds of Tenerife. Its summit, on a clear day, is one of the great vantage grounds of the world. All the islands of the archipelago are visible from it, and the horizon is 140 miles away.

The island, of course, belongs to Spain, and, like most other Spanish possessions, has a long and interesting history. The story of Tenerife is concerned largely with tales of great adventure on the high seas; of great enterprises, carried out by great adventurers, and afterwards "regularized" by the intervention of princes. Thus, although its existence was known for many centuries before his time, the island was officially discovered early in the fourteenth century

Minard's Liniment Co., Limited.

Gentlemen,—My daughter, 13 years old, was thrown from a sleigh and injured her elbow so badly it remained stiff and very painful for three years. Four bottles of MINARD'S LINIMENT completely cured her and she has not been troubled for two years.

Yours truly,
J. B. LIVESQUE.
St. Joseph, P. O., 18th Aug., 1900.

by Jean de Bethencourt, a Norman, who gave up his title to the King of Spain. Don Spauld, however, held their title loosely, and evidently thought little of their possession, for when next Tenerife came into prominence it was in the possession of Henry the Navigator of Portugal, who made it and the adjoining islands a kind of base for his explorations in all directions. In the year 1478, however, the Spaniards determined to regain their lost possession, and by the end of the century they had succeeded in completely conquering the original inhabitants, and were masters of the whole archipelago. They have remained in possession of it ever since, and, to-day, the island is one of the most enlightened provinces of Spain. This is especially true, perhaps, of Tenerife, which, only the other day, registered its views on the war in no uncertain way, when an immense mass meeting at Santa Cruz passed a resolution sympathizing with the Allies, and demanding that Spain should place herself on the side of the Entente powers.

Santa Cruz, indeed, has had some notable connection with the world's war. It was bombarded by the British fleet in 1697, on the memorable occasion when Admiral Byrd attacked the Plate fleet in the harbor of Santa Cruz, and demolished all the land defences in his "incredible attack." It was bombarded again by Nelson in 1797, and although the town is defended by its forts, the ancient batteries still remain. Santa Cruz is, indeed, in many ways, reminiscent of a hundred years ago. It has taken creditable advantage of "modern improvements" but anyone who visits Santa Cruz, with its low, flat-roofed houses and its plastered, red-tiled churches, is surely reminded of the cities of Spain in that country, dating as they do from much the same period. In California, however, Spanish influence speaks of something that has been left high and dry and has no longer any vital connection with the present. In Santa Cruz de Tenerife, however, Spanish influence is much alive, and very much a matter of every day—Christian Science Monitor.

Painting a Battleship.

One hundred tons of paint, costing approximately $25,000, represents the initial color requirements for a new battleship. The annual upkeep cost may exceed this sum, since it is the custom to repaint the different parts of a modern war vessel every three or six months. This would indicate an annual paint protection outlay of nearly $1,000,000 for the navy. If to this sum is added the cost of painting the thousands of lake boats, freighters, river steamers and pleasure craft some conception may be had of the importance of marine painting.

Among the most important naval paints are those which are applied to protect the submerged parts of the hulls from corrosion or fouling by barnacles. The word barnacle is the popular name for that form of marine crustacea which consists of a clam-like body lodged in a shell that is often formed in a series of rings or plates. They adhere with great tenacity. Without anti-fouling plants the speed of vessels would be greatly retarded by the piling up of a thick incrustation of barnacles and attached sea grass.—Boston Herald.

A GRAND MEDICINE FOR LITTLE ONES

Baby's Own Tablets are a grand medicine for little ones. They are a mild, but thorough laxative; are absolutely safe; easy to give and never fail to cure any of the minor ills of little ones. Concerning them, Mrs. James S. Hasty, Cleveland Road, N.B., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets and have found them perfectly satisfactory for my little one." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SASH WINDOWS.

Probably a Dutch Invention of the Seventeenth Century.

The history of sash windows is somewhat obscure, but the probability is that they were a Dutch invention and that they were introduced into England soon after the revolution of 1688. The derivation of the word "sash" in this sense is the Dutch "sasz," a sluice—old English "sasse." In Queen Anne's reign they were yet so comparatively unimportant as to be mentioned as a special feature of houses that were advertised as "to let." In the Tatler, for instance, May 27-30, 1710, there is this advertisement: "To be let, in Devonshire Square, near Bishopsgate, a very good Brick House of 10 rooms of a Floor, and a good Bath, with very good light and dark closets, the whole house being well wainscoted and sashed with 30 Sash Lights."

From England they passed into France, where the first to put them up was Marshal de Lorge, at his new house at Montmartre. Speaking of "Journey to Paris," "We had a good fortune here to find the marshal himself. He showed us his great sash windows, how easily they might be lifted up and down and stood at any height, which contrivance, he said, he had out of England."—London Standard.

CARE OF YOUR WATCH.

Caution Should Be Expected in Method and Time of Winding.

Do you know how to care for your watch properly? Of course you know that you don't expect it to keep time or even to run if you drop it on a cement sidewalk or tumble out of a canoe with your watch in your pocket.

But there are many finer details of care necessary if you are going to get the best results from your chronometer, says the Brooklyn Eagle. Uncle Sam, through his bureau of standards, has investigated the matter and has prepared a bulletin of instructions for the benefit of watch owners. He issues the ordinary warnings, advising you never to open the back of the watch, except by the movement, unless it is absolutely necessary; not to let your watch become magnetized by proximity to electrical apparatus; to replace broken crystals at once, etc.

In regard to the importance of winding your watch regularly, the bulletin says:

"Even the delay of an hour in the time of winding may cause considerable variation in the rate in some instances. The winding should not be done feebly, but steadily, and not too rapidly, and its frequency should be approached carefully to avoid injury to the spring or winding mechanism. It is generally regarded as slightly better to wind the watch in the morning, than at night, as the large variations in the balance under the tight spring will probably give more uniform results with the movements and jar of the watch during the day than if the balance wheel were subjected to the lesser tension twelve hours after winding. The difference is, however, not so important as the regular winding of

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE'S ADVICE TO A YOUNG MAN LEAVING FOR AMERICA

"I am now about to depart for the Western Hemisphere, and I have to bid you adieu. A new career is opened before me, and I hope to find my name with new and great events and with the realization of great ideas of the republic, you to unite yourself once more with a people, at which I believe I shall find the same noble numbers of the first age of Rome and the luxury of her decline; where the taste, the sensibility and the science of Athens, with her factions, and the value of Sparta without her discipline. As a citizen of the world, I would address your country in the following language: Every man and every nation is ambitious and ambitious grows with power, as the blaze of a vertical sun in mid-noon. Cherish, therefore, a national strength, strengthen your political institutions; remember that armies and navies are of the same use in the world as the police of London or Paris, and soldiers are not made like fatted calves in a minute, cultivated under the sun of your empire will be like a colony of gold fallen on the earth, broken up in pieces, and the prey of foreign and domestic barons. If you are wise, you will be ready to be permanent, and perhaps Washington will be hailed as the founder of a glorious and happy empire when the cause of Bonaparte shall be obscured by succeeding revolutions." (Copyrighted.)

It is to be seen that our political institutions are such that the party in power will provide sufficient men for the necessary relief to our boys in the front, and that they will aim to keep this great heritage of the past from falling into the hands of a few. Therefore, it is our duty to see that the class of men whom we elect as politicians are the class of men who will hold sacred above all other things their duty to the flower of our manhood, who are now fighting the battles of democracy in the trenches of Flanders.

VARIOUS TYPES OF AIRCRAFT IN BATTLE

As this is a war of scientific surprises and may later be won in the quiet laboratory of a professor of chemistry, it is only natural that the airplane should be constantly changed in design and equipment as either side developed improvements that might be copied.

Far from being the haphazard machine, these flying machines are now being developed into a separate branch of military science.

THREE CLASSES OF PLANES.

To begin with the planes used by the Allies at present may be divided into three classes: About 20 per cent. of the service planes are the very fast aviators de chasse, or pursuit machines used exclusively for fighting; 30 per cent. are the slower types used for directing artillery fire, for aerial photography and scouting in connection with infantry and cavalry operations; 50 per cent. are the slower and larger machines used for bombing.

Of course, these proportions vary continually as developments require. At the present time, with the chances of air raid becoming more extensive, an increase in the number of bombing machines may be expected. The type of observation craft, a greater number of the pursuit machines will be required.

It is quite possible, however, that the observation, or scout machines, will be so developed that it will be able to mount guns of sufficient caliber and size to protect itself. To prove economical, for it takes from four to six pursuit machines to protect the artillery spotters and photography planes. With sufficient artillery—three or four guns and gunners—the observation planes will be able to protect themselves and to attend to the special mission of gathering information and taking photographs. As this would release four or six pursuit machines the attention of designers is being directed to the construction of larger machines.

The various types of aeroplanes and their armament follow:

1. The "Spad," one-passenger; speed, 200-210 kilometers per hour; a Vickers or Lewis machine gun synchronized to shoot through the propeller.
2. The "Nieuport," one-passenger; speed, 150 kilometers per hour; same armament.
3. The "Avro," one or two-passenger; one or two guns.

Avions types "Corps d'arme" used for photography and spotting artillery fire:

1. The "Caudron," G-4, pilot and observer.
2. "Caudron," G-6, two-passenger, two machine guns, one forward, one in rear.
3. "Dorand," A-R, two-passenger; 1 Vickers gun forward; 2 Lewis guns in rear.
4. "Farman," two-passenger; two Lewis guns in rear.
5. "Caudron," R-4, three-passenger; two Lewis guns forward in turrets; two Lewis guns in rear.
6. "Lefort," two Lewis guns in turrets forward; two in rear.
7. "Moisant," three-passenger; two Vickers guns forward in turrets; two Lewis guns in rear.

Daylight bombing planes:

1. Sopwith, one-passenger; 12 bombs; one Vickers gun.
2. Sopwith biplane; two-passenger;

one Vickers gun forward; one Lewis gun in rear.

For night bombing raids:

1. Volsin-Plugot; two-passenger; two Vickers guns forward about 45 degrees through propeller.
2. Bristol-McClellan; two-passenger; same armament.
3. Farman; two-passenger; one Lewis gun forward.

GERMANY'S COMBAT MACHINES.

On the side of the Germans, the combat machines are the Ago and the Fokker, the Halberstadt, the Roland, the Albatross II.

The problem of the air comes down to a question of high speed in flying, a high factor of safety and a low landing speed. The trend of modern design is toward the triplane because that type gives these factors with additional lifting power.

The very great stresses caused by sudden changes in direction have been the reason for the collapse of many machines in action before the bullets of the enemy had reached the planes at all.

The sudden change of direction in the loops, the side slide and the tail dives used by an aviator to gain the valuable position for which he manoeuvres puts speed at a premium, and in many cases the factor of safety was cut down almost to zero.

It is this new type of combat in air that has bred the new generation of Eagles. The tactics may be divided into three probable classes of combats.

First—Air duels of fighting machines, where the object to be gained is to clear the sky of enemy fighters.

Second—Air duels between armed bombing machines, photographing machines or spotting machines.

Third—Air duels between large armed aeroplanes.

Fourth—Fighting in formation.

CLEARING THE SKY.

The first class of combats are settled by the aviator, being told to clear the sky of enemy airmen, proceeds to a speedy machine to climb as high as he can and remain up until he sights an enemy plane. Then he dives at it, firing as he drops. If he should not bring the enemy down at this plunge, the attacker must land between his own lines and try again by climbing. It would be fatal for him to try to climb again before landing, as his adversary would then have the position against him, and would swoop like a hawk and destroy him.

Both Macdonald and Boelcke, the famous German flyer, started this method of attack, and brought down many allied machines before these tactics were analyzed. (The method, of course, is good only over one's own lines, despite the fact that all air efforts are made to prevent hostile machines crossing one's line.)

With a very speedy climbing machine and an expert flyer it would be possible to follow the rule laid down by Major Rees, of the British Royal Flying Corps, which was to dive as before, but unless an enemy was "out," to loop and start again to climb before the adverse plane has chance to take advantage of the position.

Against slow, heavy-armed observation planes the avion de chasse have a harder time, owing to the large armament of these other planes. The same dive is attempted, but it will this time be met with the fire of one or more guns.

The duels between heavy planes become more a question of marksmanship and navigation. The battle goes to the better handled plane or to the one with the better gunners aboard.

Formation fighting is the latest development in air fighting. In this class of battle the planes are manoeuvred as a fleet might be, and these mobile chasers move as a solid squadron from point to point.

DUELS BETWEEN HEAVY PLANES.

In the battle, of course, there is a splitting into individual duels and an ability to handle one's craft means life. If a cavalryman's horse is his best weapon, the airplane is his. Out doubt the best weapon of the Eagle of to-day.

Just as a horse must be groomed and kept up, the machines are constantly overhauled in camp. Usually two mechanic experts in their lines are assigned to each plane, so that there is a personal loyalty established between the flyer and the mechanics in whose hands his life is placed.

In the day's work the mechanic has the same pride in the performance of his pilot as the men of a stable would in the gallant running of a thoroughbred.

But personal gallantry, voyages into the sun and all the medieval romance of the air fights depends on materials and machine. The man and the machine are the details of machine shops.

Thus it is that everywhere there is a little or a grinding machine there is a shop helping to turn out one thousand planes a month.

SCOURING SOAPS.

Some Handy Recipes for the Housewife.

A good scouring soap can be made at home at practically no cost at all, while it will be found far superior to many of the scouring soaps sold in the stores.

Save all the ends of soap left in kitchen, laundry and bathroom until a fair quantity is accumulated. Melt these in hot water to the consistency of a soft jelly and then add an equal quantity of fine, clean sand or powdered pumice stone. Pour off into anything convenient to harden. This soap may be used for the usual household scouring, but should not be applied to paint, because it may scratch or otherwise destroy it. This does not apply to painted floors. It is excellent for kitchen tables and floors, where spots of grease are apt to fall.

Hits of soap melted into a jelly and mixed with fuller's earth makes a mild scouring soap for removing stains from light colored garments and carpets.

GETTING the SPIRIT

ROSE ANN shook her head vigorously and surreptitiously drew her handkerchief from the folds of her pet-top skirt. Not surreptitiously enough, however, to escape the eagle eye of her co-partner in the notions at the Arcade Dry Goods Emporium.

"Why the dew drops, sweet Rosie?" nagged Loretta of the skinkley hazel eyes and smooth Auburn braids above her too perfectly arched brows.

"Oh, it's no use, Loretta. Here it is Wednesday, only one more day to shop, and I've got no more Christmas spirit than a burned out firecracker. What's ailing me? I've done without lunch the last week, trying to get it. Not a tingle down my spine, not a thrill when I see an express wagon. I've shopped my usual nickel's worth when the crowds were thickest, and I've done everything but write a letter to Santa Claus. It might as well be Decoration Day for all the excitement I can gather."

"Forget it, Rose Ann," said Loretta, shifting her Spearpoint from bicuspid to molar somewhere in the rear. "Oh," she added, seeing Rose Ann's hopeless expression, "go out and feel a pine or something. Get up a carreta, talk the weather man out of a snowflake. Hurry up, let's cover up these counters and beat it. There's the gong, and I've got a lead-pipe cinch on a table de hoty dinner with Mr. Fister to-night."

With leaden hands Rose Ann helped the nimble-fingered Loretta spread the drab gray covers over the notions. If one only worked in anything but notions at Christmastime. Nobody bought 'em; if they did, one could never guess what they might be making. In ribbons or laces one might get lots of new ideas, and even suggest a few to the interested buyer. But supporters and hooks and eyes, and hairpins and tape! Nothing red but elastic; nothing Christ-masy but the dusty red bells, and artificial holly festooned above the tables.

In the tiny cloak room Loretta adjusted her lace veil over a green togue, and fastened her flowing jabot with a rhinestone bar pin.

"Sorry I can't wait, Rose Ann. But I promised Mr. Fister I'd meet him at six sharp. Anyway, I think the new shoe department head would cherish a walk home with you. Good-night."

With which parting shot Loretta waltzed out of the room on her way to a real dinner. Rose Ann pulled her sailor down over her brown curls with trembling hands. How did Loretta know the new head man in shoes had even looked at her? 'Twas true, he had spoken to her once or twice, and he sometimes came down on the same car with her, but as to his attentions warranting an open jibe from Loretta—never! With head held high she walked from the store with eyes to the front. She might have saved herself the trouble, for the new "poor-but-honest" as Loretta had dubbed him, was enroute home.

For blocks Rose Ann walked, darting between package-laden pedestrians, pressing her nose to shop windows, even venturing into some particularly gay places in quest of her earnestly sought Christmas spirit. Arrived home, she explained her lateness to her mother by pleading a headache, and the need of fresh air and a walk.

Long after her mother was asleep Rose Ann addressed her Christmas cards and cut tissue paper for her simple little gifts. Finally she threw down the scissors; her fingers wouldn't tickle, her gifts all looked commonplace.

She dumped the lot into the box couch and dropped off to sleep, with a troubled heart. Was she growing old at twenty-three? No, that couldn't be it—people at seventy-five still had Christmas spirit when they were supposed to. Was she ill? No, not when she could eat seven hot rolls for dinner.

The next morning found her no nearer a solution. But she was a normal girl, and she loved her mother dearly, and the sun was shining. So for the time she smiled and was happy. But once in the whirl of shoppers she was again disturbed at the lethargic manner in which she executed sharp orders; at her absolute lack of spirit.

She could not bring herself to look at the "poor-but-honest." She could not let him see that she was calm and spiritless at this time of all the year. Again she forfeited her lunch to dash out into the cold, stinging air; to mingle with the gay, hurried throngs. But she came back at one-thirty a little disheveled, with one or two last-minute gifts, and—no spirit.

The afternoon seemed eons long. When at seven o'clock the last shift came on for the Christmas eve rush, Rose Ann took off her black apron reluctantly. As she stooped to recover her pencil, Loretta remarked in no unkindly tone, "Even lookin' on the floor for your spirit, me little Rosie? Say, take a little more stock in things level with your eyes, and don't intensify so on the spirit, up or down! You'll find it sure as soon as you stop lookin' for it. Merry Christmas, Rose Ann, G'night."

Rose Ann hurried home to help her mother assemble some remembrances for the washwoman's children. The two of them made popcorn balls, and ginger-bread men with funny faces; filled stockings with candy and trinkets, and wrote rhymes for each child's Mother Goose book. Rose Ann's eyes glistened and her hair tumbled in riotous curls on her temples. At length they finished the baskets of childish, sweet gifts for the kiddies, and Rose Ann opened the box couch and brought forth her unwrapped gifts. Her heart dragged; her mouth drooped. For fear her mother would notice her change of humor, she snatched up a sweater and ran onto the back porch steps. For a while she sat with chin in hand, glancing first into one lighted window and then another across the alleyway.

Suddenly she jumped up, catching the post, strained her eyes across the darkness into a room in the opposite house. She brushed her hand across her forehead, and looked again. There in his second floor room stood the "poor-but-honest," struggling with an awkward package on a table. He tried first one way and then another, then gave it up, clutching his hair, and tangling yards of red ribbon in his despair.

Rose Ann had a wild moment of indecision. Then, dashing into the house, she pretended a mysterious errand to the side of the street, then gave it up, clutching his hair, and tangling yards of red ribbon in his despair.

"Er—well—oh," gasped Rose Ann, "I didn't know you lived here until I saw you from my back steps, and somehow, all of a sudden, I just had to come show you how to tie up that package. And I'm sorry—that I haven't looked at you, and—oh, let's go fix up the Christmas package."

And then the "poor-but-honest," because he wasn't poor in the real sense, and because he was very honest, did not mind matters. He let her tie up the package very carefully, because next morning it was to be for her. And he went home with her through the still cold night, and let her tell him how she had suddenly "gotten the spirit," by wanting to help somebody else. "That's the whole secret," she said happily. "I was too intent on doing things for myself. To-night I had a real thrill, when I was helping mother fix the poor kiddies' baskets. Then when I came to my own thought—over gifts, my heart sank again, and I had to go out and make myself get over it. Then I saw you struggling over that maze of ribbon, and the spirit came over me in a flood; and—"

They reached the steps. He took her face between his hands.

"Was it only the holiday spirit, Rose Ann, my dearest?"

Her radiant eyes answered his question or her lips could frame a reply.

In the distance the Christmas carolers were singing that sweetest of Christmas songs: "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear."

"It is addressed to Master Donald and Master Charlie, and I found it in the drawing-room grate, ma'am. It looked just as if it had fallen down the chimney," said Ellen.

"What a peculiar place for a letter! Do let me see who it's from. Shall I read it out to you, boys?" asked his mother.

"Yes, please, mummy. I expect it is from Santa Claus. I dare say he dropped it down the chimney in passing," said Donald.

Mother and father smiled at this suggestion, whilst Uncle Bob grinned broadly.

"Why, it is from Santa Claus, as you said," remarked Mrs. Kennedy, looking very surprised. He writes:

"Dear Donald and Charlie.—A line in great haste to say that I have just found I have made a mistake about the things I put in your stockings last night. I did not know before which of you had settled to be the sailor and which the soldier, or I should have given the presents differently. Now I know, and, to make up, please look in the porch, and the box of soldiers you will find there is for the boy who had the motor boat, and the box of sailors for the boy to whom I gave the cannon. I hope this will please you both. I should have left the soldiers and sailors in your bedroom, but it is nearly light as I write this, and I am of a nervous disposition, and should not like you to see me, as I am so shy.

"Your loving friend,
"Santa Claus."

"How thoughtful of Santa Claus to write!" said Mrs. Kennedy. "I suppose Donald has the motor boat, so will get the box of soldiers; and Charlie has the cannon, so will have the sailors."

"No; I have got the motor boat," said Charlie. "And Donald has the cannon."

Donald did not say anything, but he looked very, very solemn.

"Oh, why did I change my motor boat for the cannon?" he thought.

He looked even more serious still when the parcels in the porch were opened, for the box of soldiers was the most splendid one he had ever seen. There were rows and rows of horse and foot soldiers, with shining swords and brightly-painted coats. The sailors were very nice, but nothing came up to soldiers in Donald's eyes.

"I think there has been some mistake," said Uncle Bob, noticing the piteous expression on his nephew's face. "I had a private talk with Santa Claus, and told him particularly that you were to be the gallant soldier of the Kennedy family, and Charlie the sailor boy. There has been a mistake somewhere, I am sure."

As the hours of Christmas Day went by the Kennedy children, with happy, contented faces, played with their new toys—all but Donald, and he looked more and more solemn.

III.

It was Christmas night, Donald and Charlie were in bed. Charlie was asleep, but Donald lay awake. Presently manly footsteps passed the half-open door.

Uncle, uncle—is that you?" called Donald.

"Yes; why aren't you asleep, young man?"

"I can't sleep; I am worried, uncle. Please sit on my bed, quite close to me. I want to confide in you."

Uncle Bob smiled in the dark.

"Speak on," he said.

"Uncle, you seem to know more about Santa Claus than the rest of us; you are friends with him, aren't you?"

"Yes; Santa Claus and I make little plans together sometimes. What is the matter?"

"Well, it is like this. I thought that Santa Claus had made a mistake when I saw the motor boat in my stocking and the cannon in Charlie's, so I thought I'd put the mistake right. If I had left them as they were, I should have had the soldiers; and I do want them."

"I thought something odd had happened," said Uncle Bob. "Another time you must leave Santa Claus to rectify his own mistakes. I am sorry about the soldiers, but you must be content with the sailors."

"I am awake," came from the other bed. "Donald can have the soldiers. I'd really rather have the sailors, but I did not like to say so," said Charlie.

So Donald had the soldiers and Charlie the sailors, and everyone was pleased.

And Donald has made up his mind not to interfere with Santa Claus' plans another Christmas.

FOR THE CHRISTMAS TREE

Make your Christmas tree ornaments.

Get ready plenty of glittering things.

String popcorn, cranberries and gift paper balls.

On five-pointed stars of cardboard, and cover with gift paper.

Make tiny paper dolls and dress them like fairies to hang on the tree.

Use white popcorn freely on the tree; with pin attach a single piece of popcorn to the tip of each branch or twig. It takes a little time, but repays the effort, giving the tree a beautiful snow-rusted appearance.

Little peanut dolls dressed in gay colors make good tree ornaments.

Use yellow tarlatan or netting to make small bags and fill the bags with popcorn.

Pink and white popcorn, wired in different shapes, is very nice for the Christmas tree.

A Realistic Picture.

A still life by Jan van Huysen in the museum at The Hague was injured, but it is believed that the perpetrator was neither thief nor vandal. The picture represents a basket of fruit on which a number of insects have gathered. On a pale yellow apple, which is the centerpiece in the cluster of fruit, is a large fly, painted so true to nature, the officials of the gallery say, that the canvas was injured by some one who endeavored to "shoo" it and brought his cane too close to the canvas. "A tribute to the painter's genius," says the letter recording the fact, "for which the work had to suffer."

Celebrating the Day Anciently and Now

On Christmas eve the bells were rung. That only night in all the year. The daisies donned her kiddie shoes. The hall was dressed with holly green. Forth to the wood did merry men go. To gather in the mistletoe. Then opened wide the baron's hall To vassal, tenant, serf and all. Power laid his rod of rule aside, And Ceremony doffed his pride. The hair, with roses in his shoes, That night might village partner choose.

So sang Sir Walter Scott of the glories of Christmas eve, and of Christmas itself. And the world yields to him the palm for the best practical description of the season's dear delights.

Christmas with us is a day of giving and receiving, of good cheer and good feeling, and essentially it is one of religious significance. Hence it will sound strange to many to be told that a number of our Christmas customs come down to us from pagan times. Yet such is the fact. Traces of some heathen rites are found in England as well as here, and the cause of their survival lies deeper than theology. When the mother country, so called, was converted to Christianity the priests found her people wedded to many old customs. Not all of these were what they would have had them, but they had a practical work to perform and went at it in a practical way. The more revolting of these customs they properly uprooted altogether; the better of them they preserved, only in grafting the rites of the church upon them.

Thus it came about that festivities which had their origin in the old Roman Saturnalia and had come into use among the druids survived in the grim mythology of the Saxons and are a portion of our inheritance to-day. Conscious among these are the burning of the Yule log and the hanging of the mistletoe bough.

Among all people who celebrate the day at all it has always been a day for eating and drinking, for singing and dancing and merriment of all kinds. Indeed, this has been the criticism of the church against the manner of observance—that its spiritual meaning was too often forgotten in the general tide of worldly cheer. In England its observance is universal. The chronicles tell us that in Cheshire no servants would work on this day, even though their failure to do so resulted in their discharge. The richest families were compelled either to do their own cooking on Christmas or eat what had been prepared beforehand, while dancing and merriment reigned.

And the games that were played number nearly legion, the most of them, though, on Christmas eve, running in sacks, ducking for apples, jumping at cakes suspended by a string and trying to catch them between the teeth, drinking hard cider mixed with egg and spices, and a score of others—these claimed and still claim in Devonshire the time of old and young, the children themselves being allowed on this one night to sit up until the midnight bell tolls.

What has been aptly called "a beautiful phase in popular superstition," a very old belief, was that all the powers of evil lay dormant and harmless on Christmas Day.

The cock crowed through the live-long night to drive all evil spirits away; the bees sang in their winter hives; the cattle, half human at all times, became wholly so at midnight and talked like human beings.

Bread that was baked the night before Christmas could not possibly become moldy. The streets in many places were filled with numbers in fantastic garb.

Indeed, there were mummers in the days when Saturnalia reigned over even the Roman emperors, but they were not necessarily of the Christmas time. The love for masquerade is almost as old as the human race itself.

But as to the day itself, it was then, as it is now, a very merry day, with good fellowship bubbling even from hearts where theological nonbelief dwelt—a day sacred to the family, to the eating of roast turkey and cranberry sauce or roast beef and plum pudding and walnuts and the drinking of beer, ale and wine.

It has changed to some extent since the old day, but it is still the happiest day of all the year—at least where the shadow of misfortune does not cloud the sky.

GAMES TO MAKE CHRISTMAS MERRY

AFTER all, there are no new games more amusing or fun-giving than the old-fashioned ones, such as progressive conversation, pass the button, twisting a word to make as many other words as possible, guessing contests and forfeit games. Though there is "nothing new under the sun," one of these herewith suggested may aid a distracted holiday hostess.

Gathering Snowballs.

For the littlest tots this game will prove very enjoyable. To each one give a fluffy cotton snowball, which should be attached to one ankle with a narrow elastic, just to hold it lightly. One child sits on the floor while the others join hands and dance around him. Without moving from his seat, the one in the centre reaches for the snowball on the ankle that seems easiest to reach. The players must not let go of each other's hands in endeavoring to dance out of his reach. When one is caught he is deprived of his snowball, and must take the other's place in the ring. As the contest narrows down to the last two or three who still have their snowballs, the game grows quite exciting. After everybody has served his turn in the centre, they may have a lively "snowball fight" with the trophies.

Novel Ways to Choose Partners.

To avoid the "twosomeness" which is so apt to exist in the average towns, the wise hostess plans to have her guests choose partners at least once during the evening. Two entertaining ways are given.

1. Cut a large circle of white cardboard, dividing it with red ink into as many sectors as there will be girls present. Write a girl's name in each division. Make a large red arrow and attach to the centre of the circle with a brad. Lay the circle on a smooth table and have each boy come up in turn and spin the arrow, thus choosing his partner. Of course, if a girl's name has been chosen, the boy must again take his turn. The hostess may avoid the embarrassment of there being a last choice, by refusing to be chosen until all her guests are accounted for.

2. Another very pretty method is to have a large holly wreath suspended in a doorway. Present the girls, who are in one room, with a piece of mistletoe to which is attached a long red ribbon. The ribbons are all put through the holly wreath and the boys in the next room each choose an end from the maze. The wreath is cut, and the girls wind up the ribbon, thus "drawing" their partners.

Charades.

Old-timey, but what is more fun than this game of guessing? The charades may be arranged for beforehand, or may be impromptu.

A little girl with her arms outstretched, a star on her forehead, and draped with popcorn and tinsel would make an easily-guessed tree.

A boy might place a can on a table in the room, and in leaving, say "Tata" (Cantata).

A boy wearing a Turkish fez, or an imitation one (cap with tassel) holding a key (Turkey).

One person might take aim with a small missile at another's foot. The answer is obvious—mistletoe.

A word which has to do largely with the modern Christmas might be suggested by one person calling the roll, and others in the picture answering "Present" (Presents). This is not as easy to guess as it sounds. Those who are guessing are looking for a catch-word.

Any number of words appropriate to this season may be enacted, and many may be thought up, in the excitement of the game, which will cause much merriment and much competition between the opposing sides, which are chosen at the outset of the game.

Santa Claus' Mistake

IT was very early Christmas morning; it would have been quite dark in the bedroom if it had not been for the street light outside the window.

Side by side against the wall stood two white beds. In one slept Charlie Kennedy, aged five; in the other, Donald Kennedy, aged seven, lay awake.

From the foot of each bed hung a stocking.

"It looks like night out of doors," thought Donald. "But I believe it is really morning, and if it is morning I shall just have one peep into my stocking to see what Santa Claus has brought me."

Donald slipped a bare pink foot cautiously out of bed, then the other followed, and in his blue and white striped pyjamas, he crept to the well-filled stocking and emptied the contents on the quilt.

In the dim light he could see a ball, a knife, a Chinese puzzle, an orange, and a box of sweets, also a clockwork motor boat.

He put the things carefully back, then looked longingly at his brother's stocking.

"It'll just peep at Charlie's. That will be no harm," he thought.

Charlie had much the same as Donald, only in place of the clockwork motor boat, there was a cannon. Donald handled it lovingly.

"Santa Claus ought to have known that I mean to be a soldier. He should have given me this cannon," he muttered. "Charlie is to be a sailor, so the motor boat would be just the thing for him. Santa Claus has made a mistake—that's what he has done."

Donald put back Charlie's presents and crept into his warm bed. But he could not sleep; he kept thinking of the cannon and the motor boat.

"I am sure Santa Claus has made a muddle about us. I shall set things right."

And so saying, Donald got out of bed once more, and put Charlie's cannon in his own stocking, and gave his brother the motor boat.

Having done this, Donald once more got into bed, and this time he soon went to sleep.

II.

It was Christmas Day and breakfast-time. Around the breakfast table in the dining-room, decorated with evergreens, sat Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy, Donald and Charlie, and their sisters, Doris and Rose, whilst Uncle Bob was placed between Donald and Charlie to see that they "behaved themselves," as he laughingly remarked.

As they were all chattering, Ellen, the parlormaid, entered with a tray. On the tray was a letter.

"I wonder who it is from?" remarked Mrs. Kennedy.

"I am sure the post has never arrived so early as this on Christmas Day."

To Beat Germans.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—One of the remarkable features of the soldiers' vote, both at the camps in England and on the front in France and Flanders, is the large number of members of various units from Canada who insisted on recording their ballots for the Unionist candidate who was "running in Kitchener." The reports had reached the soldiers of the insult to Premier Borden when he visited Kitchener during his campaign, and the subsequent refusal of the City Council to make an apology.
Deep indignation was expressed by the troops everywhere, and it is certain that the Unionist candidate in the riding in which Kitchener is included, gained several thousand votes from this circumstance alone.

Although Mr. Euler's majority in North Waterloo now stands at over 2,000, the despatches received indicate that Mr. Weichel may be ultimately elected as a result of the votes of the overseas soldiers.

ports. The sinking of two more steamships is told in the despatch.

ACCIDENT AT G.T.R. CROSSING

Mrs. F. T. Ward Struck by Train and Badly Injured

A very serious accident occurred yesterday morning, when Mrs. Fred T. Ward while crossing the G.T.R. track near her home, was struck by the east bound passenger train.

Mrs. Dorey and daughter, Mrs. S. Nolan were watching the train pass and saw Mrs. Ward approaching the track. She was looking down at the time and did not see the train until too late. They at once rushed to her aid and Mrs. Dorey ran for more assistance.

Mrs. Dorey and Potts were at once summoned and it was found that both legs were broken, also several ribs.

This morning she is resting as comfortably as could be expected.

Mr. Ward and family have the sympathy of all the citizens. The Leader also extends sympathy and one and all hope for Mrs. Ward a speedy recovery.

MOVING A BIG ARMY

Transporting Troops In Time of War is a Gigantic Task.

A WORK OF INFINITE DETAIL.

What It Would Mean In Railway Cars of Various Kinds and In Supplies and Equipment to Carry a Million and a Half Men Across the Country.

Before a body of troops is entrained the time and place of every move are mapped out, including the date and place of entraining, destination, time of arrival, route, assembly point, time of troops leaving assembly point, route of assembly point to train, time of arrival at station, time of boarding train, time of departure of train, rate of travel over each section of route, time, place and duration of stops; time and place of feeding troops and animals and a schedule showing the assignment of troops and equipment to each car. Aside from this are countless details connected with procuring supplies, the disposal of troops and their care.

All these preliminary arrangements must be made by an officer of the quartermaster corps. The first thing to be done is to procure lists with weight of all property to be shipped, obtain this material and make out the bill of lading. This, with the number of men and officers, constitutes a basis on which he estimates the number and kind of cars needed. He then engages the cars and provides loading facilities, such as material for blocking and lashing, and constructs necessary ramps, or runways, for entraining animals or wagons.

Next, on the arrival of the cars, he inspects them from a thousand major and minor angles. All cars must be clean. Passenger cars must be fully supplied with water and ice, sufficiently lighted and heated and all other appurtenances in proper condition. Stock cars come in for special attention.

Then the number of men or kind and quantity of supplies allotted to each car is marked on the side or steps, together with the name of the organization. In loading men three are assigned to each section in tourist sleepers or three to each two seats in a day coach.

Another important point is to keep the troops of each unit with all equipment together. This is important in case of sudden attack. Imagine the fate of a unit of troops suddenly detained at the firing line without equipment!

A possible element of delay lies in the timing of the arrival of troops at the station. There must be no time lost by cars waiting for the troops. The facilities for loading animals and wagons at each station on each route should be part of the quartermaster corps' records. Quick and noiseless unloading of animals without confusion are an art in themselves. Dispositions of individual animals must be studied. Gentle animals should be placed opposite doors and therefore loaded last.

The time of loading and unloading has been carefully tabulated and should not exceed the following: Infantry, one hour; cavalry and light artillery, one and one-half hours; heavy artillery and engineers with bridge train, two hours. All movements, loading, entraining, detraining, feeding and watering and exercising men and horses, are made in military fashion.

With each train kitchen cars are provided. Otherwise baggage cars are fitted up by troops or arrangements made for procuring meals, or at least liquid coffee, at stations en route. Feeding of men and animals is in itself no small matter.

Say the war department was called upon to transport twenty field armies of 82,000 men each, or 1,640,000 men. In moving such a military force the railroads must carry the 1,640,000 men, 700,000 mounds and draft animals, 60,000 vehicles and 3,300 big guns.

To accomplish this the quartermaster corps must have available at the right points 42,300 passenger coaches, 7,700 baggage cars, 21,100 box cars, 37,980 stock cars and 15,500 flat cars, making a total of 124,580 cars, or 7,320 trains with as many engines.

Here is the government's minimum estimate of the gross weight of materials needed each month by this force of 1,640,000 men: Rations, 250,000,000 pounds; ammunition, 7,000,160 pounds; forage, 625,147,000 pounds; general quartermasters' supplies, 33,794,440 pounds; clothing and equipment, 22,080,340 pounds; ordnance supplies other than ammunition, 1,622,740 pounds; engineers' supplies, 12,208,320 pounds; signal supplies, 9,043,250 pounds; medical supplies, 507,160 pounds; candy and tobacco, 310,680 pounds, making a total of 901,089,100 or nearly 1,000,000,000 pounds. The transportation of this enormous weight would require fifty-five trains of thirty cars each day as long as the force was in the field.

Want More Wages

Demands for wage increases of from ten to forty per cent. were submitted to 75,000 locomotive firemen on railroads in the United States for a vote last week. The demands were drawn up by committees of the trainmen's brotherhoods. Instructions sent to the firemen say the vote is not on the question of a strike.

VINOL MAKES CHILDREN STRONG

And Invigorates Old People

Any doctor will tell you that the ingredients of Vinol as printed below contain the elements needed to improve the health of delicate children and restore strength to old people.

It contains Cod Liver and Beef Potatoes, Iron and Ammonium Chloride, Lime and Soda Glycophosphates, Calcium.

Those who have puny, ailing or run-down children or aged parents may prove this at our expense.

Besides the good it does children and the aged there is nothing like Vinol to restore strength and vitality to weak, nervous women and overworked, run-down men.

Try it. If you are not entirely satisfied, we will return your money without question; that proves our fairness and your protection. Millions of people have been convinced this way.

Draftees Called January Third

The first draft of men under the Military Service Act will be called to the colors on January 3rd. It was originally hoped, as stated in the proclamation calling upon the first class to register, to put the first draft on active service by Dec. 10. But owing to the fact that a very large proportion of the men in the first class postponed reporting for service or claiming exemption until the last days of the time fixed by the proclamation of October 3 for compliance with the law, it is found that the work of registrars and tribunals has not yet advanced sufficiently to make it practicable to call a draft to the colors on the date indicated.

It would probably be possible, if it pointed out here, to make a call about December 24th or 25th, but it is felt that the members of the draft should be accorded opportunity of spending Christmas season with their families and friends. It has, therefore, been decided to fix January 3, as the date upon which the first members of the draft will be requested to join the depot battalions. Notice will be sent in due course by registered mail to the men affected.

FOOD CRISIS IS FACED BY GREAT BRITAIN

All Classes Must Line Up for Sugar, Butter and Tea Morsel.

MUCH DISCONTENT

Compulsory Rationing is Working Well in Some Big Cities.

London, Cable.—The food question in Britain is rapidly approaching a crisis. The fourth winter of the war finds the public, rich and poor alike, driven to stand for long hours to secure daily necessities, such as tea, butter, margarine and sugar, of which the minutest portion is doled out to each customer, regardless of the size of the family or the actual needs.

This condition exists in nearly every large city in the country and it is worse in London, where the situation is so serious and public opinion has risen to such a pitch that prompt official action to relieve the situation has been promised and will soon be forthcoming.

LACK OF CONTROL

This condition of affairs is not, as one paper suggests, "an inevitable symptom of the malady of dearth which has afflicted the earth." It is with the control, or rather lack of control, of the transportation and supply system that the fault lies. Of these two difficulties, the first is practically incurable—the shortage of petrol, the lack of transportation facilities and the fact that the railways of the country have a full task in the conveyance of troops and war materials—such impediments as these offer little hope of immediate solution. Accordingly it is toward the question of regulation of the retail supply that the Government's attention will be turned.

To-day the Food Controller declared that no stone will be left unturned in an endeavor to solve the question, the gravity of which is fully realized. "We have some of the finest brains in the country hard at work early and hourly considering most carefully this problem in all its aspects," he declared.

GROWING DISCONTENT

There is great and growing discontent among the housewives, especially those of the poorer classes who feel that the well-to-do people are able to obtain supplies without inconvenience, whereas the poor are forced to wait hours in the cold to purchase almost infinitesimal amounts. This charge is unquestionably true in many instances, but to-day saw twenty or thirty long queues in different parts of the city, stretching sometimes for blocks, in which well-dressed and fur-coated women mingled with porters' wives and other neighbors to get their daily allowance.

The majority of shopkeepers sell only a certain allowance to each customer. The result is that these women, buying for a large family are forced to stand sometimes almost all day in several different queues to obtain enough for the family dinner. Moreover this is a daily performance, for in no case is it possible to purchase sufficient food to last any length of time.

GREAT SCARCITY OF TEA

A quarter of a pound of tea is the most anyone is able to get, while butter, margarine and sugar are doled out in amounts of a quarter pound or two ounces. One woman told me to-day that she had only been able to buy one ounce of tea daily for the last week.

Bitter cold weather arrived yesterday, adding considerably to the suffering of those poor women who were obliged to stand in line outdoors. Two hours is the average wait in any London queue, and those who arrive late have to wait from three to four hours or run the risk of not being supplied.

There is alleged to be a great deal of ruffianism, profiteering indulged in in this connection, probably one out of every four standing in line buying to sell at a profit. I was present to-day when a woman who had fainted was discovered to have fifteen quarter pounds of sugar concealed about her person. She declared she had been standing in the line since 5 a.m.

COMPULSORY RATIONING

Some of the big cities, such as Birmingham and Reading, have adopted compulsory rationing on their own hook, and it is working successfully. The Evening News strongly urges the adoption of the same system in London, having the Food Controller give notice to all retailers that they must register their regular customers and sell only to them.

This has been the worst week of the year for butter. No supplies have been received from Denmark or Ireland, and the present restrictions on the use of cream in this country, in order to increase the supply of butter, have not visibly improved the situation.

Of course when Britain increased blockade pressure on the Scandinavia countries a short while ago it cut its own throat so far as the matter of supplying the British people with sufficient butter and bacon is concerned. There is a shortage of these commodities, but not a sufficient shortage to warrant the present queue hardship everywhere.

A RATIONED CHRISTMAS

This is going to be a rationed Christmas for most folks in Britain, owing to the extreme inefficiency of the meat distribution scheme now in force and to the high price of turkeys. There is plenty of birds in the markets to-day, but many housewives already have set out on their Christmas shopping, and it will not be long before the supply is exhausted. Turkeys are going to be sixty and seventy-five cents a pound in the larger markets, and before the holiday they probably will touch a dollar a pound.

The official Labor Gazette published figures yesterday showing that the rise in the principal items of food in the United Kingdom since the war began has been 165 per cent. In increase greater than in any other country of the world except Norway. Eggs took the greatest jump, costing now 230 per cent. more than before the war.

The average increase in France has been 82 per cent., but it is interesting to note that the daily bread supply there has been cut from three-quarters of a pound to about one-ninth of a pound, and that the wheat supply is less than half of that in 1913.

MUST BACK WAR ON JUNKERISM

Appeal to Americans of German Descent

By Influential Men of That Race.

New York Despatch.—An appeal to American citizens of German birth and descent to join its campaign for helping the United States to win the war, was made public to-day by the Executive Committee of the Friends of German Democracy. Franz Sigel, son of General Franz Sigel, of Civil War fame, is president of the organization.

"This war is not a war on the part of America against the German nation," the appeal stated. "It is rather a war against a peculiar system of society and government. This system of society and government, unacceptably dominates the German people to their own and the world's undoing."

The committee declared that "a majority of the German people, if properly informed about their own Government and its misdeeds, will not wait until the German nation is completely crushed by force of arms, but will sooner or later rise against the Kaiser and the junkers and establish a democratic government in Germany."

"President Wilson has very clearly pointed out," the statement added, "that the war must go on until the triumph of democracy is complete. This matter is no longer debatable. All American citizens of German birth or descent must now realize that they are face to face with a known fact and not with an open question. America and her allies are going to win this war against the Emperor and the ruling classes of Germany."

"During the past seventy years over 5,000,000 Germans have come to America. We find that the principles for which many of our immediate ancestors, or we ourselves suffered exile, are threatened by the very powers which forced us, as a people, out of Germany. We must rally with our fellow-Americans against tyranny which has so long cursed the country and our fathers, and which now rises as a dangerous threat against the liberty of the whole world."

"The friends of Germany democracy urge our German people in America, by every means in their power, to assert themselves on the side of right in this conflict."

SHIP LOSSES SLIGHTLY LESS

Fourteen Over 1,600 Tons, Three Under That, Sunk.

French Marine Only Lost One Ship.

London Cable.—Fourteen British merchantmen of more than 1,600 tons and three under that tonnage were sunk by mine or submarine during the past week, according to the Admiralty statement to-night. One fishing vessel also was sunk. The shipping losses by mine or submarine in the past week are slightly under those of the previous week, when fourteen vessels of more than 1,600 tons and seven under that tonnage were destroyed.

ONE FRENCH SHIP SUNK

Paris Cable says.—The losses to French shipping by mine or submarine for the week ending December 15 were exceedingly light. Only one vessel under 1,600 tons was sunk, and none over 1,600 tons. One ship was attacked, but escaped. No fishing craft was sunk.

Washington, Dec. 15.—Nineteen U. S. submarines were damaged and sunk by German submarines in home waters during a fog Monday afternoon.

The P-3 was damaged and killed up the survivors of her victim. Secretary Daniels announced the disaster to-day in a brief statement, which gave no further details.

2,000,000 HUNS FACE ALLIES ON THE WEST

But Entente Have Still More Men, and Are Confident.

QUIET JUST NOW

Only Small Affairs, While Awaiting Expected Foe Drive.

London Cable.—The fighting on the West front still remains below normal, although the continuous tactical and tactical movements between the French and Germans in Champagne and in the mountainous regions near the Swiss border is increasing in volume, probably forecasting infantry attacks at an early date.

The British front is placed in the Franco-British front at 154 divisions, or within one division of the great forces amassed there last July, when the German military effort against France was at its maximum. The divisions are probably not of full maximum strength, but the total force is believed to be over 2,000,000 men.

Withdrawals from Russia and drafts upon the younger classes of reserves thus have enabled the Kaiser not only to make up the enormous losses suffered in bloody battles with the allies, but to send men to aid the Austrians in their invasion of Italy. Winter, therefore, finds the Germans with armies facing the allies in France equal to the largest ever before mustered, with advertisement of a great offensive.

The allies, however, are understood to maintain a considerable superiority in numbers on the French front.

BRITISH REPORT

London Cable.—The text of Wednesday's War Office statement said: "During the night a hostile raiding party, driven off by our fire east of Guemappe (Arras sector). Our raiding parties attacked two of our posts in the neighborhood of Avion. Two of our men are missing."

"As a result of raids unsuccessfully attempted by the enemy last night ten prisoners and four machine guns, and the enemy's artillery has shown considerable activity in the neighborhood of Ploegsteert and Polygon wood (Ypres sector)."

FRENCH REPORT

Paris Cable says.—The official communication issued by the war office Wednesday night reads: "Reciprocal bombardments occurred in the region of Juvincourt and north of the Canal de Valenciennes (Champanne sector). Our raiding parties attacked two of our posts in the neighborhood of Avion. Two of our men are missing."

BEIGIAN REPORT

Paris Cable.—The Belgian War Office report of Wednesday said: "In the course of the day of Dec. 18 there were moderately intense artillery actions in the regions of Dinant and Merckem. Pursues, the approaches to the station at Adinkerke and the region of Duynhoeke were cannonaded. On Dec. 19 the artillery activity was slight. The environs of Adinkerke and Duynhoeke were bombarded."

AWFUL FATE OF SERB CAPTIVES

Wholesale Barbarities by Austro-Germans.

7,000 Died in One Prison Camp Alone.

Washington Despatch.—The official Serbian press bureau has made public a startling report on the fate of Serbian prisoners-of-war and deported civilians prepared by a French Journalist at Zurich, Switzerland. Forty thousand old men, women and children have been deported by the Bulgars from Serbia. Turkey, Serbians, interned and prisoners-of-war, are treated with appalling barbarity in Germany, Austria-Hungary and Bulgaria. The Serbian race is menaced by the measures practiced against it by its enemies.

The report says: "Ever since last autumn heartrending accounts of the fate of the Serbian prisoners in Germany, Austria-Hungary and Bulgaria have reached us here in Switzerland. A strict enquiry was obviously called for. It was a long and difficult business, but I interrogated many persons returning from Germany, France, England, Russia and Serbian wounded or escaped prisoners and subjects of neutral countries, all trustworthy witnesses. The result of my enquiry is appalling."

It is not easy to arrive at the exact number of Serbian prisoners-of-war and deported civilians in enemy countries. According to the returns published in the Frankfurter Zeitung of May 11, 1917, there were at the end of last year 155,050 Serbian soldiers prisoners-of-war, 898 of whom were officers.

"I will now give a small fraction of the evidence I have collected:

"At the beginning of 1916, 754 Serbian prisoners were taken to the prisoners' camp at Salina (Hungary). They were in the last stage of exhaustion and could scarcely drag themselves along."

"A prisoner who could speak German makes the following report: "We are dying of hunger. During our passage through Serbia the peasant women often came and brought us bread, cheese and honey, but the Magyar soldiers who formed our escort took it all for themselves. In several Austrian towns we were mobbed, kept in the street with sticks. About thirty of my countrymen were seriously injured in this way. For three months in Bohemia we were employed in field work and the construction of railway lines. The food was horrible—soup which made you sick, a few potatoes and a piece of bread in such insufficient quantity that by the end of six weeks thirty-two of my comrades had died of hunger. There were terrible punishments for those who failed to accomplish their allotted task, flogging, cells with only one piece of bread in four days or punishment like the following: The prisoner was suspended from a tree by his feet and kept in that position until death appeared imminent. In the country punishments were more summary. A soldier who picked up a bullet was shot on the spot. This happened in several cases. Besides this forty of my comrades were taken back in a body to Serbia under the pretext that they were to indicate the spots where our guns were buried. We never heard of them since."

"There were about 4,000 Serbs at the prisoners' camp at Koenigsberg. They were skin and bone and they were clothed in rags. They were housed in a field by themselves, divided from those of the prisoners of other Allied nations by a high barbed wire fence. No one was allowed to communicate with them. The food they were given was disgraceful. 'Coffee' clear soup without any taste, and a piece of bread. British and French prisoners who passed them some food were in punishment, loaded with sacks filled with sand or pebbles and forced to run round the barracks, or they were compelled to sit down and rise again alternately until they broke down under the load. Several hundred prisoners died of hunger and exhaustion in that camp."

"The fate of the Serbian prisoners at Mauthausen was the most terrible of all. Worn out by fatigue, hunger and cold, prisoners succumbed every day. By the month of May, 1917, more than 7,000 of them had died. According to the accounts of an Austrian prisoner, one could often see Serbian prisoners digging up bones which had been thrown on the refuse heap in their search for food. Others piled up grass and herbs and ate the roots, or, defying the blows of their guards, they threw themselves on carts containing manure-wheels for manure and devoured them with the earth that clung to them."

TURKS ROBBED

THE HOLY CITY

Treasure of Church of Holy Sepulchre Stolen

And Celebrated Ostensory Sent to Berlin.

Washington, D. C. Report.—An official despatch received here to-day from France says that the Turks before surrendering Jerusalem to the British brutally mistreated Christian pilgrims, carried off the famous treasure of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, valued at millions of dollars, and sent to Berlin the church's celebrated ostensory of brilliant.

Monsignor Camassei, the Patriarch of Jerusalem, is said to have been deposed from his office, and Father Picardo, an Italian priest, to have died from the effects of Turkish brutality.

The Church of the Holy Sepulchre had remained unviolated heretofore during all the centuries of Moslem occupation of Jerusalem.

The same despatch told of indignation among Mussulmans of Asia Minor over the action of a German general in establishing staff headquarters in the great mosque of the City of Aleppo, near the Syrian border.

The Church of the Holy Sepulchre was consecrated in the year 336 on the traditional spot where Christ rose from the dead. In the year 614 the buildings comprising the church were destroyed by the Persians. The original building was in the form of a rotunda, the walls of which survive in the present complex construction, which assumed various forms in the course of re-building during the middle ages. The edifice was badly damaged by fire in 1808. The Greeks contrived to secure to themselves the principal right to the buildings, and with the Armenians contributed money for the erection of the church. The dilapidated edifice which the Sepulchre is situated was restored by architects of various nationalities in 1868 as the result of an agreement made with Turkey by France and Russia.

The chief entrance to the church is from a court on the south. The court is paved with yellowish slabs of stone and is infested always by traders and beggars.

In the interior is the sepulchre proper, enclosed in a sixteen-sided chapel resting on eighteen piers and containing a great number of chapels appropriated to different creeds or nationalities, or marking various spots traditionally connected with the Saviour's presence.

Use the scales on a fish story and you will generally find that it is weighed and found wanting.

LAUNCHINGS EQUAL LOSSES OF THE ALLIES

Naval Expert Sees the End of the German U Boat Menace.

NORTH SEA RAIDS

If Conditions Reversed, Would Be More Numerous, He Says.

New York Report.—Arthur Pollen, the British naval expert, who has sailed for Europe after spending six months in the United States, gave to the Associated Press a statement in which he said that the campaign of the allied navies against the submarine has at last resulted in keeping the world's tonnage from showing a monthly decrease, or will soon do so. Mr. Pollen gives credit for this success to the change in the chief command carried out by the British Admiralty last spring, and the participation in the campaign of American navy.

Mr. Pollen pointed out that six months ago the German submarines were causing a net attrition in the world's tonnage at the rate of nearly 25 per cent. annually. While the present rate of attrition is difficult to estimate, it appeared that last month Great Britain launched as much tonnage as she lost; the ship built down by the United States since the war has been launched, and within the next twelve months a substantial portion of the six millions tons provided for in this country will undoubtedly be afloat. Great Britain's shipbuilding program will similarly increase month by month, and moreover, the campaign of the allied navies against the submarine will grow in value week by week, he said.

"The significance of this to the fortunes of war does not have to be pointed out," Mr. Pollen continued. "It means that Germany's flank attack on allied communications has failed, and that there is no reason why ultimately the full military power of Great Britain, France and Italy, and more important of all, of the United States, should not be felt in the western theatre of war. This is a tremendous result."

Speaking of the change in the chief command of the British Admiralty, Mr. Pollen said: "In bringing about this new order of things at Whitehall, the reformers were undoubtedly assisted, first, by the fact that an extremely effective, well-equipped and brilliantly-commanded contingent of American destroyers was already at work in a very important area of the theatre of war, and next by the British Government waking up to the truth that the belligerency of America meant not only the co-operation of a very gallant and enterprising ally, but the domestication, so to speak, of a new and extremely intelligent critic."

Mr. Pollen mentioned the concentrations with the British Admiralty of "three distinguished and resourceful American naval officers—Admirals Sims, Mayo and Benson. Through these men, American professional knowledge," he said, "has gained a first-hand experience of the reality of war, and has been able to contribute an impersonal and impartial judgment upon the character of the operations to be pursued and of the means of command under which they should be carried out. I cannot doubt for a moment that much of the improved efficiency of the counter-campaign is due to this intellectual stimulus."

Mr. Pollen paid tribute to Secretary of the Navy Daniels, praising what he described as the secretary's policy of obtaining loyal team-work by allowing the forces under his orders to be directed, in strictly professional matters, "according to the judgment and advice of the singularly able and efficient officers that so many men, American professional knowledge," he said, "has gained a first-hand experience of the reality of war, and has been able to contribute an impersonal and impartial judgment upon the character of the operations to be pursued and of the means of command under which they should be carried out. I cannot doubt for a moment that much of the improved efficiency of the counter-campaign is due to this intellectual stimulus."

LOSS TO ALLIES

Patterns for Sub. Chasers Are Destroyed.

Albany, N. Y. Despatch.—Valuable patterns for the manufacture of special equipment for British, French and Italian submarine chasers were destroyed early to-day in a fire of undetermined origin, which ruined much of the manufacturing plant of the George H. Thatcher Company. The loss is estimated at $100,000. The owners have signified their intention of requesting an investigation by Federal authorities.

Besides the contracts for the Allies, the plant was engaged in turning out work of the U. S. emergency war corporation, and for other Government agencies.

COSSACKS TAKE ROSTOV-ON-DON

Petrograd Cable.—A Petrograd despatch to the Post says that the Cossacks finally occupied Rostov-Don Monday. The infantry joined the Cossacks, the rearwards surrendering.

Gen. Kaledin, headman of the Cossacks, has proposed to the Bolshevik Government that the civil strife cease, stipulating the independence of the Don territory and non-intervention by the Maximilians.

The executive council of Workmen's and Soldiers' deputies has proclaimed a state of siege in Petrograd in an effort to reverse disorders due to the looting of wine cellars and shops.

LOSS TO ALLIES

Patterns for Sub. Chasers Are Destroyed.

Albany, N. Y. Despatch.—Valuable patterns for the manufacture of special equipment for British, French and Italian submarine chasers were destroyed early to-day in a fire of undetermined origin, which ruined much of the manufacturing plant of the George H. Thatcher Company. The loss is estimated at $100,000. The owners have signified their intention of requesting an investigation by Federal authorities.

Besides the contracts for the Allies, the plant was engaged in turning out work of the U. S. emergency war corporation, and for other Government agencies.

TO AID WAR WORK

Locomotives for France Seized in America.

Philadelphia Report.—Thirty Government locomotives, built at the Baldwin works here for military railroads in France have been ordered into service in Philadelphia and nearby territory by the Federal Government. It was learned to-day. These, without about 100 engines loaned by western railroads to eastern companies, are being used to speed up the movement of congested freight traffic on that coast can be rushed to cities where Government war work is threatened with interference by the shortage of fuel.

It isn't always possible to get straight to the point. A man can't even climb a ladder without going the rounds.

An authority on the subject, in reply to a question, "Is oleomargarine good to eat?" answered: "Oleomargarine is beef tallow of suet subjected to a heat of 35 degrees (centigrade). This is subjected to pressure. The lower melting portion contains a large quantity of olein and when mixed with cotton-seed oil and occasionally a little milk and genuine butter, makes oleomargarine. The quantity of volatile fatty acid (butyric or capric acid) is always considerably below that of genuine butter. If properly prepared it is a perfectly wholesome article of diet."

Daring Hold Up of Trenton Merchant

Mr. Weaver, Boot and Shoe Merchant, Struck Down in His Store By Two Robbers, One of Whom Was Captured

Trenton was the scene of a daring crime Saturday evening last which has caused considerable excitement in that town. About seven o'clock in the evening two strangers entered the boot and shoe store of Weaver & Co., and while one engaged the attention of Mr. Weaver by pretending to make a purchase, his companion struck the merchant on the side of the head with a slung-shot, felling him to the floor in an unconscious condition. The men then proceeded to rifle the till but were disturbed by the entrance of a customer, who, sizing up the situation, engaged the bandits and succeeded in holding one until the police arrived. The other escaped.

Mr. Weaver is reported to be seriously injured and is confined to his home.

Health Examinations.

"Periodic health examinations are the best safeguard against degenerative diseases," says a leading physician. "It is as foolish for a man to neglect his health and not consult a physician until he suffers acute pain as it would be for a business man to go without having his books balanced until after he had gone into bankruptcy. Every man should be compelled to take a physical examination and learn just how he can improve his health. To know what you lack is the first step toward getting it."

Chances For Success.

I have many times been asked if, in my opinion, the young man of today had as good chance to make his mark in the business world as did his elders. My answer is, "Never since our pilgrim fathers landed on the shores of Plymouth were the opportunities for the young man's success greater than they are today. It is for him to determine whether he will be a success or not."

Keep a Pig
Try and Do Your Bit by Raising a Porker.

The "keep a pig" movement has spread to Canada.

The ever-rising price of bacon suggests strongly the need of increased production in porkers, not only to supply the army, but to keep pace with domestic requirements and if possible, bring down the price.

To-day the Deputy Minister of Agriculture of the eastern provinces, along with officers of the agriculture departments here, are meeting the Food Controller. A nation-wide movement is to be inaugurated to increase hog production among those who are already in the country, and as well as those who heretofore have never harbored a pig on their premises. The business, it is calculated, will not only be profitable, but of great help alike in augmenting the supply for the soldiers and diminishing the domestic prices.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON XIII.
December 30, 1917.
God's Redeeming Love—Review—
Psalms 123, 124.

(A reading lesson only.)

SUMMARY.—Lesson I. Topic: Restoration. Place: Jerusalem. The writer of the psalms which constitute the lesson sounds notes of joy and gives utterance to pleas for mercy. There is thanksgiving for deliverance and there is petition for a revival among his people. Jehovah is recognized as the help of his people. There is a promise of success to those who labor earnestly for him. As surely as there is a faithful sowing of effort for the salvation of men, there will be a joyful harvest.

II. Topic: Release from captivity. Place: Babylon; Jerusalem. The seventy years of Judah's captivity in Babylon had passed and the Lord moved the heart of King Cyrus to issue a proclamation to the Jews to return to Jerusalem and build up the house of the Lord. The king gave the Jews great assistance in their undertaking and many improved the opportunity of returning.

III. Topic: The temple rebuilt. Place: Jerusalem. The task of the exiles, after their return from Babylon, was to undertake the restoration of the system of worship. They did not wait to build the temple, but they built an altar on the site of the ancient one and then set about the building of the temple under the leadership of Zerubbabel. In spite of hindrances and opposition, the temple was finished and dedicated amid the shouts and weeping of the people.

IV. Topic: Armed faith. Place: Babylon; Jerusalem. Seventy-eight years after the return of Jewish exiles under the leadership of Zerubbabel another company returned under the leadership of Ezra. After a period of fasting and prayer, and after special precautions were taken for the security of the caravan, the company set out on their long journey to Jerusalem, where they arrived in safety. The Lord's hand is seen in their success.

V. Topic: The God of battles. Place: Samaria. The temperance lesson is taken from the history of Israel in the town of Ahab. Although the nation was corrupt, the Lord had compassion on the people and drove back the great army of Syria. Ben-hadad, the king of Syria, and his chief officers gave themselves up to strong drink and the army of Israel easily defeated the Syrian army. The use of intoxicants resulted in a great defeat then, and their use is no less disastrous now.

VI. Topic: True patriotism. Place: Shushan, in Persia. Nehemiah was a Jewish captive and was trusted by the king of Persia. He heard of the desolation of Jerusalem and was sad. He prayed earnestly for his people and prayed that the Lord would give him favor with the king and open the way for him to go to Jerusalem to build up the walls of the city. He was sure that the Lord was able to afford just the help that was needed.

VII. Topic: Qualified leadership. Place: Shushan, in Persia; Jerusalem. When King Artaxerxes saw Nehemiah's sad countenance, he inquired the cause. Nehemiah told him the condition of Jerusalem, and lifting his heart to God in prayer, sought permission from the king to go to his own land and try to improve conditions there. His request was granted and the king gave him much assistance in every way. Nehemiah received signal answer to his prayer.

VIII. Topic: Spiritual meditation. Place: Probably Jerusalem. Psalm 103 is full of expressions of praise to God. The writer dwells much on the goodness of God. He is merciful, is just and is faithful in keeping his promises. He removes our transgressions from us as far as the east is from the west. God is upon the throne of the universe. All the world is called upon to praise the Lord.

IX. Topic: Opposition. Place: Jerusalem. Nehemiah saw the extent of the ruins of the city and set about building up the walls and certain structures in the city. The enemies of the Jews tried by derision and conspiracy to hinder the work. Nehemiah took precautions and the workers labored under the protection of guards.

X. Topic: Spiritual progress. Place: Jerusalem. The walls of Jerusalem were broken by the people. Ezra and Nehemiah undertook to teach the Jews the word of God. There was a great assembly called and the book of the law was read to the people who were deeply impressed by it. The feast of Tabernacles was observed with great enthusiasm, and there was much joy among the people.

XI. Topic: Law enforcement. Place: Jerusalem. Nehemiah found that there was much desecration of the Sabbath. Many were carrying burdens on the Sabbath, both in the city and in the country. He had the gates of the city closed during the day and threatened to arrest those who persisted in desecrating the day. He succeeded in breaking up the evil practice. The Sabbath-breakers came to know that Nehemiah was determined to put an end to their evil, even if he had to arrest those who were guilty of violating the law of the Sabbath.

XII. Topic: A message for the times. Place: Jerusalem. Malachi was the last of the Old Testament prophets. He uttered a clear prophecy of the coming of the forerunner of the Messiah and of the coming of the Messiah Himself. He showed the people their sins and exhorted them to return to the Lord. They should bring in all the tithes and offerings. Great blessings would be bestowed upon them.

PRACTICAL SURVEY.
Topic.—National restoration.
I. Reviewed with gratitude and praise.
II. Promoted under strong leadership.
III. Divinely prospered through prayer.
IV. Established on piety and patriotism.

I. Reviewed with gratitude and praise. The lessons of this quarter present a turning-point in the history of the Jewish nation. From the melancholy history of a decadent nation, which found its chastisement in a long period of captivity, we began this quarter with psalms of deliverance, the details of which are worked out through the writer's study. The bitterness of exile brought to pass God's sovereignty in the complete restoration to Israel. The humiliation of slavery, the deprivation of all religious independence, the memory of their ruined city with all the temple service, the ever-present scenes of open idolatry, all served to complete their humiliation and turn their desires toward pure worship and freedom in its exercise. In a retrospect of the wonderful extent of release from captivity and the manner in which it was brought about the psalmist endeavored to describe the feelings and conduct of the delivered people. An expression of personal experience for the mercy of God with every added blessing, the psalmist views all humanity as indebted to God for the same great deliverance from sin and its consequences.

II. Promoted under strong leadership. While the captives were being purified through chastisement, God was causing such changes in the formation of nations as to bring about the fulfillment of His promises to His people. Upon them, and the customs of conquering nations, the generous proposal was made by Cyrus to liberate a whole nation of slaves, not to transplant them to a new land, but to support them for his own advancement but to national religion. He impressed strongly the object of his proclamation and confessed his conviction that such a plan had been given him from the God of those people to whom he offered liberality. There existed among the exiled people some devout souls in whom the Spirit of God dwelt, was clearly evident in the heroic effort made by a representative company in their response to the proposal to take definite steps toward rebuilding God's sanctuary where they might again worship God according to His word. Conditions at Jerusalem reminded the feeble company of the great evil which had brought upon them and the long weary toil that was involved in an effort to recover their ruined city. They could never attain to former excellence in the construction of a temple.

III. Divinely prospered through prayer. Nehemiah could not pray for the prosperity of his people without himself being willing to sacrifice his own comfort to become their leader. It was a tremendous situation. He could not discern the best way to proceed. He knew that God had a plan. He knew that God could find a way to enable him to go. He knew that God could influence the king to provide for the undertaking. He made it his habit to pray every situation into success, not only in the matter of securing authority, but throughout his whole stay he was a man of prayer.

IV. Established on piety and patriotism. Jerusalem was the strongly-contested stronghold of Jewish possessions. It was the city of their fathers, the centre of their religious worship. Piety and patriotism mingled inseparably in their efforts to rebuild Jerusalem and the temple. It must be held as a place where every tribe could engage in the temple services. It must be kept for national festivals where the unity of the nation could be maintained. At great cost they struggled to fortify it against other nations. They were greatly prospered as they adhered closely to the fundamental basis of their restoration. Any laxity in the obedience of God's law or their covenant with him brought distress and complications from invading nations. A glimpse into Israel's history during Ahab's idolatrous reign reveals the bitterness of forsaking the God of all nations. The ever-radiant light of the star of Bethlehem shines through the closing lesson of the quarter. In Christ Jesus "the desire of all nations" was manifested.

FUTURE PRICES FOR LIVE STOCK

Indicated by $2.00 Per Bushel for Wheat Next Year Guaranteed by the U. S. Government—Feed Relatively Cheaper Than Live Stock.

Practically ever since the war started farmers have been urged by the government to produce more food, and as a whole they have responded nobly. At the present time live stock men are being asked to help increase production by conserving their breeding animals so that as many animals as possible may be raised. This suggests the interesting question: "Which is producing the most food, the man who raises live stock or the man who grows grain exclusively?"

One of the best ways of estimating the value of a food is by the amount of energy giving nutrients it contains. The Calorie is the unit of heat, which is one form of energy. And the various foods at the front are made up so that each man receives the equivalent of so many Calories a day.

It is estimated that a crop of 35 bushels of corn to the acre is equivalent to 1,254,400 Calories. It is also estimated that, on the average, 350 pounds of pork is produced from an acre. This amount of pork contains 872,645 Calories. That is, about twice as much food, reckoned as calories, is produced from an acre where oats are grown as would be produced from an acre where pigs are raised. Even less calories are produced per acre where cattle or sheep are raised. Where milk is produced 711,750 calories are produced per acre.

The figures show very clearly that acre for acre the grain farmer is producing more actual food than the live stock man. There are many reasons, however, why it would not be wise for the individual, or even in the national interests, for men who have been raising live stock to change their method of farming and grow nothing but grain crops. The most important reason probably is that raising live stock and returning all the manure to the land is one of the best and cheapest ways of maintaining the fertility of the soil. A cow or a steer will produce from 6 to 8 tons of manure during a six months' feeding period. This manure will be worth anywhere from $10 to $20 per ton as measured by increase in crop yield. This should be considered when one is considering the advantages and disadvantages of keeping live stock.

Even though prices for feeding stuffs appear exorbitant the prices being obtained for cattle, sheep and pigs are very high, and with the world food shortage it appears that prices will remain high for some time to come. During the month of November the price of hogs advanced 44.38 per cent, the price of sheep advanced 44.38 per cent, and the price of hogs advanced 58 per cent, over the price obtained during the same month last year. Although the price of feeding stuffs has advanced it has not advanced in nearly the same proportion. Thus oats during November were 8 per cent higher, and all cake 20 per cent higher. That is, while the price of cattle, sheep and hogs have increased on the average of 45 per cent, the average price of the feeds mentioned has only increased 13 per cent.

Prices so far as the dairyman is concerned are not quite so favorable. While the price of cheese has advanced the cheese boards during the summer was about 25 per cent higher than last year, the price of butter during November only increased 5 per cent over that of last year.

There is a big surplus of corn in the United States, and it is estimated that the production of oats in Ontario will amount to 103,450,000 bushels this year.

When one attempts to prophesy what future price of live stock will be he is on dangerous ground. If the amount of food produced in the world is greatly increased, even though there is a shortage of live stock, prices for live stock will tend to go down because of the abundance of food. After all only represent so many calories and if the total number of calories in farm produce produced by the world is greatly increased the price of food will tend to go down whether that food be live stock or grain.

There is a shortage of some 33,000,000 hogs in Europe. With about 3,500,000 hogs in Canada and somewhat less than 70,000,000 hogs in the States, the shortage is not so great as it is less than six months' ago. The possible increase from one sow is 1,002 pigs in four years, on the supposition that all litters consist of six pigs, that all live, that half are females, and that each gilt should farrow at one year and every six months thereafter. Prices for hogs during the coming year will probably be good, not because there is a shortage of hogs, but because there is a world shortage of Calories, as represented by farm produce.

The United States Government has guaranteed farmers a price of $2 per bushel next year for their wheat, and this is a pretty good indication of what the prices for live stock will be.

PRONOUNCING WORDS.

A Test and Flippant Fling at the Critic and His Theory.

Comes now another to trouble us in these days when the wayfarer has already enough bothers to keep him from lingering overlong in his humble repose. It is a man who has discovered that there are 25,000 English words more or less commonly mispronounced and who would show us how to rescue ourselves from the disgrace.

By way of illustration he challenges all comers to try to pronounce correctly such words as antismell, archmandrite, batman, baftin, bourgeois, brevier, buoy, demy, tegleman, lusi, oboe, rowlock, tassell, vase and vellette. He intimates that anybody can give them all correctly can qualify as a member of the very pronunciation league, but still has a long way to go before he reaches perfection.

But what of it. An oboe sounds as sweet whether one calls it an oh-bow or an oh-boy. If the writer of this did not do so he would not set. It is a boorish type the printer probably would call a meeting of the chapel and insist on a strike vote. You can call it a vase or vawze, but it takes a dime to get it filled, where it takes a cent only 5 cents. As to demy and vellette, not of us have got along very well for a good many years without writing or speaking either of them and hope to struggle along the same way at least until we have a little rest from worry over the high cost of potatoes.

The hardest thing about it is to determine what an awful school of pronunciation is most desirable: the London, the Melbourne, the Canadian, the Texas, the Massachusetts, the Alabama, the Georgia or the Missouri. Moreover, if 25,000 words are mispronounced most of us are democrats.

enough to let the majority rule and be willing to make it unanimous. —St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

TRUE RICHES.

It is the mind that maketh good or ill. That maketh wretch or happy, rich or poor; For such that hath abundance at his will. Hath not enough, but wants in great store; And other, that hath little, asks no more. But in that little is both rich and wise. For wisdom is most riches; fools therefore They are which fortune do by vows devise. Since each unto himself his life may fortuneize. —E. Spenser.

ENDURE HARDNESS.

I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people.

It became him, for who more all things, and by whom sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. We must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God.

We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness, who are hosts in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God.—We do not war after the flesh; for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds.

CONSIDER PEDIGREES IN YOUR HERD

Study Both Individuality and Pedigree.

In buying an animal for breeding purposes it is very particular to see that it has a good pedigree. I have heard men say that they did not care anything about getting a pedigree, but they did want an animal that was good individually.

Considering pedigree of minor importance is one of the worst mistakes a buyer of breeding animals can make. How often have some of us visited a neighbor who is recognized as a good feeder of any kind of live stock, and in looking over his bunch of pigs or calves found that they are not up to the standard usually kept on his farm. We ask him why it is that his stock are not up to the standard. He will reply, "I don't know. I have taken every care I could of them and even given them special attention, but somehow or other they are not good." In nine cases out of ten the fault lies in the pedigree of the sire of such animals. It is possible that the sire may have been an animal of good individuality, yet if the pedigree were examined a streak of poor breeding not very far back would probably be revealed.

MUST HAVE GOOD PEDIGREES.

Often we have come across the reputation of a neighbor who is not a good feeder and scarcely has his animals up to the standard. In his herd we find good individuality, the animals looking good and thrifty and evidently making good money for his sire. It is a good guess that the sire of these cattle had a first class pedigree, showing strong breed character, backed up with easy feeding quality.

It is as much the business of a stock grower to carefully study the pedigree of his animals as it is to study feeds and how best to feed them. We must have a good foundation before we can get the most out of the feed consumed by the animals. To be sure of a good foundation we must have animals of good breeding, which are nothing more or less than animals having good pedigrees.

It is a well known fact among experienced breeders that sometimes there are genuine freaks. By this I mean that there may be an animal of sound individuality, but having a pedigree that is recognized as genetically worthless. In the great majority of cases this animal will prove a dismal failure as a breeder. Sometimes we have the other kind of a freak, an animal of poor individuality but having a good pedigree. If I were compelled to make a choice between the two I would prefer the poor individual with the good pedigree rather than the good individual with the poor pedigree.

It is not, however, necessary for us to use either for breeding purposes, and the use of either one is certainly to be discouraged. By giving the matter our careful attention we can easily buy and use an animal of good individuality with an equally good pedigree. What we want is the animal that will produce the greatest amount of meat, milk or wool for the food consumer. To get this we must not only study the individual, but we must study the pedigree as well. If one is breeding and feeding operations are now satisfactory let him keep them so by going along the same line, only selecting if possible better sires each year. The best and surest way to do this is to study the pedigree. —The Canadian Countryman.

"BELA"

"What can you do?" Mahoeley demanded.
"Any hard work."
"You don't look like one of these here Hercules."
"Try me."

"Lord, man! said Mahoeley.
"Don't you see me here twiddling my thumbs? What for should I hire anybody? To twiddle 'em for me, maybe?"

"You'll have a crowd here soon," persisted Sam. "Four men on their way in to take up land, and others following. There's a surveying gang coming up the river, too."
"Moreover, you ain't got good nose," Mahoeley went on. "Conin' a country like this without an outfit,
I bet much as a chaw of bacon, or a hunk of fat lard over your nose. There a't no free lunch up north, kid.
You'll you do it I don't give you a cent."

"Go to the company," returned Sam.
"Go to the company," cried Mahoeley. "Go to hell, you mean. The company don't hire no tramps. That's military organization, that is. Their are hired and broke in outside."
"Will you do now?"

"I make out somehow," said Sam.
"Here ain't no make out of it!"
Mahoeley, exasperated, said:
"You even got an axe to cut with."
"I nuthin' for you but starve."
"Well, then, I'll bid you good day," said Sam, stiffly.

"Hold on!" shouted the trader. "I ain't done with you yet. Is that manner, when you're askin' for a job?"
"You said you didn't have any-thin' for me," muttered Sam.
"Never mind what I said. I ast you at you were goin' to do."
"I hadgered one began to bristle a do. "What's that to you?" he red, scowling.

"A whole lot!" cried Mahoeley.
"Four fellows have no consideration, out're always comin' up here and arvin' on us. Do you think that's ice for me? Why, the last fellow I a little pile of white bones beside a trail on the way to my girl's house.
After the coyotes picked him clean.
Every time I go there I got to turn my head the other way."

Sam smiled stiffly at Mahoeley's humor.
"Can you cook?" the trader asked.
Sam's heart sank. "So-so," he said.
"Well, I suppose I've got to let you cook for us as long as the sun that's comin'." You'll find everything in the kitchen across the road. Go and get acquainted with it. By gad, you can be thankful you run up against a soft-hearted man like me."

Sam murmured an inquiry concerning wages.
"Agst," roared Mahoeley, with an evil air. "Stiffy, would you look out're askin' for wages? Go on, at you're damned lucky if you get wifful of grub every day. Grub is high up here!"
Sam reflected that it would be well to submit until he learned the real situation in the settlement. "All right," he said, and turned to go.

"Hold on," cried Mahoeley. "You ain't ast me for dinner."
Sam waited for instruction.
"Well, let me see," said Mahoeley.
He tipped a wink in his partner's direction. "What's your fancy, Stiffy?"
"Oh, I leave the mean-you to you, Mahoeley."

"Well, I guess you can give me some patty de foy grass, and squab on toast, and angel cake, and all that sort of thing?"
"Sure," said Sam. "How about a biscuit Tortoni for dessert?"
"Don't you give me no lip!" cried Mahoeley.

CHAPTER XVI.
On the fourth day thereafter the long tedium of existence in the settlement began to be broken in earnest. Before they could digest the flavor of one evening, something else happened. In the forenoon word came down to Stiffy and Mahoeley that the bishop had arrived at the French mission, bringing the sister of the company trader's wife under his care.

The Indian agent and the bachelor had come to the police on the whole party had arrived on horseback from the Tepekwisk Lake district, where they had visited the Indians.
Their boat was tied up down the lake
a short distance.

Before Stiffy and Mahoeley had a chance to see any of these arrivals or hear their news, quite an imposing cavalcade in view across the river from the store, and shouted lustily for the ferry.

There were four wagons, each drawn by a good team, beside him a dozen loose horses. The horses were in condition, the wagons well laden.
The entire outfit had a well-to-do air.
The traders' respect even from across the river. Of the four men, one carried his arm in a sling.

Stiffy and Mahoeley ferried them across by team in the snow they had for the purpose. The four hardy and muscular travellers were met according to the traders' understanding.
They used the same scornful, jocular, profane tongue. Their very names were a recommendation: Big Jack Skinner, black Shand Fraser, Husky Marr, and Young Joe Hagland, the expugnant.

After the horses had been turned out to graze, they all gathered in the store for a gossip. The newcomers talked freely about their journey in the difficulties, avoiding only a few points, and touching very briefly on their meeting with the bishop.
The traders were very much interested. When the six men had sent themselves at the long trestle over with oldcloth, the cook entered with a steaming bowl of rice.

Now, the cook had observed the new arrivals from the kitchen window, and had hardened himself for the meeting, but the travellers were unprepared.
They stared at him, scowling. An odd silence fell on the table.

Mahoeley looked curiously from one to another. "Do you know him?" he demanded.
Big Jack quickly recovered himself.
He leaned the table, and bared his big yellow teeth in a grin.

"On my soul, it's Sammy!" he cried.
"How the hell did he get here?"
"Here's Sammy, boys! What do you know about that? Sammy, the White Slave!"

A huge laugh greeted this sally. Sam set his jaw and doggedly went on bringing in the food.
"How are you, Sam?" asked Jack, with mock solicitude. "Have you recovered from your terrible experience, poor fellow? My! My! That was an awful thing to happen to a good boy!"

Mahoeley, laughing and highly mystified, demanded: "What's the contrab?"
"Ain't you heard the story?" asked Jack, with feigned surprise. "How that poor young boy was carried off by a brutal girl and kept prisoner on an island?"

"Go way!" cried Mahoeley, delighted.
"Honest to God he was!" affirmed Jack.
Joe and Husky not being able to think of any original contributions of wit, rang all the changes on "Sammy, the White Slave!" with fresh bursts of laughter. Shand said nothing. He laughed harshly.

"Who was the girl?" asked Mahoeley.
"Bela Charley!" he exclaimed. The best-looker on the lake! She has the name of a man-later. "How did she say?" said Jack, with a serious air. "But his fatal beauty was too much for her. You got to hand it to him for his looks, boys," he added, calling general attention to the tight-lipped Sam in his apron. "This here guy, Apollo, didn't have much on our Sam."

"A highly-colored version of the story followed. In it Big Jack and his mates figured merely as disinterested onlookers. The teller, stimulated by applause, surpassed himself. They could not contain their mirth.

"Oh, Lord! Oh, Lord!" cried Mahoeley. "This is the richest I ever heard! It will never be forgotten!"
Sam went through with the meal, gritting his teeth, and crushing down the rage that bade fair to suffocate him. He disdained to challenge Jack's equivocal tale. The laughter of one's friends is hard enough to bear sometimes, still, it may be borne with a grin; but when it rings with scarcely concealed hate it stings like whips.

Sam was supposed to sit down at the table with them, but he would sooner have starved. The effort of holding himself in almost finished him.
"Well, finally," he cleared away, Mahoeley said: "Come on and tell us your side now."

"Go to hell!" muttered Sam, and walked out of the back door.
He strode up the road without knowing or caring where he was going.
He was moved merely by the impulse to put distance between him and his tormentors.

Completely and terribly possessed by his rage, as youths are, he felt that it would kill him if he could not do something to fight his way out of the hateful position he was in. But what could he do? He couldn't even sleep out of doors because he lacked a blanket. His poverty had him by the heels.

He came to himself to find that he was staring at the buildings of the company establishment mounted on a little hill. This was a mile from the French outfit. The sight suggested a possible way out of his difficulties.
With an effort he collected his faculties and turned in.

The buildings formed three sides of a square open to a view across the bay. On Sam's left was the big warehouse; on the other side the store faced it, and the trader's house behind a row of neat palings, closed the top.
All the buildings were constructed of squared logs, whitewashed. A lofty flagpole rose from the centre of the little square, with a tiny brass cannon at its base.

Sam saw the trader taking the air on his veranda with two ladies. "The company had secured the contract outside."

When the excitement of the departure died away, Mahoeley for the first time perceived a squat little figure in a blanket capote sitting patiently on the platform in front of the store.
"Musquos!" he exclaimed. "Blest
if I didn't overlook you in the shuffle.
How did you come?"
"Graves bring me in his boat," Musquos answered.
"Come on in."
"I come get trade for my rabbit-skin robe."
"Sure, what'll you have?"
"What you got?"
"Dunno. Take your choice."
"For the observance on both sides of the time-honored rules of bargaining, the matter was concluded, and Musquos made a feast of gathering up his bundles. As a matter of fact, the old man had not yet reached what he had come for.

"What's your hurry?" said Ma-
hoeley.
"I don't want to talk a while."
This was not pure friendliness on the trader's part. He had a particular reason for wishing to cultivate the old Indian.

Musquos allowed himself to be persuaded.
"Where's Bela?" asked Mahoeley.
"Home."
"What's all this talk about her carrying off the cook?"
Musquos shrugged. "Fellas got talk."
"Well, what are the rights of the case?"
"I don't know," he returned, indif-ferently. "I not there. I guess I go see Beattie now."
"Sit down," said Mahoeley. "What do you want to see Beattie for? Why don't you trade with me? Why don't you tell all the Fish-Eaters to come here? They do what you tell them."
"Maybe," said Musquos, "but we always trade with Beattie."
"Time you made a change then.
He thinks he got you clinched."
"Gilbert Beattie my good friend."
"Well, Ain't I your friend, too?"
You don't know me. Have a cigar.
Sit down. What do you want to see
Beattie about in such a rush?"
"I goin' buy team and wagon," said
Musquos.
Mahoeley laughed. "What are you going to do with it? I never heard of you as a driver."
"I sit down," said Mahoeley. "Let me work for me. So I get rich."
This seemed more and more humorous to Mahoeley. "That's the right ticket," he said. "But where will you get the business for your team?"

By way of answer Musquos produced a folded paper from inside the capote. Opening it, Mahoeley read:
"This is to certify that I have awarded the Indian Musquos the contract to freight all my supplies from Grier's Point to my camp on Beaver Bay during summer at twenty-five cents per hundredweight."

(To be continued.)

neat fence, the gravel path, the flower-bed, had a strange look in that country. A keen, unhome-like loneliness attacked the unhappy Sam. As he approached the veranda one of the ladies seemed vaguely familiar. She glided toward him with extended hand.
"Mr. Gladstone," she exclaimed, "So you got here before us. Glad to see you!" In a lower voice she added:
"I wanted to tell you how much I sympathized with you the other day, but I had no chance. So glad you got out of it all right. I knew from the first that you were not to blame."

Sam was much taken aback. He beamed awkwardly. What did the woman want of him? Her over-impressive voice simply confused him. While she detained him, his eyes were seeking the trader.

"Can I speak to you?" he asked.
The other man rose. "Sure!" he said. "Come into the house."
He led the way into an office, and, turning, looked Sam over with a quizical smile. His name was Gilbert Beattie, and he was a tall, lean, black Scotchman, in equal parts good-natured and grim.

"What do I do for you?" he asked.
"Give me a job," replied Sam abruptly. "Anything."
"Aren't you working for the French outfit?"
"For my keep. That will never get me where, I might as well be in slavery."

"Sorry," said Beattie. "This place is run in a different way. The Service, we call it. The young fellows are inductured by the head office and sent to school, so to speak. I can't hire anybody without authority. You should have applied outside."

Sam's lip curled a little. A lot of good it did telling him that now.
"You seem to have made a start all around," Beattie continued, meaning it kindly. "Running away with that girl, or whichever way it was.
That is hardly a recommendation to an employer."

"I want to say my fault!" growled Sam, desperately.
"Come now," said Beattie, smiling.
"You're not going to put it off on the girl, are you?"

Sam bowed, and made his way out of the house. As he returned down the path he saw Miss Mackall leaning on the gatepost, gazing out toward the sinking sun over Beaver Bay. There was no way of avoiding her.

She started slightly as he came behind her, and turned the face of a surprised dreamer. Seeing what it was, she broke into a winning smile.
"Play was lost on Sam, because he was not looking at her."

"It's you!" murmured Miss Mackall. "I had lost myself."
Sam endeavored to slide around the gate. She laid a restraining hand upon it.
"Wait a minute," she said. "I want to speak to you. Oh, it's nothing at all, but I was sorry I had no chance the other day. It seemed to me as if I looked at you standing there alone, that you needed a friend!"

"A friend!"—the word released a spring in Sam's overwrought breast.
For the first time he looked full at her with warm eyes. God knew he needed a friend if ever a young man did.

Miss Mackall, observing the effect of her word, repeated it. "Such a humiliating position for a manly man to be placed in!" she went on.
Sam's heart expanded with gratitude. That was kind of you," he murmured.

It did not occur to him that her personality against the gatepost was carefully studied, that the smile was cloying, and that behind the inviting friendliness of her eyes lay the anxiety of a woman growing old. It was enough for the moment that she was kind, and that the giver seemed beautiful.

"There is a bond between us!" she went on, half coquettish, half serious.
"I felt it from the first moment I saw you. Arriving together as we did, in extraneous and service country, I felt —a delicate shudder here. "You and I are not like these people. We must be friends!"

A humiliated and sore-hearted youth will swallow more than this. Sam lingered by the gate. At the same time, however, within, was a kind of consciousness that it was not very nutritious food.

But it went to the right spot. It renewed his faith in himself a little. It gave him courage to face the night that he knew awaited him in the dormitory.

Events still followed fast at the settlement. Next morning a native came in to Stiffy and Mahoeley with the information that two young boys were coming up the lake in company.
It was enough to make a gala day.
Later came word that the two lads at Grier's Point. This was two miles east.

Owing to the low water in the lake, laden boats could not come closer in.
The supplies for the police boat, with the trader's wife, were landed by Indian agent. (The second carried the government surveyors, six strong, and forty hundredweight of implements and grub.)

Presently the surveyors arrived at the settlement, making a larger party of white men than had ever before gathered on Caribou Lake. The natives were in force also. Seeming to spring from nowhere, they gathered in quite a big crowd outside the store and peered through the windows at their betters.

Within a great gossip was in progress. Especially was the story of Sammy, the White Slave, told and retold, amid uncontrollable laughter.
At dinner, the government land agent, in a body they adjourned to the kitchen in a victim of the tale, according to the way you looked at it.
It was considered that Sam did not take the chaffing in very good part, but they had to confess that he fed them adequately.

As soon afterward as riding horses could be secured, the whole party, excepting the traders, rode off around Beaver Bay. The government land was to be laid off on the other side, and Big Jack and his pals were looking for locations there. As Graves, the chief surveyor, was mounting his horse, Mahoeley said to him casually:
"How about freighting your outfit around?"

"Oh, that's all arranged for,"
he answered.
Mahoeley shrugged, supposing that the company had secured the contract

outside.
When the excitement of the departure died away, Mahoeley for the first

"Well, what are the rights of the case?"
"I don't know," he returned, indif-ferently. "I not there. I guess I go
see Beattie now."

"Sit down," said Mahoeley. "What do you want to see Beattie for? Why don't you trade with me? Why don't you tell all the Fish-Eaters to come here? They do what you tell them."
"Maybe," said Musquos, "but we always trade with Beattie."
"Time you made a change then.
He thinks he got you clinched."
"Gilbert Beattie my good friend."
"Well, Ain't I your friend, too?"
You don't know me. Have a cigar.
Sit down. What do you want to see
Beattie about in such a rush?"
"I goin' buy team and wagon," said
Musquos.
Mahoeley laughed. "What are you going to do with it? I never heard of you as a driver."

"I sit down," said Mahoeley. "Let me work for me. So I get rich."
This seemed more and more humorous to Mahoeley. "That's the right ticket," he said. "But where will you get the business for your team?"

By way of answer Musquos produced a folded paper from inside the capote. Opening it, Mahoeley read:
"This is to certify that I have awarded the Indian Musquos the contract to freight all my supplies from Grier's Point to my camp on Beaver Bay during summer at twenty-five cents per hundredweight."

HARBOR OF GALWAY.
Is Ancient Irish City to Be Rejuvenated?

The announcement that the corporation of Dublin has urged the British Government to create a great harbor at Galway to deal with Canadian and American trade gives rise to the hope that the day is not far distant when the ancient glories of that historic mart may be revived. A war geographically bulletin prepared by the National Geographic Society says:

"Galway is the capital of Galway county, where the River Shannon flows." It is situated on Galway Bay, in a direct line west from Dublin,
2,385 miles from Boston and 2,700 miles from New York. On its remarkable bay, the ancient city of Galway Bay, lying in Ausubia. To-day it contains not more than 15,000 inhabitants, emigration to America having sadly depleted the population.

"In the O'gygia of O'Flaherty," we read: "Gaillean, daughter of lasting Breasail, bathed in the full cold stream, when the bright branch was drowned. For her the River Gaillean is named. And thus we named the town, which has stood on the banks of this small stream from time immemorial. Traditionally known as Ballinsuane, the name Gillinib became in the mouths of the Norman settlers 'Galvir'—hence Galway."

"An attempt to compass a brief space the history of this city of Galway must end in failure. For centuries it was in a ferment of land-robbery, pillage and fanaticism, gargaring description. Centuries before the Christian era the Carthaginians and Romans traded with the descendents of a Celtic people. Tighe speaks of one Partholuan, a Scythian, settling in Ireland some centuries after the flood, and 'dying divided the country into four parts, assigning one to each of his four sons. They were dispossessed by the Celts. The Celts were divided into the Gailleanians. Coe 166. In these partitions the cities of Dublin and Galway were the terminal of one or the other lines of divisions."

"In the ninth century the town suffered from the ravages of the Danes, and for 100 years following 1171 the Burghes, the O'Connors and the O'Plaheries were engaged in a battle-royal for the possession of the surrounding territory, the house of O'Connor being wiped out in 1346.
In 1473 the town was burned. Be-

One always has pleasant memories of a stay at the Walker House.

Between 1851 and 1860 Galway was the scene of religious warfare, and down to 1793 the seat of Protestant and Catholic made living a delightfully exciting time, while the man who died needlessly in his effort to his relatives the legacy of social ostracism. With the advent of the English into Galway at the close of the twelfth century it became an important commercial and military centre, and the Galwegian bachelors of today traces his ancestry back to one of those families embalm in the local verse:

"Athy, Blake, Bodkin, Deane, Dacey, Lynch, Joyce, Kirwan, Martin, Morris, Sherret, French,"
known as the "Tribes of Galway."
"Heley Dutton, writing in 1823, speaks of the ruins of several abbays in the vicinity of Galway, erected between the fifth and thirteenth centuries, which are worth visiting, and because of Spain's ancient commercial relations with this port a trace of Spanish influence may be discovered in some of the old buildings. A traveller of eighty years ago wrote that at every second step I saw something to recall Spain to my recollection—the wide entries and broad stairs of Cadiz and Malaga, but a more recent visitor, W. B. Blake, found few relics of the past, only numerous thistles in this shrunken capital of the west that once traded with all the world and rang with the wit and oaths and commerce of French and Spanish captains. There is still to be seen Lynch castle, with its sculptured monkeys, from the windows which James Lynch Fitz-stephen, Mayor of Galway in 1493, hanged his own son with his own hands for the treacherous murder of a Spanish nobleman on account of jealousy.

"Some three score years ago the plan of establishing a transatlantic line between New York and New York was projected and came so near to realization that at last one ship made the voyage, only to finish disastrously on the rocks at the entrance to the harbor, while another ship destined for that route was burned on the American side. There were ugly rumors afloat at the time that the pilots who took the first ship in had been bribed by rival interests to work her destruction. However that may be, for many years thereafter there was a superstition in Galway that an evil genius was on the lookout to prevent the perfection of this plan.

"But evil geni and superstitions are being blown away by the great European war, and Galway is aroused to the importance of taking her stand in the commercial high-noon of the twentieth century, though perhaps without anticipating that degree of prosperity which in the olden time gave birth to such luxury as to shock the city council into ordaining

"No young man, prelate or otherwise shall wear, gaudy or otherwise, either within or without their garments, nor yet fayne knit stockings, either of silk or other costly wools (nor pant wools)—pant outfits, but be content with showe."

YOUR MENTAL MACHINE.
Shut Off Its Power at Night After a Day's Hard Work.

It is a great thing to learn—to shut off the mental steam when you quit work. What would you think of a factory manager who would leave all of his power turned on at night? The machinery running everywhere, pounding itself to pieces, grinding out its delicate bearings without producing anything?

Many of us do not turn off our mental power after work, we are through producing or creating for the day. We carry our business home, take it to bed with us, think, plan, worry and waste precious energy in all sorts of ways, in superfluous thinking, foolish worrying that produces nothing, fish grinding out the exquisite mental machinery and unites it for the next day's work.

It is a great art to learn to shut off power when through our day's work, so that we can all our mental machinery, refresh our minds and recuperate ourselves, so that we can go to the next day's work completely re-vigorated.

Many men seem to think that they are accomplishing something if they keep their minds at work, but they really accomplish less than nothing because they are wasting precious mental energy, the power for concentration, the vigor, the focusing of the mind, which is imperative for creating purposes.—
Orison Sweet Marden.

Handicapped by His Name.
The handicap of a poet's name was illustrated in the case of Mr. William Wordsworth, who was the eldest survivor of the poet. Mr. Wordsworth was a great scholar and a poet himself of high rank. In his youth he was always refused to publish any of his poetical writings, though the authority as Matthew Arnold, who described one of the sonnets as the finest in the English language—Montreal Star.

CONVEX LENS OF THE EYE.
A Burning Glass That Adjusts the Sight to Varying Distances.

One of the manifold wonders of the human eye is the convex lens with which the focal distances of sight are made instantly and without mental effort. This lens in the eye is a literal "burning glass," as may be shown by the simplest of experiments.
If the person at midday hold a straw against the face of the sun and focus his eyes on the straw, he can look at the straw, with its background of a dazzling sun, and without discomfort. But the moment he looks at the fiery ball of the sun itself subconsciously the lens of the eye consciously to its proper focus, with the result that a "burning" sun spot appears on the retina of the eye, and it is said that few accounts of such looking would burn out the retina as if by fire itself.

In the subconscious adaptability of the eye lens to adjust itself to different distances lies its value to the human sight. The man with a camera adjusts the focus of his lens by dividing them forward and back. The lenses of the human eye, by changing their curvatures, allow of one looking at the print six inches from his nose and in a fraction of a second to look up and away, probably fifty miles to a mountain peak that in an instant is in true camera focus.—

KNOW THE CAR'S LOAD.
Method by Which a Motorist Can Get the Best Tire Service.

"Perhaps the greatest and most important thing a motorist should know about a car is its weight with the average load carried," says an expert.
"When loaded, the weight of his car is in a position to run the motorist so that they not only act as the best shock absorber obtainable, but are fit to offset any injuries which may come from over or under inflation."
"With the weight of the car known when preparing for a trip, which includes passengers it is very easy for the motorist to regulate his tire pressure in the tires so that they will run with the least injury to themselves.
This foresight will also prevent a break in the side walls caused by an overload."
"With the weight of your car, plus the weight of gasoline, water and extra tires, with the weight of the passengers added, you have the total running weight of your car."
"For a quick way of determining what air pressure you will carry in your tires if you have no regular table of inflation the following table is suggested:
"For three-inch tires divide the weight of the load by thirty-two.
"For three and one-half-inch tires divide the weight by forty.
"For four-inch tires divide the weight of the load by forty-eight.
"For four and one-half-inch tires divide the weight of the load by fifty-six.
"For five-inch tires divide the weight of the load by sixty-four.
"For five and one-half-inch tires divide the weight of the load by seventy-two."
"To further illustrate the working out of the above table suppose your car weighed 2,880 pounds and you are using four-inch tires. From the above we find that for four-inch tires the weight of the load should be divided by forty-eight. This will give you sixty pounds. This air pressure, which should be carried in your tires. The tire mileage will be greatly increased if the motorist will regulate his air pressure by the load he carries."

STUDY AND EXERCISE
Overstudy and lack of exercise make thin bloodless children. Study does not thin bloodless children. Study does not usually hurt a child at school unless the student encroach on time that should be spent in out-of-doors exercise. But lack of exercise and over-study is a combination that brings on St. Vitus dance. If you boy or girl at school is thin and pale, listless and has a flat appetite, a flat appetite, a flat appetite, a

A Children's Christmas Story
by Bertha Masters

IT WAS Christmas eve in Durgan's department store, and to the happy children who accompanied their parents to see the glittering lights and the gorgeous Christmas toys the big store was a palace of splendor. But it was not one to poor little Edna Gray, the tired little cashgirl.

This Christmas eve Edna was very sad. She had planned to give her mother a nice Christmas present, and to crown it all she was going to hide the present in one of a pair of new stockings to hang on the chair beside her widowed and sick mother's bed.

A well dressed man and woman smiled at the little girl took a package of gloves to the bundle counter. "She looks like Beatrice," whispered the woman softly, and the man nodded, with a smiling recollection of the little daughter tucked between the sheets at home dreaming of Santa Claus.

"Poor child," he murmured. And when Edna returned with their package he slipped something crisp and green into her little hand. "Merry Christmas!" he laughed as they disappeared in the crowd.

"Oh, thank you!" breathed Edna as she peeked at the bill in her thin hand. "Now I can get mother's dressing sack and stockings and tea and other nice things!"

Full of happiness, she tucked the money away in her pocket and grasped a package handed over the counter by an impatient clerk.

"Cash" took the package, and it dropped from her tired fingers to the floor. She stooped to pick it up, and as she did so her fingers came in contact with a small square leather pocketbook such as men carry. She found a corner of the stairway quite vacant of shoppers, and out there she peeked into the pocketbook. It was crammed with neatly folded bills. Inside was a name stamped in gold letters, "George B. Lawton," with an address below it.

Edna's heart sank as she went back to her work. Of course she must return the pocketbook to its owners, and she suspected it might have been the man who had given the money and wished her a Merry Christmas—the lovely lady with him had called him "George"—and yet if she went to that address she would not have time to buy the things for her mother.

When she was outside the store at the closing hour she found herself in a mist of flying snowflakes. A friendly policeman told her how to reach the address she wanted.

A pretty housemaid opened the door and cried out in alarm when a very cold and bewildered little girl fell in a heap at her feet.

"Why, it's the little cashgirl!" exclaimed Mrs. Lawton, who had followed her husband into the hall.

Edna's hand struggled into her pocket, and she brought out the pocketbook. "I guess it is yours. What time is it, please? Will I have time to get mother's presents?"

Mr. Lawton picked her up in his strong arms and carried her into a beautiful living room, and the maid vanished to fetch a cup of hot broth.

A half hour later the Lawtons took Edna home in a great warm motorcar.

This Christmas Edna will not be a cashgirl in a store. She is in school now, and her future looks bright, thanks to her friends the Lawtons.

A Christmas Favorite

THEY are so new fangled, with their little cranks and springs—
They make a fellow wonder how a boy can run the things—
You mustn't twist 'em that way an' you mustn't jar or shake
For fear you'll jolt their innards or a drivin' wheel will break.

But the jumpin' jack! He will wriggle his knees
An' he'll hump his back just as gay as you please;
An' he don't wind up an' he don't run down,
An' his pants is red an' his coat is brown;
He climbs the stick with a whack-ty-whack-ty,
Hoorah for the brave old jumpin' jack!

He isn't quite so stylish, an' he only costs a dime,
But he is like an' lumber an' keeps busy all the time
A-bobbin' an' a-bobbin' with a caper an' a hop—
A-bobbin' you a thank-you when you jump him to the top.

Ho, the jumpin' jack! He will jiggle and prance,
An' he'll bend his back like he's doin' a dance;
With his arms 'way up an' his legs 'way down,
An' his pointed grin like a circus clown,
He slams around with a whack-ty-whack-ty,
Hoorah for the fine old jumpin' jack!

I reckon I'm old fashioned when it comes to Christmas toys,
But was there any finer thing when you an' me was boys?
Remember him a-grinnin' from your stockin' that-a-way,
All ready to go jumpin' up an' down all Christmas day!

Ho, the jumpin' jack! He would wobble his knees
An' he'd hump his back with astonishin' ease;
He would jump 'way up an' would sit 'way down,
An' he tickled us when he came to town,
He was best of all in old Santa's pack—
Hoorah for the good old jumpin' jack!

Christmas Pie Has Long Family History

HAPPY the Christmas reveler who has a digestion to tackle the Christmas pie. The modern fast-diet in diet is trying to rule out the plum pudding and the mince from the Christmas feast.

Shame on him! Better a night of groaning to the few than a ban on a time honored custom for the many. Lay in a stock of soda mint, pepsin and salt water. Be sporty and take chances on the plummy goody.

First it was old Santa under a ban—a dreary world it would be without Santa Claus—now it is the toothsome Christmas pie bulging with raisins, flaky of crust and redolent of burning brandy.

Truly the modern progressive who lives by rule is akin to the old Puritan to whom the Christmas pie was an abomination savoring of heresy. Indeed the Roundhead had more excuse for his abstinence; it was a test of orthodoxy. He felt his morals would be injured by eating a pie whose savory contents were typical of offerings of the Magi and whose form was often that of a manger.

The Christmas pie is of ancient and honorable lineage, and its name of "mince pie" came centuries later, being given in derision by the Puritans. Are we such weaklings that what our ancestors have thrived on for centuries will slay us in one eating? Surely the stomach specialist, that product of modernity, must have slipped up.

Our grandparents did not eat one measly little slice of the Christmas pie in fear and trembling. Boldly they swallowed huge hunks, not on Christmas day only, but during the entire season of Christmas, unto Twelfth Night. Was it not writ, "As many different houses as thou shalt eat mince pie during Christmas tide so many happy months shalt thou have during the year?"

And they began the mixing of that Christmas pie early and with great ceremony. It was a gala occasion when the plum pudding was to be stirred and each member of the household down to the infant in arms must have a turn at the spoon.

Christmas the Same as Ever.

Christmas time! That man must be a misanthrope indeed in whose breast something like a jovial feeling is not roused—in whose mind some pleasant associations are not awakened—by the recurrence of Christmas. There are people who will tell you that Christmas is not to them what it used to be.

Never heed such dismal reminiscences. . . . Reflect upon your present blessings, of which every man has many; not on your past misfortunes, of which all men have some. . . . Our life is not, but your Christmas may be merry and your new year a happy one.

NED WAYNE kicked his toes against the door.
"Say, mother, can't I go skating?" he asked.
"Not today, son," said Mrs. Wayne. "It is Christmas eve, and I want you to go into the woods and get some laurel and evergreens to trim the house. The servants are all busy with the housework."

"Aw, bother!" whined Ned.
"Dear me, Neddy, that is not a nice spirit to show at Christmas time," sighed his mother, for she was much worried about her little boy's selfish spirit. Ned had a beautiful home and fond parents, but he seemed to love his own way above everything else.

So when finally Ned, sulkily enough, took a hatchet and went toward the woods his mother did not see that he had his skates hidden under his thick overcoat.

When he reached the pond he found all the skaters had gone home, for who wants to skate on Christmas eve when there are so many other delightful things to do?

So Ned took a few turns around the pond, knowing all the time that he was disobeying his mother and feeling very unhappy all the while.

By and by he took off his skates and went to the woods to cut some laurel branches. It was snowing very hard now, and he had to work fast, because by this time it was growing dark in the woods.

At last his arms were full, and he staggered along through the snow trying to find the path, but the snow had covered it up completely.

Ned was lost in the woods on Christmas eve! He began to cry, and the tears froze on his cheeks. Right beside him was a great oak tree, with a hollow trunk. There was a narrow opening in the trunk, and poor, cold, tired, lost Ned squeezed his way through the opening and found it snug and warm inside, with a thick bed of dry leaves. He stopped up the opening with branches of evergreen, and that kept the wind and snow out.

It was very lonesome in the hollow tree. Somewhere an owl was hooting, and again he heard some four-footed animal (perhaps a fox) go pat-patting over the snow. He was not exactly frightened, but it surely was very lonesome.

Sometimes he slept and dreamed of his nice warm home, and he thought of his good, kind parents and how worried they would be, and he resolved never again to disobey them.

After a while he slept and was awakened by the sound of the church bells ringing in the glad Christmas tidings.

Then he heard voices calling his name, and he shouted back, and presently he was in his father's arms.

When Ned woke up on Christmas morning and found all the beautiful gifts that Santa Claus had brought to him he registered a vow that when next Christmas came around he would be worthy of all the blessings that were showered on him.

And his parents always said, "Neddie has never been the same since he spent the night in the hollow tree."

Found All the Beautiful Gifts.
